Rebels Bomb Madrid Areas Again; Forces Nearing City

Residents Prepare for Onslaught From Air; Guns Manned.

Zarzalejo Seized To West of Capital

3 Insurgent Columns Push Into Position for Big Drive.

The Situation Abroad.

Spanish rebel fliers bombed the suburbs of Madrid and warned the capital will be blown to bits if it refuses to surrender.

Britain accused both Russia and Italy of having delivered war materials to Spain.

The Spanish government charged Portugal with killing 40 Spanish sailors in a naval battle off the African coast.

Adolf Hitler announced agreement had been reached toward an Italo-German Fascist front to stand against the rest of Europe.

Dictator Mussolini offered the world "an olive branch growing out of an immense forest of 8,000,000 bayonets," declaring Italy is "an admirable spectacle of calm and discipline" in troubled Europe.

Airports Abandoned.

By the Associated Press.

On Madrid Battlefronts, Oct. 24.—A score of insurgent planes tonight bombed Madrid suburbs.

The exuberant pilots on landing at their bases said the Getafe and Cuatro Vientos airports near Madrid apparently had been abandoned.

No government planes took the air against them, the insurgent airmen said, and from this they deduced that the government aviators had revolted, or that all government planes were being used to convoy fleeing officials out of Madrid.

The besieged citizens of Madrid prepared to combat death from the air. Antiaircraft guns were manned in 24-hour shifts and cellars were cleared.

Madrid newspapers issued warnings, and the Claridad, in bold type, asserted "an onslaught on Madrid is imminent."

Fascist planes might soon attempt to bomb Madrid into submission if surrender offers continued to be spurned by the city's defenders, it was feared.

Town Captured.

The insurgents captured Zarzalejo, 3 miles from their objective, El Escorial, 30 miles west of Madrid.

A dispatch from Lisbon today reported an insurgent aviator, speaking for his comrades, had said:

"I hope that we shall not be forced to bomb Madrid, but if surrender is refused, we will be compelled to blow the beautiful city to bits."

The insurgent advance on Madrid tonight was pushed forward appreciably.

One column was nearing Mostoles, 10 miles southwest of Madrid; another was at Illescas, 13 miles south of the capital, while a third was driving on El Escorial.

With El Escorial taken, the insurgent high command said, the attack could be webbed together by cavalry units and the final assault on Madrid's gates begun.

Britain Brings Charges.

London, Oct. 24 (U.P.).—The British government accused both Russia and Italy today of having delivered large quantities of war materials to Spain.

The British charge apparently was designed to offset Russia's virtual withdrawal from the general non-intervention agreement on the ground that Germany, Italy and Portugal had aided Spanish rebels.

A sub-committee of nine nations representing the full non-intervention committee of 27 nations met at the foreign office today. Ivan Maiski, Soviet ambassador, reiterated Russia's demand that British and French fleets patrol the Portuguese coast to assure neutrality.

Spain Accuses Portgual.

London, Oct. 24 (AP).—Socialist Spain and Fascist Portugal struck at each other today. Portugal broke off diplomatic relations with the war-torn Spanish government and in reply, the Spanish Embassy in London charged Portgual with killing 40 Spanish sailors in a naval battle off the African coast.

Technical Aid Foreseen.

Moscow, Oct. 24 (AP).—Technical aid to the Spanish Madrid government was predicted tonight as the first development of Russia's declaration that she would do as she saw fit in the civil war.

Observers felt this was indicated in appointment of Vladimar Antonoff-Ovseenko as Russian consul at Barcelona, where Spanish President Manuel Azana has estabilshed offices. Antanoff-Ovseenko could act as adviser to the Spanish leaders if they should reorganize the government and military units.

U. S. Embassy Reopened.

Erie G. Wendelin, in charge of the American Embassy in Madrid, reported to the State Department yesterday the embassy had been reopened as a refuge for Americans remaining in Madrid.

The action, he said, was taken in view of the serious military situation and the possibility of disturbances in Madrid.

Highlights in Sports Yesterday

When the smoke cleared on the Nation's football fronts last night, seven major elevens boasting unbeaten and untied records a few hours before were nursing the wounds of defeat. Old Demon Upset was busy, reaching new heights for the season when he revealed a humiliating 26-0 defeat for Notre Dame at the hands of Pittsburgh. Duke tumbled off the wall, nosed out 15-13 by Tennessee; North Carolina U. absorbed a 21-7 licking from Tulane; Purdue found its first defeat a crushing 33-0 blow by Minnesota; Washington's Catholic U. had its hopes shattered, 14-0, by Mississippi; Michigan State tasted its first setback, 13-7, by Marquette and Boston U. joined the defeated as Villanova won, 25-7.

The East's Big Three batted .667, with Yale routing Rutgers, 28-0; Princeton stopping Navy, 7-0, and Harvard bowing to Dartmouth, 26-7.

Fordham grabbed the big intersectional plum in the form of a 7-6 victory over St. Mary's, while Michigan U. downed Columbia, 13-0.

Holy Cross won its eighteenth consecutive game, beating Carnegie Tech, 7-0.

Among the local teams, Georgetown battled U. York U. to a 7-7 tie; Maryland stopped Syracuse, 20-0; Gallaudet lost to William and Mary (Norfolk), 16-15; American U. bowed, 14-7, to Coast Guard while Howard was routed, 25-0, by West Virginia State.

West Virginian Held in Murder Of His Mother

Strangling Laid to 41-Year Old Huntington Man by Detectives.

By the Associated Press.

Huntington, W. Va., Oct. 24.—Detective Lieut. Leslie J. Swann announced tonight arrest of Charles Buffington Baldwin, 41-year-old scion of prominent Huntington families on a warrant charging murder of his mother, Mrs. Juliette Buffington Enslow, found beaten and strangled by her bed a week ago.

Swann said the warrant was obtained on the basis of "new evidence."

Baldwin's father was Charles Baldwin, Mrs. Enslow's first husband, who died more than 20 years ago. Mrs. Enslow was the daughter of the city's first mayor.

At first police announced they believed the wealthy widow had been slain by a burglar. Valuable jewels which she habitually wore were missing.

Swann said Baldwin would not be questioned tonight. The lieutenant would allow no visitors.

Baldwin was a captain in the Army during the World War. Later he was graduated a bachelor of laws from Washington and Lee University. He has been associated with southern West Virginia coal companies. He married the former Hazel Hatfield, daughter of former Governor and former Senator Henry Hatfield. She obtained a divorce and later remarried.

Baldwin has been active in the civic and social life of Huntington. He resided with his mother in the big, old-fashioned dwelling which was erected in the early days of the city.

Isobel Palencia, Spanish Writer, Appointed Envoy

Madrid, Oct. 24 (AP).—Isobel Palencia, Spanish writer and League of Nations delegate who now is in the United States, today was named minister to Sweden. She is the first Spanish woman diplomatic envoy.

The new Spanish Minister is well known here for her lecture activities. Between 1925-28, she toured the United States lecturing on Spanish and popular art, in which she is a specialist. A member of the Permanent Committee for the Protection of Women and Children at Geneva, she has a long history of active work in the social service field.

Senora Palencia, whose mother was Scotch, is the wife of Senor Ceferino Palencia, recently appointed Spanish Charge d'Affaires at Riga, Estonia.

Tugwells Return To New York Home

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—The Rexford Tugwell family residence was re-established today in New York after three years in Washington, where Tugwell is Undersecretary of Agriculture.

Mrs. Tugwell and their two daughters moved into a home on the Hudson, near Columbia University.

Tugwell, a professor of economics at Columbia, was given a leave of absence from the university when he joined the Administration "little cabinet" and last spring the leave was extended to June, 1937.

Prince Georges Bonds-Maker Sued by Autoist

Iannucci Says He Paid $151.70 in Fine, Fees on $11.70 Charge.

While a Maryland grand jury continued its investigation of reputedly corrupt traffic fine and bonding practices in Prince Georges County yesterday, Keystone Automobile Club attorneys, acting in behalf of an alleged victim, filed suit against Elmer Pumphrey, Suitland, Md., bondsman, for $140.

According to an affidavit by Raymond R. Iannucci, 308 Sixth street northwest, plaintiff in the case, the amount represents the difference between $151.70, paid in bond fees and fines following a traffic arrest, and $11.70 which court records show to be the only actual assessment.

Iannucci, according to the affidavit, was arrested near Hyattsville, Md., July 26 and charged with speed exceeding 60 miles an hour. He was arraigned before Justice of the Peace Herbert J. Moffat, it was said, who fixed bond at $1,000.

Policeman Warren Peake, who made the arrest, Iannucci charges, told him he would have to remain in jail overnight unless he could produce $151.70 to cover bond fees and the probable fine. At this point, it was alleged, Judge Moffat interjected: "There is a bondsman right here."

Although Pumphrey agreed to "go his bond," Iannucci contends he was unable to produce the cash and spent the night in jail.

The following morning, a photostatic copy of a receipt filed with the suit shows, $50 was paid as bond fee to Pumphrey. Subsequently, Iannucci charges, Pumphrey informed him the minimum fine would be $101.70. This sum was paid to Pumphrey by the accused man's father, another photostat shows.

Suit against the bondsman is based on court records showing disposition of the case was made by "forfeiture of $11.70 collateral." Records also show, it was said, the defendant was charged with exceeding 45 miles an hour instead of 60.

No record of the bond, other than the $11.70 collateral, is shown in court records, Iannucci's suit contends.

Glancing Bullet Strikes Youth, 15; May Lose Sight

Jack Pearson, 15, of 707 Roxboro Place northwest, was in danger of losing his sight as the result of an accidental rifle shooting yesterday outside a barn near Wheaton, Md.

A bullet, fired by a companion at a cup, hit a rock, broke into fragments, and one of them struck Jack.

The shot was fired by Albert Buckley, 18, of 417 Ingraham street northwest, who with other boys were holding a target practice.

Jack, Albert and three friends met at the barn yesterday to decorate it for Halloween. The friends included Jack Maier, 16, of 522 Varnum street northwest; Robert Shoemaker, 17, of 4142 Seventh street northwest; and Daniel Ostrow, 18, of 1430 Decatur street northwest.

The boys said they were engaged in the decorating when a youth, whose name they did not know, "came along with the rifle, and offered it for target practice."

Board to Set Federal Fund Of D.C. Urged

Fiscal Council Calls for Laws to Create Unit for Yearly Survey.

Roberts Asked to Draft Bill; Colladay Pleads for 25% Ratio.

Drafting of proposed legislation to create a fact-finding commission which would establish annually the amount the Federal Government should contribute to local municipal expenses was called for yesterday by the President's Advisory Council on Fiscal Relations between the National and District Governments.

The commission plan was proposed by People's Counsel William A. Roberts as the council completed two days of public hearings on methods of determining the amount the Federal Government should pay toward maintenance of the city.

J. L. Jacobs, director of the fiscal relations survey, requested Roberts to prepare a bill embodying his ideas and submit it to the council.

Roberts' proposal came after the Citizens' Joint Committee on Fiscal Relations had pleaded vigorously for abandonment of the lump sum Federal contribution principle, contending that its continuance in any form would lead to annual conflict.

Suggests 25 Per Cent.

Edward F. Colladay, vice chairman of the joint committee, surprised the council when he declared the present law, which has been ignored by Congress for the last 12 years, gave the District "too great an advantage" by providing that the Federal Government should pay 40 per cent of local expenses.

"I think it would be fair if the Federal Government paid 25 per cent of the costs of the local government," Colladay said. "A 75-25 ratio, I believe, would be satisfactory for the next ten years."

J. Nelson Anderson, representing the Federation of Business Men's Associations, was the only District taxpayer who contended Congress should abide by the 60-40 ratio, and even he was uncertain.

"From what I hear from Mr. Colladay," he said, "I gather that apparently 40 per cent might be a little bit exorbitant."

William P. Richards, former District Tax Assessor, contended the amount of the Federal contribution should be based upon the percentage of real estate here that is nontaxable because this is the seat of the National Government.

Roberts' plan calls for the creation of a commission on which the District and Federal governments would be represented. The commission would study annually all proposed capital improvements for the District and determine what part of of their costs was excessive, either because of monumental design in keeping with the beauty of the Capital City, or because of demands which would be made upon them as the result of their being at the seat of the National Government.

Services Factor.

The commission also would take into consideration the cost of services the District renders the Federal Government, such as supplying water and police and fire protection.

Then the commission would inform the District Commissioners exactly how much revenue it expected from the National Government.

District Auditor Daniel J. Donovan was emphatic in his opposition to Roberts' plan, contending it would lead to annual disputes over the accuracy and justice of the amount the commission recommended.

Roberts further aroused the interest of the council by declaring that costs of the District Government could be decreased through departmental reorganization. He pointed out that a nine-volume report on reorganization of the District Government was compiled by a committee on which he served with Donovan and former Budget Director Lewis Douglas.

"There was supposed to be a tenth volume containing conclusions and recommendations," Roberts said, "but it was never published because the auditor and the people's counsel could not agree.

"I compiled my own conclusions and recommendations, but because of the political factors involved in the disagreement the Senate District Committee called for the report and carbon copies of it and placed them under seal."

Expects New Study.

Roberts told the committee he was confident Senator William H. King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, will reopen the study of the proposed reorganization of the District government next year.

Peek's Taxes Investigated By Treasury

Bureau Began Inquiry Before Illinois Leader Backed Landon.

Study of Income Levy Held Unrelated to Political Stand.

By Robert C. Albright.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue ordered an investigation into income tax returns of George N. Peek before the one-time AAA administrator announced for Gov. Alf M. Landon, it was learned last night.

Peek, who also served as foreign trade adviser to the President, broke with the New Deal over reciprocal tariff policies. In a radio speech September 28, he announced support of Landon.

Charles T. Russell, acting commissioner of internal revenue, commented only:

"If an inquiry is being made into Mr. Peek's returns, it is purely a routine one."

In another bureau quarter it was said Peek's 1935 returns were sent back to the Springfield, Ill., collection district three months ago, and the case was one among 200,000 to 300,000 subject to routine investigation. Motive of the inquiry was undisclosed.

Reached by wire, Peek said he had "no comment to make at present time" on reports several revenue agents called at his Moline, Ill., office to examine his books two or three days before he declared for Landon. Reports previously had been carried in the press that Peek would support the Republican nominee.

Political Influence Denied.

At the Bureau, it was said that if agents called on Peek before his Landon declaration, it was coincidental. Officials emphasized that political considerations are never permitted to influence bureau routine.

It was explained income tax returns received here for amounts of $25,000 and under, some 1,500,000 in all, are carefully audited.

When questions arise in connection with any of these, they are sent back to the field for investigation, officials said. Returns for more than $25,000 are automatically sent out for inquiry. Returns for less than $5,000 are not handled in the Washington office. Officials declined to say in which of these categories Peek's returns fell.

Ever since Peek resigned as the President's foreign trade advisor and as head of the Export-Import Bank, he has been actively critical of the Adminstration's trade policies and conduct of the AAA. The campaign was hardly under way when his book, "Why Quit Our Own," carried charges trade policies are making America dependent on the world for food and clothing.

Peek conferred with Gov. Landon before the Kansas made his speech assailing reciprocal tariff agreements, which was closely in line with his own views.

Later, in a radio speech under auspices of the Republican National Committee, Peek charged the Administration with having broken its promises to agriculture, and declared, after citing Landon's campaign pledges:

"I believe that Gov. Landon is the kind of a man who keeps his promises; that is his record."

Again in Des Moines, late this week, Peek criticized the agreements, accused the President of breaking promises to farmers, and approved Republican agricultural proposals.

"President Roosevelt stands for the free trade internationalism of Geneva and the international bankers," Peek said in Des Moines.

Praises Landon Stand.

"Gov. Landon stands for free agriculture with the farmer the lord of his own land * * * and the spirit and traditions of the Constitution. For me there is but one course. I am for Landon."

Early this year the Treasury formally charged John J. Rascob, close friend of Al Smith, and former chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and Pierre S. du Pont, of the Wilmington munitions family, entered into an agreement in 1929 to establish "fictitious losses" on the stock market for income tax purposes. Both are members of the Liberty League, highly critical of the New Deal.

Later the Treasury replied to Raskob's appeal from a $15,978 deficiency tax assessment by billing him for an additional $1,026,340.40 on "unreported income" in 1929. The Treas-

First Age Colony Opened by WPA, New Jersey Town

Millville, N. J., Oct. 24 (AP).—The Nation's first old-age colony was dedicated today by its builders, the City of Millville and the Works Progress Administration.

Thirteen trim white cottages, tiny but complete, circling about a community house, comprised the colony. The bungalows were built to rent for $5 to $7 a month, each with a little garden and a chicken house, so that the occupants might be financially independent on old-age pensions.

Millville already is talking of erecting additional houses. Applications for quarters far exceed the facilities.

Known as Roosevelt Park, the colony was built on land provided by the city. The WPA made a grant of $30,169 to cover the cost of materials and labor. "Moving day" probably will be next week.

Roosevelt's Acts Invite War, Landon Charges; Offers Peace Program

Political Developments

The wind-up week of the 1936 election campaign, opening today, finds both Presidential candidates ready to conclude their battle for votes in the heavily populated East.

Gov. Alf M. Landon last night attacked the President's foreign policies in an address at Indianapolis, Ind. He charged the President tried to put the United States in the forefront of "sanctionist" powers against Italy, a step that he said threatened to involve this country in any war that might have resulted.

President Roosevelt canceled a week-end Potomac cruise in order to work on the nine speeches he will deliver in the final seven days of the campaign.

Al Smith continued his attack on the Administration in a broadcast address at Pittsburgh assailing Government competition with private business.

Gov. Landon scheduled a public alk at Mount Royal station in Baltimore at 10:45 a. m., tomorrow, on his way to Philadelphia.

The Democratic National Committee reported expenditures that brought its total for the period between June 1 and October 21 to $2,333,236 as compared with G. O. P. spending of $3,161,617 in the same period.

Ordering of an investigation into income tax returns of George N. Peek, former trade adviser to the President but now a New Deal critic, was revealed. Officials termed it routine.

A survey by the Associated Press indicated a record registration of 55,427,000 voters in the country, with a probable total vote of 45,473,000.

Indiana Gives Him A Colorful Ovation

75,000 Hear Address; Kansan Will Talk in Baltimore Tomorrow.

Text of Gov. Landon's Address—Page 17.

Indianapolis, Oct. 24 (AP).—A dual program for promoting world peace and protection against war was proposed by Gov. Alf M. Landon tonight in an address contending President Roosevelt's policies a year ago made "probable" United States entanglement in a foreign conflict.

"Only last year he overrode the neutrality legislation he himself had sponsored," the Republican nominee said of his Democratic opponent's steps during the Italo-Ethiopian conflict:

"He attempted to put the United States in the forefront of the sanctionist powers against Italy. His action made it probable that if war had come we would have been involved."

Gov. Landon today scheduled a talk at Baltimore, Md., for Monday morning.

Feted, cheered and lauded for 10 daylight hours the Kansan was given his greatest ovation in the Coliseum here tonight.

The demonstration when he stepped to the platform lasted five minutes and only was stopped by appeal for quiet so the Governor could swing into his address.

He was introduced by George A. Ball, of Muncie, Republican National Committeeman, as "a man who would not be influenced by any foreign doctrines." That statement sent the crowd into a frenzy of cheering.

Shows No Fatigue.

The Governor showed no fatigue, although he had shaken hands with hundreds of persons, conferred with State party leaders, ridden in a parade for 20 minutes and then stood in the outdoors for two hours watching the procession which included live elephants, pigs, floats, drum corps, bands and several thousand automobiles.

The Kansas Governor, smiling and bowing as his automobile moved through lanes 20 persons deep in some places, was cheered by what police said was the biggest crowd in several years for a parade here of any kind.

Police Chief Michael Morrisey estimated the crowd within the mile square at 75,000. Members of Gov. Landon's party said the turnout was he largest accorded him during the campaign.

Fourteen live elephants, more than a dozen drum corps, numerous bands, floats and more than a thousand automobiles participated in the parade, which required several hours to pass through downtown Indianapolis.

Some boos were mingled with the cheers, especially in the colored district, where Roosevelt posters and cardboard roosters were flaunted. Gov. Landon took the boos with the same smile he accepted the plaudits.

Program Tabulated.

The Kansan gave as his program "to avert war throughout the world:

Promote mediation first, and then arbitration.

Restoration of "international confidence in the good faith of the American government" which he said had been "shattered by the contradictions of the present Administration."

Co-operation "in the reduction of armaments."

Assist in "lowering world-wide

New Deal Brake Upon Recovery, Smith Declares

Competition With Business Charged in Pittsburgh Address.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 24.—Alfred E. Smith, former Democratic candidate for President, tonight assailed the New Deal for "competition with private business."

He declared the Roosevelt Administration had "thrown the platform plank on business out the window" and had "retarded recovery" by its regulations.

He also struck at the NRA, declaring that according to the ruling of the Supreme Court voiding NRA "this Democratic Administration brushed aside one of the precepts of the Constitution, States' rights."

Twice in the early part of his speech, there were minor disturbances when hecklers started shouting from the floor. The two hecklers were quickly ejected. The audience arose and booed the two men as police hustled them to the door.

When the second one started heckling, Smith stopped his speech for a moment and said:

"Never mind him. He's probably celebrating Pittsburgh's victory on the gridiron."

Auditorium Jammed.

Smith spoke in Duquesne Garden before a crowd which filled all the auditorium's 11,000 seats. Persons who could not find seats jammed the aisles.

As in his New York and Chicago speeches, the former New York Governor urged the election of Gov. Alf M. Landon, the Republican Presidential candidate.

Referring to the "economic planning" of Rexford G. Tugwell, head of the Resettlement Administration, said:

"Let Tugwell go over to Russia with this plan. We don't want it in this country. We can get along without it. * * * We want an American plan. And that can be accomplished by the election of Gov. Landon."

He mentioned President Roosevelt's assertion that a "small handful" was opposing the masses of people and said:

"If he knows any small group of men in the United States today who are trying to grind down the plain people, then I'm with him to go after them.

"He must know who they are because he's talked enough about them."

Smith said the purpose of the speeches he has been making against the Roosevelt Administration was "to prove that the men in charge of the New Deal in Washington are not Democrats."

"And furthermore," he added, "that they have stolen a little of the Democratic Party and used it for promotion of every crackpot

Roosevelt Vote Bid Called Aim Of Howard Talk

Capital Colored Paper Says Dedication of Building 'Smacks of Politics.'

Dedication by the President tomorrow of Howard University's new chemistry building yesterday was called "a political bid for the Negro vote" by the Washington Tribune, only colored newspaper published in the Capital.

An editorial appearing on the front page of the Tribune said President Roosevelt's proposed visit to Howard "smacks so much of politics until it takes away the finer significance which otherwise would apply to it."

President Roosevelt meanwhile passed yesterday preparing what attaches called a "non-political" talk to be given at Howard. He also worked on rough drafts of other major addresses he will deliver in Pennsylvania and New York Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Another "non-political talk" will be made at fiftieth anniversary ceremonies for the Statue of Liberty Wednesday afternoon in New York Harbor.

Prepares Speech.

Posing a number of questions it said "Candidate" Roosevelt should answer at Howard, the Washington Tribune editorial said "this will be an opportunity to clinch thousands of votes."

"Of course, the President will have his eye on the South in whatever he says," the Tribune stated. "But the South has only about 116 electoral votes. It takes 266 electoral votes to elect a President. Therefore he must look to the North and West for 150 electoral votes, more than the South can guarantee him.

"He is making a bid for this 150 votes in the States where Negroes are registered and will have their say on November 3. There are seven or eight States where Negroes can throw a close election. New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Missouri. These States have 202 electoral votes. Are they not worth something to Candidate Roosevelt?"

Roosevelt in Lead.

A "voteless" poll of colored persons here published by the Tribune in the same issue showed Roosevelt leading Landon, 2,976 to 2,731. A special national canvass among the colored recently by the American Institute of Public Opinion showed Roosevelt leading Landon by a ratio of 89 to 31.

Both President Roosevelt and Secretary of Interior Ickes will speak at dedicatory exercises at 4:30 p. m. for the $626,000 new Chemistry building erected by PWA. PWA also has allotted funds for a $555,000 new men's dormitory at Howard, and an $800,000 library.

34 to Win Post Election Prizes; Entries Close Friday Midnight

When millions of Americans have gone to the polls on November 3 to select the occupant of the White House for the next four years—

When the tumult and the shouting of the 1936 Presidential election have died and the country has gone back to work—

When the last alibi is in and the last losing officeholder is out—

At least 34 individuals will be quite satisfied with what the election has brought them.

One will be the man or woman, boy or girl who receives first prize—a check for $500—in The Washington Post's 1936 Presidential Poll Predictions Contest.

Not quite as satisfied and happy—but feeling fairly spry about it just the same—will be the second prize winner, with a check for $200.

And so on, right down through the list of 34 award winners, capturing cash prizes that total $1,000.

If you haven't already entered the contest, do so today. Read the rules and regulations of the contest carefully. Clip the coupon found on Page 9 in Section 3 of today's Washington Post. Indicate which candidate—President Roosevelt or Gov. Landon—you believe will win. Indicate also, the States you believe your winning candidate will carry.

Then write a letter of 250 words or less telling how you arrived at your prediction. Mail your letter

Simpson Divorce Likely to Be Heard Tuesday; Bobbies Rehearse Arrival of King's Friend

By the Associated Press.

Ipswich, England, Oct. 24.—Bewigged Justice Sir John Anthony Hawke today opened the session of court which will hear the divorce suit of Mrs. Ernest "Wallie" Simpson, friend of King Edward.

All indications were, however, the suit would not come up until Tuesday, as there were a few criminal cases to be cleared up first.

The townspeople were treated today to a preview of what they might expect when Mrs. Simpson, former Baltimore debutante, comes to court to press charges of her husband's misconduct, only ground for divorce under British law.

Ipswich folk gaped today at a strange demonstration of constables escorting an imaginary person through crowds of curious and into court.

An automobile raced to the court building. Two hefty constables leaped off, swinging truncheons.

Deftly they went through the pantomime of helping some one from the car and making way for him or her through the crowd.

Such, it was indicated, would be the police courtesy extended Mrs. Simpson.

First, however, Justice Hawke must hear several cases involving alleged breaking and entering, and poaching of rabbits.

Then, according to custom, divorce suits would be heard. Mrs. Simpson's heads a schedule of six.

Varied Traffic Signs Blamed On Officialdom

Enforcement Agencies Even Contribute to Hazards, Survey Reveals.

District officials, charged with enforcing local motoring laws and maintaining highway signs and markers, are actually contributing additional hazards to the already burdened problem of traffic control, a survey of Washington streets revealed yesterday.

During recent safety and law enforcement drives, motorists have been warned strictly to observe regulations. But, according to findings yesterday, little or no efforts have been made to promote safe driving by providing adequate and uniform highway markers.

Confusing to Drivers.

Under District laws, penalties are provided for violating printed regulations on "official signs." Yesterday's survey disclosed the following hazards:

Battered "Stop!" signs, blurred and illegible, line the streets. Some are tall, some are short. The motorist is confused by lack of uniform markers. Many of the short signs are twisted, bent and even uprooted. Several of the taller ones are obscured by tree limbs.

Out at Fifth and Decatur streets northwest—an intersection where children pass daily—a blur of red and yellow paint on a weather-beaten piece of tin answers for a "Stop!" sign. And there are many in similar condition throughout that section.

At Fourth street and Illinois avenue northwest, a sign in good condition has been ripped from the ground and is leaning against a tree—facing the wrong way. Residents of the community said it had been that way for several months. The intersection is dangerous. Yet drivers fail to stop because there is no sign visible.

Responsibility Admitted.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer admitted that his department was responsible for maintenance of these signs. But the Police Department, he said, should report these conditions.

"We fix those worn-out signs when we have the money and personnel—and we haven't much of either right now," said Van Duzer.

But a citizen near Fifth and Webster streets northwest had something different to say:

"A little paint and a little time is all that it takes to correct the situation."

And one of the city's worst traffic hazards is permitted to exist at Dupont Circle under the watchful eyes of a uniformed policeman. District regulations require all autos to drive to the right around circles. But street cars are routed against oncoming traffic at Dupont Circle and officials say:

"What can we do about it?"

During rush hours, police radio cars are frequently dispatched to unsnarl "a traffic jam at Dupont Circle." Pedestrians and motorists alike are endangered by the bewildering maze of street cars and autos. Complaints and civic demands have done nothing toward improving conditions.

One Way for Half Block.

At Eighteenth and H streets northwest, drivers traveling south on Eighteenth street are suddenly confronted with a one-way street in front of the Powhatan Hotel. Warning signs are difficult to see at night, and many motorists are traveling on a one-way street before they realize what has happened. Eighteenth street, for this half a block, was made one way to relieve traffic congestion at Pennsylvania avenue, officials explained.

It is a difficult task, motorists agree, to obey all District traffic regulations and still drive safely.

Meanwhile the Department of Vehicles and Traffic has described Washington drivers as "among the poorest in the country."

A series of safety, tests, installed at the department last week, have revealed local motorists as far below par in driving ability as compared with other major cities throughout the country, officials declared.

Since the equipment was installed, a total of 595 drivers have been tested, it was reported. Of these, 445 were applicants for driving permits. The balance were drivers of long experience.

"Sentence" For Motor Cars.

According to an official of the Aetna Co., who is conducting the tests, Washington drivers are below average in steering ability. The majority fail to react quickly in emergencies, it was reported, and others are unable to keep their cars in a straight line. One out of five of those tested so far fail in judging distances. This type of driver, according to officials, is a menace to highway safety.

A new method of punishing traffic law offenders was suggested by Capt. Milton D. Smith, commander of the Police Traffic Division.

Instead of sentencing the offender, Capt. Smith suggested, why not sentence the automobile? In Chicago, he pointed out, a judge recently ordered the autos of all convicted violators impounded for various periods.

At present, convicted motorists in the District face suspension of the driving permits. Authorities, however, have no assurance these violators do not continue to operate autos. By impounding the cars, Capt. Smith said, the offenders are less likely to drive during the suspension period.

12 Children Die in Crash.

Yokohama, Japan, Oct. 24 (AP).—Twelve children, crammed in the sidecar of a motorcycle after begging a ride, were killed today when the machine crashed into a trolley car. The driver also was killed.

Traffic Hazards—Made to Order

Post Staff Photos.

Symbols of false protection, battered and worn stop signs line Washington streets. A group of carefree school children (above) dart across a dangerous intersection—Fifth and Decatur streets northwest—while an illegible warning sign offers little protection. Another sign, bent almost double (right), stands at Rock Creek Church road and Illinois avenue northwest.

The Campaign Arena

Milwaukee, Oct. 24 (AP).—Edward J. Samp, chairman of the State Republican executive committee, asked a Federal investigation today into charges by Alexander Wiley, Republican candidate for Governor, that Gov. Philip F. La Follette was using a $300,000 Federal fund "to build a political machine to perpetuate the La Follette machine in power."

Samp asserted some of the "destitute persons are Progressive political workers and Progressive candidates for the State Legislature."

The Governor, in Milwaukee last night, denied there was any mention of "relief of the destitute" in the terms of the Federal grant to Wisconsin, as Wiley had charged.

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—Emanuel Gorfine, speaker of the Maryland House of Delegates and State chairman of the National Council of Roosevelt Electors, informed Democratic headquarters today, "There isn't any doubt that Maryland will give President Roosevelt a splendid majority."

The entire membership of the Polish-American Club of Baltimore was named to membership in the electors' organization by National Chairman James A. Farley. Mrs. E. Barrett Prettyman and Mrs. James Peacock, also of Baltimore, were approved as local chairmen.

• • • •

Sioux City, Iowa, Oct. 24 (AP).—Representative William Lemke, Union Party Presidential candidate, charged today that Department of Agriculture officials "are still on a mad orgy of destroying and restricting the production of the essentials of life."

At a union party meeting, the North Dakota Congressman said:

"There is an overproduction of just one thing, and that is an overproduction of ignoramuses. We are afflicted at Washington at present with a cruel and un-American type of national insanity—the kind of mental condition that will permit the destruction and curtailment of food and clothing while we still have millions who could use that food and that clothing."

• • • •

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—The Democratic National Committee made public tonight a letter sent to Secretary of State Cordell Hull by Thomas A. Morgan, chairman of the board of Curtiss-Wright Corporation, expressing appreciation of the Administration's foreign trade policies.

"The reciprocal trade agreements that you are responsible for are, in my opinion, the only basis for a reasonably stable and constructive foreign trade policy," Morgan wrote.

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—Communist campaign headquarters tonight announced Chairman William Z. Foster would speak in Detroit Tuesday in behalf of the party's Presidential candidate, Earl Browder. It will be Foster's first speech in the present campaign. He will deliver a second speech in Chicago on election eve.

Indiana Park, Pa., Oct. 24 (AP).—Senator Guffey (Democrat), Pennsylvania, in a campaign speech here tonight said one of his first acts in the next Congress would be introduction of a new bill to regulate the bituminous coal industry, which he said he was certain would "have the sympathy and support of President Roosevelt."

Referring to the coal law which the Supreme Court held Unconstitutional, Guffey said it was "bitterly fought by the railroads, the public utilities, the steel companies, and by other men who now are loudest in their praise of Gov. Landon and who are using every means in their power to secure his election."

• • • •

Newark, N. J., Oct. 24 (AP).—Secretary Perkins told an audience here tonight that "more progress has been made in the past three years in bringing equality of opportunity than in any like period since the Declaration of Independence."

Speaking under the auspices of the Good Neighbor League, of New Jersey, the Labor Department chief said:

"Factory pay rolls alone were $70,000,000 greater weekly in the first quarter of this year than they were in the corresponding period of 1933. Outside of private industry some 3,000,000 men and women are engaged in useful work provided or assisted by Government."

• • • •

Chicago, Oct. 24 (AP).—The Republican National Committee asserted in a statement today that the United States ranks thirteenth among the nations in recovery from the depression and that "this goes to show again that the New Deal has retarded such recovery."

• • • •

Philadelphia, Oct. 24 (AP).—Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State under President Wilson, said tonight President Roosevelt was "afraid" to let the record of his Administration "speak for itself."

In a speech prepared for delivery at the Metropolitan Opera House, he said President Roosevelt was giving the Nation "the unedifying spectacle" of "frenzied and reckless appeals to the prejudices, the hates and the ignorance of every man or group that has a vote."

• • • •

Detroit, Oct. 24 (AP).—The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin asserted tonight that "America is preparing to extend money or credit as she did before to England and France for the conduct of impending bloodshed."

In a radio address he said that soon the drums will beat; soon the bugles will blow, summoning the flower of American youth, in the name of patriotism, to defend in 1937 or 1938 the same international bankers whom we sustained in 1917 and 1918."

He charged the monetary agreement among this country, France and Great Britain meant that America had consented to pay $35 an ounce for imported gold purchased with "printing-press money manufactured at less than $35 a ton."

He further asserted that "Mr. Roosevelt, who desires our entrance into this international banker-dominated body, is taking us down a back alley into the League of Nations and into the world war which is inevitable."

Her Child, Drunk, Mother Is Jailed

Viola Taylor, colored, 53, who was arrested Thursday as she sat on the curb in the 1200 block of Staples street northeast, with her 5-year-old daughter, paralyzed from intoxication, in her lap, was sentenced yesterday to 120 days in jail.

Judge Robert E. Mattingly imposed sentence on charges of being drunk and disorderly and scolded the woman.

Policeman R. P. Livermore, of the Ninth Precinct, said he arrested the woman when he observed her small daughter sprawled on her lap. He said the child was unconscious and when taken to Gallinger Hospital physicians there diagnosed the ailment as "acute alcoholism."

Maritime Unit Demands Data On Strike Talk

Calls on Coast Negotiation Committee to Explain Its Intentions.

By the Associated Press.

Taking the position that the Pacific Coast Union's joint negotiating committee had failed to answer its inquiry of Friday satisfactorily, the maritime commission late yesterday again asked the committee for an expression of its intentions.

The commission Friday wired the negotiating committee that it understood longshoremen on the Coast were planning to strike despite the fact that the commission was conducting an inquiry into the labor dispute there and had asked that the situation remain in status quo.

F. M. Kelly, secretary of the negotiating committee, replied they had explained to Admiral Harry G. Hamlet, maritime commission representative, that ship owners had offered concessions to one union and not to others involved in negotiations. Kelly described this offer as "useless."

The commission telegraphed Kelly yesterday:

"The Maritime Commission has made no offer to anyone and cannot control form of offers made by ship owners. The Maritime Commission renews the request contained in its telegram of October 23 and wishes to impress upon you its desire for an immediate reply. The commission is determined to carry out a full, complete and impartial investigation. It is one thing to carry on an investigation in a peaceful atmosphere. It is another matter with a strike on. The commission desires to know which conditions will confront it so it may prepare accordingly."

San Francisco, Oct. 24 (AP).—The Pacific Coast watched apprehensively over the week-end the approach of another waterfront strike crisis while a half dozen Government representatives went hopefully on with peacemaking efforts.

An eleventh-hour proposal of Eastern and foreign shipowners to increase longshoremen's wages brightened the immediate picture.

At stake for the unions were wages, hours and working conditions of 37,000 maritime and waterfront men.

The current truce ends tomorrow.

Glass Union Calls Pittsburgh Strike

Pittsburgh, Oct. 24 (AP).—Glenn S. McCabe, president of the Federation of Flat Glass Workers, said today he had called a strike of about 6,000 union members in six plants of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. to start at midnight tonight.

He declared that the company refused a "closed shop" or an alternate proposal under which the union would be given preference in employment and could seek members in the plants without interference.

McCabe said the demand for a 10-cent a hour wage increase had not been directly discussed, but a request for an "adjustment to conform with scales paid by other companies" had been denied.

Riot Closes School.

Lwow, Poland, Oct. 24 (AP).—Anti-Semitic riots in which four Jewish students were injured seriously led to the temporary closing of the University of Lwow Polytechnic School today.

New Mark Is Made By Burlington Zephyr

Denver, Oct. 24 (AP).—The Burlington Railroad's new streamlined Zephyr, arriving here at 6:12 p. m. (mountain standard time), established a new record of 12 hours 12 minutes 27 seconds for the run from Chicago.

The previous record was 13 hours 5 minutes, set by the original Zephyr in 1934. The Zephyr averaged 84.4 miles an hour on the 1,034-mile run.

Sunday Brings Pause in Cares Of Maxwell Family on Farm

Edith and Her Family Will Don Holiday Best for Meeting.

By Eward T. Folliard,
A Staff Correspondent.

Drewry's Bluff, Va., Oct. 24.—Tomorrow will be a comparative day of rest for the Maxwell family—"comparative" because, with chickens and livestock to feed and water, there can be no such thing as complete rest on a 45-acre farm.

But once the essential chores are done, Edith Maxwell, her mother, brother and two sisters will put on their Sunday best and go to church.

The little Methodist chapel they attend is 2 miles from the farm. She has expressed her gratitude to those people all over the world who have written to her to say that they were praying for her to be freed in her second trial for the "slipper" slaying of her father. The letters have come from all of the 38 States and 13 foreign countries.

Trial November 16.

Whether prayers of these correspondents are to be answered will be known some time next month. Edith's second trial is scheduled in circuit court at Wise, Va., November 16.

Her father, Trigg Maxwell, died the night of July 21, 1935, in the Maxwell home in The Pound, a crossroads hamlet high in the Cumberland Mountains, an hour after he made a drunken attack on Edith for staying out late, and Edith, in desperation, struck back at him with a slipper.

Edith was arrested just after his death, and she was to remain in jail for 14 months.

In her first trial, a jury of mountaineers found her guilty of first-degree murder and she was sentenced to 25 years in the penitentiary. Harshness of that sentence made the name of the "Lonesome Pine" girl known all over the globe.

Readers of The Washington Post, aroused by the punishment decreed for the 28-year-old school teacher, contributed $1,000 to finance a fight for a new trial and Charles Henry Smith, brilliant Alexandria lawyer, was enlisted by The Post to conduct the fight.

New Trial Granted.

That particular round was won a few weeks ago when the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals held the verdict was not justified by the evidence. That meant a new trial.

Post readers now are contributing to a second fund to defray cost of printing, calling of expert witnesses and other items involved in the trial.

The Maxwell family is "broke."

Edith, after 14 months in jail, recently was freed in $6,000 bond, pending her forthcoming trial. Her brother, Earl, gave up a traveling salesman's job to fight for her.

Recently Mrs. Anne Maxwell, their sad-faced mother, and the two younger girls—Anne Ruth, 16, and Mary Catherine, 13—gave up their mountain home in The Pound. Now the entire family is reunited on the farm, near here, where they are working as tenant farmers.

EDITH MAXWELL.

Enclosed find—as a contribution to the Edith Maxwell Defense Fund to be used by The Washington Post in her retrial.

Half-Million Bombs For Spain Are Seized

Lyon, France, Oct. 24 (AP).—Police, raiding a Lyon factory owner's home, today found half a million incendiary bombs which they said were destined for Barcelona, Spain.

Andre Christophe, 40, was arrested. The officers said he told them 100,000 of the bombs already had been delivered in Barcelona, which is supporting the Spanish government.

Girl, 22, Burned In Row in Home, Is Near Death

Victim Set Afire as Mother Hurled Gasoline at Husband in Quarrel.

Critically burned when gasoline thrown by her mother exploded over a stove, 20-year-old Dorothy Fenwick was near death in Gallinger Hospital last night.

Meanwhile, her mother, Mrs. Mattie Martha Bray, 43, of the 400 block of K street northwest, where the accident occurred last Sunday, was sentenced to pay a $100 fine or spend 180 days in jail on an intoxication charge by Judge Robert E. Mattingly. She was committed to jail in default of the fine.

Police said the prisoner threw the oil jar at her husband during an argument.

Miss Fenwick, who was cooking breakfast, was burned over the upper portion of her body by the gasoline which struck the stove and ignited. Physicians at Gallinger said her condition was extremely grave, and held out but little hopes for her life.

Oil Firm Denies Hiring Srikebreaker Crews

St. Louis, Oct. 24 (AP). — R. C. Jopling, director of public relations for the Phillips Petroleum Co., denied tonight assertions of striking union workmen that strike breakers, arms and ammunition had been taken into the company's East St. Louis, Ill., plant.

Jopling denied also that permission to inspect the plant had been refused Leonard Bajork, regional director of the National Labor Relations Board, and David Shaw, attorney for the board. He said an invitation to make the inspection was sent them today.

Board to Fix Federal Share For D. C. Urged

Fiscal Council Calls for Plan to Create Unit for Yearly Survey.

economy reasons, Roberts said, "has encouraged the lazy habit of failing to give details on the cost of government here."

C. A. Dykstra, city manager of Cincinnati and a member of the advisory council, expressed amazement when Roberts told him there were 15,000 employes on the District pay roll. When Donovan said there is a pressing need for 150 additional policemen to supplement the 1,385 now on duty, Dykstra said:

"Those seem like astronomical figures to me."

But George McAneny, of New York, chairman of the council, retorted:

"The figures seem microscopic when you count the police in New York."

Donovan emphasized that the Federal Government imposes a heavy burden on the District police force and that large numbers of officers are required to protect functions at the embassies here. No other city, Donovan pointed out, has so many parades as Washington.

Painting a dark picture of the condition of the District Treasury, Donovan pointed out that the city faces a deficit of between three and seven and a half million dollars next year unless taxes or the Federal contribution are increased substantially. Under the bare subsistence budget drafted by the Commissioners, Donovan said, a deficit of $3,000,000 would be accumulated. Under a secondary budget calling for appropriations totaling $48,000,000 the deficit would be $7,500,000.

Suggests Minimum.

Pointing out that the secondary budget calls for Capital improvements totaling only $4,500,000, Donovan said:

"It is our opinion that minimum expenditures for any one year should be $8,500,000."

Colladay pointed out that under a 75-25 fiscal relations arrangement the Federal Government would contribute $12,000,000 toward the proposed 1938 budget.

Colladay argued for a percentage formula on the ground that partnerships in business usually are established on that basis.

"The District and Federal Governments are partners in the business of maintaining the Capital City," Colladay said.

McAneny questioned Donovan closely about large surpluses the District accumulated in former years and asked if they were the result of a "gentleman's agreement." He indicated he thought Congress might have forced the accumulation of funds for capital improvements and in that way felt it was contributing toward the city's development. Donovan denied there had ever been a "gentleman's agreement."

William McK. Clayton, veteran civic leader, told the council Congress does not want a change in the present system of dealing with the District because under it Senators and Representatives are able to exert "pull" to obtain improvement of highways and sidewalks near property they own.

Clayton assailed patronage in the District Building, declaring: "It is almost impossible to secure the appointment of a District resident to a District job."

Roberts contended that the Civil Service agreement under which District employes supposedly are selected "works just when you don't want to appoint someone."

Clayton pleaded for local suffrage, contending that under the present arrangement many District citizens have lost interest in their local government and "don't know how it works."

"I believe if we could vote and control the collection and disbursement of our taxes the cost of the local government would be reduced and we would have a better government," Clayton said.

At the conclusion of the hearings McAneny asked Colladay to appoint a committee of three to serve as a liaison between District taxpayers and the council.

Colladay pleaded for a committee of five, pointing out that he would be confronted by "personalities" in its selection.

Five-Point Plan Offered to End Child Problem

Proposed Measures Would Give Unfortunates New Chance to Make Good.

This is the tenth and last of a series of articles on Washington's antiquated system of handling juvenile problems.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

While the States, one by one, join the march of progress in passing up-to-date laws for child care, the District of Columbia lags behind, meeting its juvenile problems in a manner that was highly acceptable a quarter of a century ago, but is no more in keeping with present trends than the horse and buggy or the hobble skirt.

Washington welfare workers, long realizing that the Capital is woefully behind other parts of the country in its legislation for juveniles, have worked tirelessly to bring into effect new laws and amend old ones so that illegitimates, delinquents and dependents might have the protection and the opportunity every child deserves.

Yet, in most cases, antiquated legislation still stands, permitting daily traffic in babies, branding illegitimates and delinquents, leaving dependents inadequately cared for, and making no provision to supervise neglected children in their homes or to provide relief when necessary to prevent homes from being broken.

Remedies Discussed.

What, exactly, should be done to give these children a new deal? What measures should be taken to protect the baby born out of wedlock; the delinquent boy or girl? What legal provisions should be made for the child whose parents are either unwilling or unable to fulfill their duties toward him?

In answer to all these questions, local welfare agencies are at present sponsoring a five-point plan of legal changes to meet juvenile problems as follows:

1. A new adoption law to replace the one that was framed more than a generation ago and that provides little protection either to the child, its natural parents or its foster parents. The new law would prevent adoption proceedings before the child is 6 months old; would require adequate court investigation of all persons concerned in the transaction; and would provide for a trial period of adoption for at least a year.

2. A new birth registration law, to replace the present 30-year-old one that offers no protection to illegitimates and frequently gives them no personal birth record at all. The proposed law provides for a proof-of-age certificate, giving no information except the name and date of birth, for every child; and confidential but complete records of each illegitimate birth, to be revealed only on court order to the child, his parents or guardian, or to proper public authorities.

It provides further that changes shall be made on birth certificates when a child is legitimatized through marriage of its parents; or when the child is adopted; and that foundlings shall be registered with as much identifying information as can be obtained.

3. A new illegitimacy law, to replace the one which has been in effect in the District since 1912, and which deals with children born out of wedlock on a penal rather than a social welfare basis. The proposed law would keep the child of unmarried parents from becoming a public charge by requiring the father to share in supporting his off-spring, would eliminate "scarlet-letter implications" of the old law, and would provide care for needy unmarried mothers during confinement.

4. A new juvenile court law, to replace the one passed in 1906. The proposed law would change the juvenile court from a criminal tribunal to a court of chancery, dealing with delinquents as nearly as possible in the spirit of a wise parent toward an erring child. This bill, sponsored by the League of Women Voters, is indorsed by more than 70 welfare agencies.

5. Amendments to the welfare law. These were recommended in the recent report of the child-welfare division to the Board of Public Welfare.

They would provide:

Authority to investigate the family circumstances of children reported as destitute or neglected.

Supervision in the child's own home and relief if necessary to prevent disorganization of the home.

Authority to assume custody and provide support for any destitute child who cannot be properly cared for in his own home with the consent of parents or guardians. (There are many instances of parents being temporarily unable to carry their responsibility for whom the court room hearing is an added ordeal. At present, cases come within the scope of the child-welfare division only when they are committed to this agency by the court.)

Authority to provide for or plan for children born out of wedlock, to see that they have proper care, to give pre-natal care to unmarried mothers. (These powers and duties would be given to the Board of Public Welfare in the proposed illegitimacy law, already discussed, which is sponsored by the Social Hygiene Society.)

If any of these proposed laws could be passed, Washington welfare workers believe the juvenile situation here would be vastly improved. If all were passed, these authorities are convinced the Capital could consider itself at last in line with the rest of the country in a modern, humane approach to the problem caring for its delinquent and dependent juveniles.

Troupers' Play Named Winner In City Tourney

Community Center Group Stages Comedy in Finals of Competition.

"The Flattering Word," George Kelly's comedy produced by the Troupers of East Washington Community Center, was the unanimous decision of the judges last evening as the finals of the 1936 One-Act Play Tournament were conducted at Theodore Roosevelt High School.

Chairman Nelson B. Bell, dramatic editor of The Washington Post, announced the judges' decision. The other judges were The Washington Daily News' Don Craig, The Evening Star's F. J. Carmody, The Washington Times' James W. Baine, and The Washington Heralds' Betty Hynes.

Arthur Rhodes directed the winning play, the cast of which included, besides the director, Geraldine Wells, Patricia Paige, Ethel Selby and William Milton.

Before the announcement of the final results, Preliminary Judge Denis E. Connell presented to Larry Lawrence, of the Langley Lambs, the Maud Howell Smith Medal for the finest single performance of the entire tournament. This is the first time the medal has been awarded.

The other plays competing for the final prize money which was donated by the newspapers of the city, were Paul Green's "Fixins" by the angley ambs, Patricia Brown's "Gloria Mundi," by the Jewish Community Center Theater, and George O. Riggs and Mannix Walker's "Not Tonight," by the Players of the American Association of University Women.

The Washington Civic Symphony Orchestra, under direction of Samuel Page Ford, offered a musical program between plays and during the judges' period of deliberation.

Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Katherine O'Brien; two sons, Joseph T. and Dr. Edward M. O'Brien, and two sisters, Mrs. Ellen Sullivan and Mrs. Mary E. Sullivan, all of Washington.

G.O.P. Requests Landon Funds Of State Police

Letters Sent to Maryland Officers; 'Benefits' Under Nice's Rule Cited.

As the campus and halls of the University of Maryland buzzed with comment about the fund-soliciting letter sent faculty members and other employes by the Maryland Democratic State central committee, it was learned last night that the State police had been asked to contribute to the campaign for the election of Gov. Alf M. Landon.

Salaries of Maryland's State police have been increased considerably under the administration of Republican Gov. Nice, who advocates the election to the Presidency of Gov. Landon.

Even as echoes of the Roosevelt vote fund solicitation increased in university circles, it was revealed that individual letters had been sent by the Nice group to officers of the force, asking each to take the matter up with his men.

Thus patrolmen of the State police were asked by their superiors to contribute at least $3 to the Republican State central committee.

Deadline for these contributions was yesterday. In one case an officer requested to defer his contribution until pay day. He was told, it was reported, that it would not be acceptable, so another member of the force put up the money for him.

"The police have had an opportunity to express their appreciation for the benefits they have received under the Republican Administration, that's all," said Maj. Enoch B. Garey, superintendent of the Maryland State Police.

He added:

"Whether or not one single man has contributed, I don't know."

In addition to increasing the minimum pay for the police from $89 to $125 a month, the administration of Gov. Nice has increased the force by 25 members and raised the ranks of many men.

Meanwhile, more than a score of University of Maryland faculty members, interviewed yesterday in connection with the Democratic request denied charges of "coercion."

The concensus among the educators was, however, that the Democrats had made a "strategical blunder" because of the tone of the letter, which emphasized the improvements that had been made at the university under the Roosevelt Administration, citing these as a reason why there should be "a keen interest in the re-election of the President."

Harvey Casbarian, university comptroller, described the receipt in the same mail of an income-tax form addressed to a number of employes as "an unfortunate coincidence."

He went on to explain that he had sent a list of faculty members, receiving their salaries, in whole or in part, from the Federal Government, to Collector of Internal Revenue M. Hampton Magruder, several months ago.

Confusion resulted because only the initials of the employes were used, he said, and this necessitated a re-checking of the salary lists.

The letter and the income-tax form, received coincident with the Democratic Party's plea, was to clear up this confusion, he said.

Maternity Derby Entrants Face Legal Entanglements

Millar Heirs Consider Suit to Break Will; Canadian Premier Threatens to Intervene; Mrs. Kenny Blasts Plan to Split Prize.

Toronto, Ontario, Oct. 24.—Entrants in the Toronto "maternity marathon" which ends a week from today, found the home stretch clogged tonight with all sorts of legal entanglements.

Attempts to break the will of Charles Vance Millar, eccentric sportsman who bequeathed his $750,000 estate to the Toronto mother who should produce the most babies in the ten years after his death, intervention by the Ontario government, and a battle over proposals to split the prize among the leaders all appeared in prospect.

Ahead of the field and standing pat on her apparent lead with a refusal to "split the money with anyone" if she wins, was the diminutive Mrs. Matthew Kenny, who says 12 of her children were born since Millar's death October 31, 1926. Mrs. Kenny said she might add another to her record before the deadline.

Included in the last-minute scramble for Millar's fortune which appeared likely to confuse the issue of the race were relatives of the sportsman scattered throughout the United States and Canada.

The prospect of an attorney's fight over the money led Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn, who called the marathon "the most revolting exhibition ever put on in a civilized country," to consider governmental intervention in behalf of "these poor mothers and their babies."

The mothers and their claims, besides Mrs. Kenny, are Mrs. Pauline Mae Clark, Mrs. Arthur H. Timleck and Mrs. John Nagle, 10 children each, and Mrs. Gus Graziano, Mrs. James Meldrum, Mrs. Ambrose Harrison, Mrs. Annie Smith and Mrs. Grace Magnato, all with 9. Mrs. Bagnato awaits the birth of another child, which she expects before Saturday.

Fete Is Concluded At Charles Town

Charles Town, W. Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—Thousands of persons from Charles Town and nearby communities stood for an hour and a half Friday under threatening skies to watch a parade that concluded Charles Town's sesquicentennial celebration. The parade and a football game, in which the high school team of Hagerstown, defeated Charles Town High, 13 to 0, were the outstanding events.

Parade judges announced but two awards after the long trek of the marchers. They awarded the Charles Town High School's Junior Drum and Bugle Corps $150 for its appearance, and gave an award of $100 to the Martinsburg High School.

The parade climaxed a two-day celebration which centered around the presentation of a pageant last night.

Nation Devotes Current Week To Aid of Deaf

League of Hard of Hearing Receives Note of Praise From President.

Washington and the Nation will observe National Hearing Week starting tomorrow, under auspices of the American Society for the Hard of Hearing.

So interested in the work in behalf of those persons throughout the country handicapped by deafness is President Roosevelt that he has given the occasion his indorsement.

"Your organization came into being for the sole purpose of focusing public attention upon the widespread prevalence of hearing impairments and the serious handicaps resulting from these handicaps," said his letter to the society.

"The observance of National Hearing week will, I believe, prove of vital importance in drawing together the good will, constructive thought and positive action of all those individuals and agencies concerned with the general welfare of our Nation in a concerted effort for the conservation of hearing."

The Washington League for the Hard of Hearing will maintain an information center at its club rooms, 1116 Vermont avenue, throughout the week.

An open meeting will be held in Barker Hall of the Y. W. C. A. Wednesday at 8 p. m. Principal speakers will be Dr. Joseph A. Murphy, director of medical inspection in the district schools, and Miss Ada Morgan Hill, whose subject will be "Along Broader Highways."

A new $555,000 power plant recently was put in operation.

The Tribune said the President tomorrow should make plain "just what the Negro may expect in responding to his clarion call for Negro support."

"Since President Roosevelt is to dedicate the new building, will Candidate Roosevelt tell why his Administration does not admit the graduates of this chemistry department of Howard University to enter the chemistry research laboratories of the Bureau of Standards?" the editorial asked.

"Will Candidate Roosevelt, if reelected, place enough appraisal upon the graduates from this very building to admit them into the various departments where chemistry is needed, in his next administration?

"Will the President tell the students in this building what his position is toward the lynching of these boys or their brothers throughout the country?

"Will the President tell these students why he does not demand the ballot for their 9,000,000 brothers and sisters in the South?"

The Tribune also asked why the President did not issue an executive order "abolishing segregation and discriminatory practices" in the departments? Why a colored member was not appointed to the District Board of Commissioners or the Civil Service Commission, and why no colored children suffering from infantile paralysis are admitted to the Warm Springs institution? It asked why the Ninth and Tenth Regiments of Cavalry and the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry Regiments of colored troops were not restored to combat strength, why colored men were not appointed to the Army Air Corps and why they were refused admittance to the Navy?

"Will the President tell the boys why his Administration has only given about 150 Negroes Government jobs out of more than 100,000 persons placed since he has been in office?" the editorial also asked.

ury brief, filed with the board of tax appeals, closely paralleled its answer to a similar appeal from Du Pont.

In reply, Raskob accused "high Administration officials" of "tyranny and cheap politics." Bureau spokesmen reiterated yesterday "politics" did not enter into the Raskob case.

Peek Renews Assault.

Kansas City, Oct. 24 (AP).—George N. Peek, former AAA administrator, said in a campaign speech today the Administration is attempting to regiment farmers "under guise of soil conservation."

The former Roosevelt advisor also told a Republican rally the Hull reciprocal tariff program was without "beneficial effects" to the farmer and asserted the Administration's domestic farm program was unsound.

"Henry Wallace," he said, "is deep in his dream of transforming the United States into a sort of glorified department of agriculture, with himself and President Roosevelt in the respective roles of Joseph and Pharoah, ruling as dictators. * * *

"The Administration's farm policy is an attempt to regiment American farmers into a collectivized agriculture controlled by Washington and dedicated to the uneconomic and unconstitutional doctrine of production control.

"Its foreign trade policy is an unsanctioned and uneconomic program of general tariff reduction, effected through star chamber procedure and thinly camouflaged by scattered commercial concessions from a handful of nations."

and the coupon, or a facsimile, properly filled out, to the Contest Editor so that your entry will be postmarked or in his hands not later than midnight, Friday, October 30.

Prize winners will be announced and awards distributed as soon after that date as possible.

Name: The Washington Post's 1936 America Speaks Presidential Poll Contest.

Purpose: To encourage interest and study on the part of the public in methods of measuring public opinion on important national issues.

Requirements: Each contestant must write a letter of 250 words or less, describing his, or her, method and material used, between now and October 30, in arriving at predictions on:

1. The winner of the Presidential election; 2. The States carried by the winning candidate. Contest letters, on the merits of which prizes will be awarded, must be accompanied by the contestant's predictions, indicated on the Presidential Poll Prediction Form printed on this page, or on a facsimile of that form drawn by the contestant. (Letters will not be judged on the basis of literary merit—but, rather, on the clearness, conciseness and simplicity of the contestant's explanation of the method and the material used in arriving at his, or her, predictions. The letter of a 15-year-old schoolboy or girl — which tells, briefly and clearly, how he, or she, arrived at conclusions as to which candidate would win and which States he would carry — will be judged on an equal basis with that of a political expert.

Rules: 1. It is not necessary that contestants be subscribers to The Washington Post. (Copies of America Speaks polls, special articles on election trends in various parts of the country and other similar material of assistance to the contestant, may be obtained at The Washington Post Building, in The Post library, or in copies of The Post on file at the various public libraries.)

2. All contest entries must be in by midnight, Friday, October 30, 1936. (All contest letters, accompanied by Presidential Poll Prediction Forms, must be received at The Washington Post Building, E street at Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, D. C., by that time, or in mailed envelopes postmarked previous to that time.)

3. All persons are eligible to enter the contest, with the exception of employes of The Washington Post and employes of the American Institute of Public Opinion.

4. Each contestant may submit only one entry.

5. The Washington Post will be the sole judge in awarding the 34 cash prizes, totaling $1,000.

6. Winners will be announced as soon as possible after official results of the election are known and the winners of first, second, third and fourth prizes must call in person at The Washington Post to receive their awards. Checks will be mailed to the other 30 winners.

Prizes: First, $500; second, $200; third, $100; fourth, $50; fifth prize to thirty-fourth prize, $5.00 each.

Police Seize 3 Picketing WPA In Pay Protest

Hopkins' Aid Is Unable to Placate Delegation of Workers Alliance.

Admitting that unemployment in America is still growing, Aubrey Williams, WPA deputy administrator, late yesterday walked out on a delegation of 400 Workers Alliance members without giving them an answer as to what the Administration plans to do about the problem.

After a brief battle with police, the Workers, made up of WPA employes from all parts of the country, gained two of their objectives of the day—conferences with Administration leaders—but received no reply to their demands. These included!

A minimum wage of $40 a month and assurance that the Federal government will continue its aid to the 10,000,000 unemployed.

First rebuffed at the gates of the White House, where they had gone seeking an audience with President Roosevelt, the delegation was picketing WPA headquarters, when police arrested three of their leaders for marching without a permit. David Lasser, president; Herbert Benjamin, organization secretary, and John Kelly, Pennsylvania organizer.

Two Arrested.

Kelly, slugged by a policeman, was taken to the Third Precinct station and charged with resisting arrest. Lasser and Benjamin entered a patrol wagon quietly.

Gardner Jackson, former AAA official and confidant of President Roosevelt, was ordered to 'move on' by police although he protested he had "a perfect right to walk on New York avenue." As secretary of the Civil Liberties Union he posted $25 bail for Lasser and Benjamin and $10 for Kelly. All three will defend their cases Tuesday.

While Jackson was trying to persuade Marvin McIntyre, secretary to the President, to see the delegation, Lasser instructed his marchers to move from the White House to the WPA Building. Here the workers charged. Patrolman William J. Dubusky ordered Lasser to "get back out of here." Lasser, Gardner and Benjamin protested but the officer interrupted them, and seized Lasser. Other police joined him and the melee began. A traffic officer, bystanders said, slugged Kelly as he led him across the street while the wrestling and struggling continued.

After the trio were taken away, picketing was resumed, with a score of policemen standing by. Capt. A. E. Miller counseled the officers not to make any more arrests.

Later a committee of 25 went into the WPA building and began a "sit-down" strike.

Lasser and Benjamin, just out of jail, were received at the White House by McIntyre, who told them he would lay their five points before President Roosevelt.

Interview Williams.

Returning to the WPA building, the workers obtained an audience with Aubrey Williams, where Lasser informed Williams he (Lasser) knew 25,000 WPA workers were to be fired between November 15 and December 15.

This Williams denied, saying if it were so he had not heard about it. On the demands for a $40 minimum per month, he replied that it was out of the question. Regarding their right to organize, he read them an official memorandum, written but not yet mailed, granting them that privilege. On the much-criticized order "No. 44," which docks workers for time lost because of bad weather, he said he was "working it out, but it may take until Christmas."

Order No. 44 was one of the main points of the Alliance's attack, since it means, they said, that WPA employes, in regions where winter makes outside work impossible, would be without a dole or relief work all winter.

Relief Cuts Charged.

Charging that the Administration was cutting its relief budget, and that of 4,000,000 heads of families certified as eligible for relief only 2,250,000 were on WPA rolls budget, Benjamin said:

"We admit there is a noticeable pickup in industry, but the rate of re-employment is not proportionate. In fact, unemployment is getting worse in the face of this so-called recovery."

Williams nodded his head, and said, "Yes, we know all those things to be true. We are taking men off WPA at the rate of 3 per cent a month. And thousands are without means of sustenance now who were earning a little bit before. But it is all a question of money with us. We just haven't got enough. We're practically out of funds now. If you gentlemen have a grievance in that direction, you will have to take it up with Congress."

After the conference with Williams, the group adopted a five-point program for continuation of their campaign, including a proposed "mass hunger march" on the Capitol next January or February "if conditions become more acute and remain unrelieved."

50 Test Questions for Neurotics Revamped to Suit Washingtonians

By Sidney Olson.

If you are neurotic, or live in Washington, or both, the new book by Dr. Louis E. Bisch, "Be Glad You're Neurotic," won't do you any good.

This conclusion was inevitably reached last night by this reporter after an intensive one-day survey of neurotic conditions in Washington.

If you remember, Dr. Bisch's book came out Thursday. It's the newest craze already, and is guaranteed to fill as many padded cells as "knock-knock" and "handies" did.

Much of it consists of 50 questions, which the victim has to answer truthfully. If you answer "yes" to only 15 questions or less, you are normal. If you answer "yes" to 30 of the questions you are unquestionably neurotic. If you answer "yes" to more than that, some men in white coats back a wagon up to the front gate and haul you away.

The questions are dandies. Probably the toughest one to say "no" to is: "Do you frequently make errors or do things you consider foolish?" Anyone who says "no" to that one a—well, a big fibber-bibber.

Floored By Questions.

Dr. Bisch's questions get you right on the mat, and then pin you. But there is one grave fault to find with them. They are not locally applicable.

For instance, Washington neurotics are not like the neurotics of other cities. Ask your doctor. Better, ask any Republican first, and then you can ask your doctor while you're having your ear pumped out.

The idea in this questionnaire is not to answer "yes" to as few questions as you can, but to see if you can answer them at all. If you can, please write in, as nobody in the office right now knows the answers.

The test:

1. Do you know what to do when you are trying to cross the street and the traffic lights show two red bulbs and two green arrows pointing in opposite directions?

2. Have you ever (honest, now) gone faster than 22 miles per hour on a District street? (There is only one answer to this question.)

3. Do you shovel the snow off your walks in winter; or do you scatter ashes on the accumulated ice; or do you sit on the front porch and die laughing as pedestrians go boom? (Check one.)

4. How much time daily do you spend in standing in lines (a) for restaurant seats at mealtimes (b) in the postoffice, banks, internal revenue bureau, auto license bureau, etc. (c) for theater seats (d) in street cars?

5. Have you ever been able to get a taxicab during a rain? (If you did, wire, don't write, and tell us how.)

6. Can you keep from catching your shoes in the street-car track-switches at big intersections?

How About Directions?

7. Can you find your way around in (a) the Commerce Building (b) the Postoffice Building (c) Washington?

8. Do you know what happens to H street after it crosses Pennsylvania avenue?

9. What does the name "One-Half Street" do to you?

10. Do you wince easily as, for instance, (a) when the street car company, the power company, the telephone company and the street department have torn up a street half-a-dozen times during the summer, and then they tear it up again to lay sewers (b) when a park policeman suddenly peeks into your car at Hains Point and just looks at you (c) when your approach shot, dead to the pin, hits a rubber hose on the green and bounces into a sand-trap?

11. Have you ever counted the number of different architectural styles inside and out of the Congressional Library? What are you going to do about it?

Parking Bobs Up.

12. What do you think of motorists who use up two parking spaces when they park their cars? (Keep this in 300 words, if you can.)

13. Do you believe in fresh air in buses?

14. Whatever became of the Civil Service?

15. What do you do with old street-car transfers?

fore reading this list, are you now?

This fragmentary list merely shows you that Dr. Bisch hasn't even scratched the surface. There are forces working in Washington to make citizens neurotic that he hasn't plumbed at all. Nobody has, until now. Maybe it's better that way.

November Vote Of 45,473,000 Hinted by Lists

Registrations Indicate a Record Ballot, Showing Gain of 16 Per Cent.

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press.

An analysis of the large registration increases being reported in practically every section indicated yesterday a possible record Presidential vote of about 45,473,000. The 1932 vote was slightly below 40,000,000.

Eligible voters may approximate 55,427,000. A comparison of the equivalent total four years ago with the actual vote cast showed that from 15 to 20 per cent of those qualified did not vote. In some States of the normally Democratic South the figure ran as high as 50 per cent. This was considered in the analysis.

States primarily used as a basis for the compilation are California, Montana, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Georgia, Maryland, Nevada and Washington. These are among the areas reporting official lists before the election. In each a record registration has taken place, averaging a 16 per cent increase to date.

'Home State' Figures.

The home States of President Roosevelt and Gov. Landon are among the many where record votes are indicated. As against less than 4,754,000 in 1932, the New York total may exceed 5,530,000. Some Kansas officials have estimated an 800,000 total there this year; but application of the national averages to that State—where interest is reported abnormally high—raised it to a possible 892,000. The last Presidential vote in Kansas was 791,978.

Breakdowns indicated increases in populous centers exceed those in rural areas. In New York State, a tabulation of 27 cities reflected a 20 per cent jump. The State increase was brought down to 15 per cent by rural figures.

New York City registration alone totals almost 2,900,000, or more than 500,000 over 1932. A 17 per cent increase in Chicago put the total over 1,800,000, making possible a vote approaching 4,000,000 in the State or 500,000 more than in the Roosevelt-Hoover contest.

San Francisco reported an increase of 89,000 in major party listings for a 316,000 total; Los Angeles an increase of 96,000 for a 794,000 total. The St. Louis figure rose 42,000 to almost 430,000. An increase of more than 50,000 in Boston made a 356,000 total.

Philadelphia and Pittsburgh accounted principally for the Pennsylvania registration increase of approximately 500,000. The latest counts showed more than 942,000 with the major parties in Philadelphia, against less than 640,000 in 1932; and 316,000 in Pittsburgh against 164,000.

Democratic and Republican leaders have disputed the significance of the increases. Some contend such a growth of political interest signifies dissatisfaction with the party in power, while others hold that people who seldom vote are taking a special interest this year in supporting the Administration.

Cross Ventilation Avoids Dampness

Cross ventilation should be provided for the space inclosed by foundation walls, whether it is excavated or not. If no provision is made for air circulation within the inclosed space next to the ground, dampness accumulates and excess moisture can seriously damage structural members. Openings for the admission of air help to prevent these difficulties and increase the life of the structure.

The total area of such openings should not be less than 7 per cent of the ground area inclosed. These openings should be screened tightly so that rats or mice will not find easy access into the space.

Stair Rail Advised.

Few basement stairs have handrails, while all other stairs, both exterior and interior, are considered incomplete without them. A white wooden handrailing of proper height should be added. This will help to prevent many accidents and will make the many daily trips to the basement far easier.

Mrs. Woodring Opens Exhibit Of Girl Scouts

War Secretary's Wife Ushers In National Week of Organization.

Mrs. Harry Woodring, wife of the Secretary of War, opened National Girl Scout Week yesterday when she visited the National Girl Scouts' Little House to view the exhibit of arts and crafts, the feature of the week-long observance.

Mrs. Woodring was received by Mrs. Henry H. Flather, chairman of the National Little House Committee, Mrs. Frederick Brooke, Mrs. B. F. Cheatham, national board members, and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, commissioner of the District of Columbia Girl Scouts. As she viewed the hundreds of handmade items, arranged on tables and hung on the walls of two floors at the house, Mrs. Woodring was accompanied by members of the board, who explained that the exhibit is the result of projects carried out by a number of local "group work" organizations, which are members of the Washington Council of Social Agencies.

"In having an exhibit such as this, we wanted to see what is being done in the line of handicraft in the District," said Miss Jacquelin Smith, chairman of arrangements of the arts and crafts display.

"The wide variety of items sent in indicates that boys and girls do enjoy making things by hand, even in this machine age. Each part of the display, too, shows some special feat of ingenuity in making the most of available materials. Most organizations are equipped with a limited number of facilities, and therefore specialize in one or two types of handicraft. The purpose of having the exhibit is to give an opportunity for interchange of ideas between groups interested in handiwork projects."

A number of Washington organizations are represented in the exhibit, which will be open to the public through Saturday, from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. each day. Rugs, scarfs, dresses, clothes-pin baskets, pictures, ship models, wood carvings, party favors, dolls, trays, leather jackets, pottery and bags were contributed by the following organizations:

The Girl Scouts, Boys' Club of Washington, Boy Scouts of America, Phyllis Wheatley Y. W. C. A., Twelfth street branch Y. M. C. A., G street branch Y. M. C. A., Friendship House Association, Juanita K. Nye Council House, Y. W. C. A., Southwest Community House, St. Gertrude's School of Arts and Crafts.

Mrs. Woodring Opens Scout Week

The charming wife of Harry Woodring, Secretary of War, yesterday helped the Girls Scouts of America open their official week. She is shown at the Exhibition of Arts and Crafts at Scout headquarters with Ruth Haverstock, 14, of Troop 56.

3 Lilliputian-Size Dwellings Go on Exhibit as Scout Benefit

Work of Mrs. Roger Marsden and E. A. Maginnis Loaned to Girls' Troop for Display Tomorrow in Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church.

When Mrs. Roger Marsden, of 6305 Broad Branch road, Chevy Chase, was a little girl, she wanted a doll house. As a child, she never had one. As a woman, with children of her own, she has three—not doll houses exactly, but miniature dwellings, built to scale and complete in every detail. Two are of stone, and one is of wood; and all are the beautiful results of fine craftsmanship and skill at designing on the part of Mrs. Marsden and E. A. Maginnis, mechanical engineer.

The largest of these Lilliputian structures is French provincial in style and has 14 rooms, including a complete electric kitchen; a studio living room with a beamed ceiling, a stone fireplace with brass andirons, overstuffed chairs and a sofa, and a piano that plays; bedrooms with "mahogany" chests, dressers and four-poster beds, covered with little coverlets, and clothes closets equipped with wire hangers.

Though smaller than the tiny mansion just described, the "Cape Cod cottage" is equally as attractive with its white stone facade, fitted out appropriately with green shutters, and its electrically-lighted interior decorated with handmade furniture (including a "grandfather clock" in the dining room) and hand-quilted coverlets for the beds.

The third little house is a simple farm home, built of wood, and completely fitted out with a chicken house, pig pen, wood pile and a well with an old oaken bucket that descends from a pulley "that really works." This miniature dwelling, like the others, is furnished in keeping with its type. Also, like the others, it stands on a platform that is "landscaped" just as it should be.

These three Lilliputian lodgings will be exhibited tomorrow from 3:00 p. m. to 10 p. m. at the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church for the benefit of Girl Scout Troop 104. Proceeds will be used to buy crafts materials for members of the troop.

Handcuffed Victim Of Robbery Ignored

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—Passersby on a downtown street today ignored a man wearing handcuffs, which he held up appealingly and clanked, meanwhile mumbling from behind a gag.

They thought it was a practical joke.

At last curiosity overcame a woman pedestrian, who called the police.

The man, Leo Markowitz, of Brooklyn, told the police two armed men had held him up in the wholesale store where he works, and had driven off with $12,000 worth of woolen cloth.

Big Halloween Parade Planned By Committee

Bliss Urges Early Filing of Entries; Interest High in Queen Contest.

With hundreds of costumed marchers and eight bands already signed up and 15 huge inflated figures as a novel feature, the Halloween celebration tis year will be the most spectacular since the affair was started six years ago, the Greater National Capital Committee announced yesterday.

Deadline on entries for the parade is Friday. Col. E. Goring Bliss, chairman of the ceebration, urges those interested to send in their applications as soon as possible.

Entries show the District playgrounds to be the best represented group in the parade. Boys and girls from the city's 30 playgrounds are making their own floats and costumes.

Considerable interest centers on the contest for Halloween Queen, entries for which close tomorrow.

Entrants to date in the queen contest include Miss Ruth Adams, Miss Mary Jane Keely, Miss Evelyn Alberts, Miss Marguerite Coulbourne, Miss Elizabeth Smallman, Miss Marie Hunt, Miss Marion Goshorn, Miss Wilma Campbell, Miss Esther Norton, Miss Myrtle Mae Johns, Miss Kay Anthony, Miss Ada Dameron, Miss Ann Dvorak and Miss Gladys Hendricks.

Acceptances of invitations to attend the celebration have been received from 10 mayors and officials of nearby towns.

Robert E. Graham, vice chairman of the distinguished guests subcommittee, said the following will attend: Mayor E. C. Davison, Alexandria; Frank C. Hanrahan, Arlington County manager; Mayor Wedding, Riverdale, Md.; Mayor Edward Saunders, Kensington, Md.; Mayor H. T. Willis, Rockville; Mayor R. R. Farr, Fairfax, Va.; Mayor W. E. Steele, Capitol Heights, Md.; Harry Morris, Marlboro, Md.; Paul Coughlin, commissioner, Silver Spring, Md., and W. I. Cleveland, president, Montgomery County Civic Federation.

D. C. Cyclists to Face Baltimoreans Today

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 24.—Washington cycling stars are scheduled to invade the Clifton Park Lake track tomorrow afternoon for a dual meet with Baltimore's best riders.

The chief prize will be a trophy that must be won three times before a city can claim permanent possession. It is in competition for the first time, with four races, at 1, 5, 10 and 15 miles deciding its initial holder.

SEC Reveals Stock Market Members Deals

Trading on Own Accounts Shown in First of Weekly Reports.

For the first time the public will be able to watch operations of stock exchange members on the markets, and see to what extent trading of shares is influenced by sales and purchases of those operators.

In a report in a field never comprehensively studied heretofore, the Securities and Exchange Commission this week embarked on a program which may end with complete revision of exchange regulations throughout the Nation.

The report showed one-fifth of the trading on the New York Stock and Curb exchanges was conducted by exchange members on their own account during the six months ended September 26.

SEC Chairman James M. Landis, in a press conference yesterday at which the report was released, said similiar disclosure will be made weekly from now on. Thus the public can decide for itself on the desirability of segregating brokers and dealers, a theory advocated in Congress at the time disclosures were made of great profits to those with "inside information" during transactions.

Previous SEC recommendations in regard to segregation of brokers and dealers, held that in floor trading the members trading for their own account enjoy certain strong competitive advantages over the general public.

The SEC found in its six months study of the New York Stock and Curb exchanges, which do 95 per cent of the business, that members of the former made 21.01 per cent of all transactions for their own account, while members of the latter made 19.99 per cent of all transactions on their own account.

Stock Exchange members purchased or sold for their own accounts 78,496,102 shares. Curb members bought and sold for their own account 17,667,047 shares.

Opponents of segregation have always declared the move would destroy liquidity of the stock markets.

Landis, however, told reporters publication of the figures will allow the public to keep abreast of the type of buying and selling.

TVA Maps Attack On 'Yardstick' Suit

Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 24 (U.P.).—Tennessee Valley Authority solicitors entered the courts again today with a new oblique attack against a suit by which 19 private utilities seek to invalidate the New Deal's "yardstick-power" program.

Basing their hope on the Ashwander decision on which TVA won a smashing victory in the United States Supreme Court last February, the solicitors asked dismissal of the latest challenge on grounds no new issue has been raised.

The motion came approximately a week after United States District Judge John J. Gore, at Nashville, had overruled another Government motion to dismiss on grounds the Tennessee district of Federal Court lacked jurisdiction to hear the challenge.

Today's move spelled new delay in the suit filed last May by 19 private utilities—chiefly subsidiaries of Commonwealth and Southern. A private utility amendment to the original bill, asking an injunction to freeze TVA activities at status quo pending ultimate adjudication of the basic issues, also is still pending.

6 Firms Charged Under Elkins Act

New Orleans, Oct. 24 (AP).—Indictments charging violation of the Elkins act, prohibiting soliciting or accepting concessions or rebates on interstate shipments at less than published rates, were returned today against six business concerns by a Federal grand jury.

Those indicted were Julius A. Dumaine, operating the J. J. Dumaine Sugar Co., of New Orleans; J. Aron & Co., of New Orleans; American Syrup & Solvent Co., of St. Louis; Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co., of New York; Colonial Molasses Co., of New York, and the Al-Moco Corporation, of Cincinnati.

The indictments charged the Dumaine, Aron and Colonial companies with shipping molasses to the other three companies billed either as blackstrap or refiners' residual syrup, which took lower rates than molasses.

Red Cross Unit to Meet.

The first meeting of the Navy Unit of the Red Cross, of which Mrs. Claude A. Swanson is chairman, will be held in the Red Cross rooms, 1730 E street northwest, at 10 a. m. Tuesday. The Rev. E. Calvert Buck, superintendent of the Episcopal Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Hospital, will speak.

Road Work to Start.

Salisbury, Md., Oct. 24. (AP).—City engineer Clark Gardner announces resurfacing of nearly 2-miles of city streets would begin Monday. The work which will cost $3,000, will take two weeks.

Woman Injured As Horse Falls At Warrenton

Fall Fractures Collarbone of Mrs. Abbott; Is Second Victim in Week.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Warrenton, Va., Oct. 24.—Thrown to the ground when her horse stepped into a hole during a hunt here today, Mrs. Paul Abbott, New York and Virginia social leader, was in a hospital here tonight with a broken collarbone and two fractured ribs.

She was the second to be injured this week. The first was Mrs. E. Kenneth Jenkins, of Warrenton, who suffered a dislocated vertebra when a colt lunged in the traces of a break cart.

Mrs. Abbott's mount rolled on her in the mishap. She was riding in the Warrenton Hunt, which gathered at the home of J. Chauncy Williams, master of hounds of the Casanova Hunt.

Mrs. Abbott was brought to the Fauquier County Hospital here.

She is the wife of the treasurer of Colonial Estates, a real estate company. She came to Chatterbox, her estate on the Bethel road, for the hunting season.

In Emergency Hospital, Washington, physicians said Mrs. Jenkins' condition is "satisfactory."

Official of Boston And Curley Clash

Boston, Oct. 24 (AP).—Gov. James M. Curley and Joseph A. Maynard, collector of the Port of Boston, were separated by friends tonight after a heated exchange following upon an address by Curley at a dinner of the Democratic Business Men's League of Massachusetts.

Curley, in his address, had commented on President Roosevelt's tour of Massachusetts earlier in the week, which he said "proved beyond doubt that he would carry the State."

Curley also praised Joseph McGrath, chairman of the Democratic State committee, originator of the $100-a-plate dinner in Massachusetts for the Democratic campaign funds.

Later in the lobby of the hotel Curley and Maynard came face to face.

"Why don't you give credit where credit is due?" Maynard asked the Governor.

There was an excited argument and the two men moved toward each other when Mrs. Mary Donnelly, Gov. Curley's daughter, grabbed her father's arm. Police also stepped between the pair.

Bishop Edwin Mouzon Guest in Winchester

Winchester, Va., Oct. 24.—Bishop and Mrs. Edwin Mouzon arrived here this evening to participate, tomorrow, in the dedication of a new Sunday School building of Braddock Street M. E. Church South. Bishop Mouzon will deliver the dedicatory sermon.

In the afternoon, they will motor to Martinsburg, W. Va., where they will be guests at dinner of the Rev. and Mrs. Harry V. Wheeler. In the evening, Bishop Mouzon will preach at Trinity M. E. Church, South, in Martinsburg. The following day, it is expected he and Mrs. Mouzon will return to their home in Charlotte, N. C. While in Winchester, they are guests of the Rev. and Mrs. W. W. McIntyre

Belgian Fascist Chief Calls Off Party Rally

Brussels, Oct. 24 (AP).—Leon Degrelle, sometimes called the "Belgian Hitler," tonight called off tomorrow's demonstration by his followers, which had threatened open conflict with gendarmes and the military.

From his secret hide-out, Degrelle ordered instead that nine separate meetings of his Rexist Party following be held November 1, one in each of the principal cities of the nine provinces. Degrelle is hiding because he believes the government seeks his arrest.

Belgian troops stayed in barracks, however, ready for action.

Townsend Club in West Votes to Back Roosevelt

Martinez, Calif., Oct. 24 (AP).—President Walter Valdi of the Martinez Townsend Club said today its 600 members had indorsed the candidacy of President Roosevelt.

The statement marked the second recent departure of California pension-plan members from the course recommended by their leader, Dr. F. E. Townsend.

Earlier in the week 26 members of the Madera Townsend Club resigned, asserting Dr. Townsend had exceeded his authority in attempting to influence the vote of individual pension planners.

Mussolini's Oldest Son To Wed, Pay U. S. Visit

Rome, Oct. 24 (AP).—Society circles today said Premier Mussolini's oldest son, Lieut. Vittorio Mussolini, soon would marry a girl from Milan and that they intended to go to Hollywood for their honeymoon. Vittorio, who is 21, is an ardent movie-goer.

The report said his fiancee, whose name was expected to be made known soon, comes from a family of modest financial position.

Gold Medal Awarded To Lincoln Ellsworth

Chicago, Oct. 24 (AP).—Lincoln Ellsworth, participant in several Polar expeditions and navigator on a flight across the Antarctic Continent last year, received a gold medal today from the Geographic Society of Chicago. The explorer, at a luncheon in his honor, told the society there is much "left undone" and that the icebound Antarctic holds large reserves of minerals.

Abilene, Tex., Oct. 24 (AP).—Doris Merle Hollingshead, 10-month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Hollingshead, drowned in a five-gallon can of milk at the home of her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Jeff Ray, near here, today.

Injured as Horse Stumbles in Hunt

MRS. PAUL ABBOTT.

Modest Secretary Revealed As Real 'Eyes' of Helen Keller

Scotch Woman, Who Served Teacher of Famous Figure, Brought Outside World to Both Famed Blind Woman and Teacher.

A hardy, middle-aged woman from the Scottish Highlands has been the secret eyes through which famed Helen Keller and her great teacher, Mrs. Anne Sullivan Macy, who died last week, saw this rapidly changing, ever-accelerating world.

This was revealed yesterday in an Associated Press dispatch from New York, which told how Miss Keller's secretary, Miss Polly Thomson, was the unsung heroine of one of America's most amazing households, and how for a decade and a half she submerged her identity in her task of serving as the eyes for the blind and deaf Miss Keller, and the virtually blind teacher who led Miss Keller to world fame.

While Mrs. Macy lived, she held the spotlight, for she had taught her pupil to speak, and to hear through her hands. But in death, the teacher gave the world a secret only a few had known.

Through Miss Thompson, and not Mrs. Macy, Miss Keller saw life. She saw history in the making, gay colors, buntings, crowds in auditoriums, Liberty Bond posters, newspaper headlines and express trains roaring in a world of light.

Miss Thompson maintained a household on nearly normal lines, and despite the fact neither of her companions could see, she read them the newspapers at breakfast. Mrs. Macy tapped the results on Miss Keller's hands in fingertip writing, and then Miss Keller commented in her monotone. The newspaper was propped up, "Babbit-fashion."

The same thing went for sorting the mail, writing speeches, answering the telephone and the door bell, going to movies and finding the right radio station on the dial Mrs. Macy could no longer see.

Mrs. Macy's none-too-strong sight began to fail, and Miss Thomson, from Glasgow, was engaged as Miss Keller's secretary in 1914. She served as secretary on the road, cook, co-hostess and gardener. She read Mrs. Macy news of the World War, and Mrs. Macy tap-tapped it on Helen Keller's palm, and Helen Keller's brain worked rapidly.

But in Toronto, Canada, in 1922, the glare of the footlights in a lecture hall drew the final curtain over Mrs. Macy's eyes. Shadows came instead of light. She recognized people only by their voices. She could not interpret street signs. The brightest boulevards in the biggest cities of the world were tenanted by shadows.

The footlights drove her from the platforms where Miss Keller appeared.

But out of the darkness came Miss Thompson—seeing for her two celebrated companions, knifing the veils of blackness with her two keen eyes that did triple duty.

Woman Is Struck By Hit-Run Auto

Struck by the automobile of a hit-and-run driver as she was walking from east to west safety zones on Dupont Circle late last night, Miss Hallie Mitchell, 26, of 1918 Sunderland place northwest, suffered a broken left leg.

She was taken to Emergency hospital, where physicians said her condition was serious but not critical.

Some time after the accident, police arrested a man who registered as Dolph Atherton, 26, of the 9300 block of Connecticut avenue, and held him for investigation.

Half Dollar Will Bear Sen. Robinson's Profile

Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 24 (AP).—Centennial Chairman Harvey C. Couch said tonight the profile of Senate Majority Leader Joe T. Robinson will appear on a half dollar commemorating the Arkansas Centennial. It will be minted before January 1.

The coin will be the second to carry the profile of a living person. The profile of Senator Carter Glass of Virginia now appears on a coin celebrating the anniversary of the founding of Lynchburg, Va.

Bequest for Upkeep Of Grave Cut to $5,000

Warrenton, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—The Fauquier Circuit Court has ruled that $5,000 will be sufficient for upkeep of the Manassas Cemetery lot of the late John Lillian Jeffries, who ordered that a shaft be erected there to the memory of "those who have suffered and been disappointed in life." A granite shaft was raised in the cemetery and his ashes "scattered over the Potomac River," as requested.

The court, however, was asked to construe the will and decided that the amount left the cemetery was excessive.

Phone Proposal Succeeds.

London, Oct. 24 (AP).—A transatlantic telephone proposal led to the marriage today of Sammy Lerner, song writer, and Dorothy Davis, of New York. Lerner, coauthor of "Is It True What They Say About Dixie" and "Popeye the Sailor Man," and Miss Davis were married at Marylebone registry office.

Lily Pons' Answer Sought.

Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 24 (U.P.).—Andre Kostelanetz, orchestra leader, said today he was going to make three more trips to Hollywood to find out whether Lily Pons was going to marry him. The opera star is working in films, and Kostelanetz was on another of his weekly visits by air from New York to see her.

Magistrates Win Motor Act Ruling

Judge Robert E. Ennis, of Capitol Heights, secretary of the Magistrates Association of Prince Georges County, stated yesterday that he had recently received a letter from Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor, expressing the opinion that justices of the peace have authority to try traffic violation cases.

Special significance attaches to the ruling since several motions, alleging unconstitutionality of the present police court system, have recently been filed in the circuit court at Marlboro.

Since it was established in 1927 by acts of the Legislature, the police court has had sole jurisdiction of traffic cases.

The letter to Judge Ennis read in part:

"The local laws of your county provide that the police justice shall try all criminal cases in the county, with the exception of motor vehicle cases and violations of town ordinances, both of which classes of crimes may be tried by the several justices of the peace of the county."

N. C. Fugitive Captured Here After Two Years

A man who escaped from a Greenville, N. C., jail in 1934 while awaiting trial for murder was arrested here Friday by Detective Sergt. L. M. Wilson, who recognized him from the description sent out two years ago.

The man is Perry German, colored, 23, alias James Jorner, Wilson, in company with Lieut. John C. Maloney, of the Ninth Precinct, arrested the man near Ninth and H streets northeast, and informed the Department of Justice of his capture.

Toledo, Ohio, Oct. 24 (AP).—City Manager John N. Edy today discharged Sergt. Lyman Dear, custodian of the police department's armory, and two street department employes who admitted they once were members of the Black Legion.

Actress 'Socks' Star.

Paris, Oct. 24 (U.P.).—Harry Baur, one of the leading male film actors on the continent, was recovering today from cuts about the face suffered when Eve Francis, also a film star, broke a glass on his head. Baur had to be treated at Beaujon Hospital. The temperamental outburst startled patrons of a smart night club.

Capital Driver Loses Permit In Arlington

Democrat Groups to Hold Torchlight Parade Through County.

Herman D. Cheservoir, of 200 block L street northwest, Washington, and Thomas S. Bowles, of the 4800 block Conduit road northwest, Washington, appeared before Judge Edgar W. Pumphrey yesterday on charges of reckless driving.

Cheservoir was fined $20.35, including costs, both of which were suspended but his permit was revoked for 90 days. In the case of Bowles a fine of $10 was suspended upon the payment of costs amounting to $10.35.

W. E. Barbour, of 700 Dane street, Danville, Va., forfeited $20.35 on a similar charge.

Mrs. Catherine H. Conrad and John S. Moats, of Colonial Village Apartments, narrowly escaped serious injury when struck by an automobile said to be driven by Mrs. Gertrude E. Carretta, of the 1700 block of Troy street, Colonial Village, yesterday.

Mrs. Conrad was taken to Columbia Hospital, where it was said she was suffering from shock. Moats suffered light bruises.

According to police, Mrs. Carretta, accompanied by her husband, Albert A. Carretta, was learning to drive. She attempted to make a left turn onto Wilson Boulevard apparently losing control. The car plunged across the sidewalk, striking Moats and Mrs. Conrad.

A free for all treasure hunt started yesterday following the unearthing of a quantity of small silver and gold coins.

The money was uncovered when an old cedar stump was removed by laborers of the Rosslyn Gas Co. laying a main along Lee boulevard, opposite the Columbia Gardens Cemetery. Many of the coins found dated between 1842 and 1865.

Bringing to a close one of the most spirited campaigns waged in the county, the Democratic organizations will assemble along North Highland street, opposite the Clarendon Baptist Church, Friday night for a torch-light parade.

Headed by the Washington Lee High School Band with Sheriff Howard B. Fields as marshal, the parade will leave at 8:30 p. m. for a tour of the entire county.

Thursday night there will be a joint meeting of the Men's and Women's Democratic Clubs in the Odd Fellows Hall, with members of the County Democratic Executive Committee, when final plans will be made.

Suspect Held in Threat On Barbara Hutton Kin

Trenton, N. J., Oct. 24 (U.P.).—A 27-year-old Atlantic City man, Melvin Strickland, was held here today on charges of sending extortion notes to Mrs. Thomas Middleton, aunt of Countess Barbara Hutton von Haugwitz-Reventlow.

Mrs. Middleton, who lives on exclusive Bayshore drive, West Atlantic City, received two notes demanding $3,000 under threat of "injury and death." Disregarding a warning not to call police, she called the Department of Justice in Washington and notified State police.

Philadelphia Mayor Calls on President

The only caller at the White House yesterday, as the President continued working on the manuscripts of the nine remaining scheduled campaign addresses, was Mayor S. Davis Wilson of Philadelphia, who issued a formal statement praising Mr. Roosevelt after his conference.

Wilson, elected mayor as a Republican, although chairman of the independent State committee, for Roosevelt in 1932, reminded reporters that he was not able to be politically active under the terms of the Philadelphia charter.

China Clipper Ends Manila Round Trip

Alameda, Calif, Oct. 24 (U.P.).—The China Clipper of the Pan-American Airways, with eight newspaper correspondents as passengers, arrived here at 3:18 p. m. (Eastern standard time) today, completing a "press preview" flight from here to Manila and return. Among the passengers were Dorothy Kilgallen and Leo Kieran, reporters, racing for second place in an around-the-world race won by H. R. Ekins last Monday.

Dies in New York

MRS. LIDA SCRANTON TATE.

Mrs. Tate Dead In Kingston, N.Y.

Mrs. Lida Scranton Tate, widow of Col. Daniel Lisle Tate, United States Army, died yesterday in Kingston, N. Y., following a long illness, it was learned last night.

Mrs. Tate, who until recently lived at the Fairfax Hotel here, was visiting at the home of her son, Maj. Joseph Scranton Tate, United States Army, assigned to Kingston National Guard headquarters.

A native of Scranton, Pa., Mrs. Tate had lived here for some time. Besides her son, she is survived by three grandchildren, Homer, Daniel Lisle and Joseph Scranton Tate, jr., all of Kingston.

Funeral services will be at 2 p. m. tomorrow in Arlington National Cemetery.

G. O. P. Expects 4,000 Majority In Montgomery

6th District Leaders See Swing to Landon and LeGore in County.

Republican leaders in the Sixth Congressional District of Maryland yesterday predicted Gov. Alf M. Landon and Harry W. LeGore, Republican candidate for Representative, would carry Montgomery County with a 4,000-vote majority. They said they expected more than 3,000 votes from Jeffersonian Democrats.

Walter Dawson, chairman of the Republican State Central Committee for Montgomery County, said he believed that "a Republican lead of from 3,000 to 4,000 was a conservative estimate."

"Among the Democrats," he commented, "there is a strong, silent sentiment in favor of the national Jeffersonian Democratic movement and these Democrats will vote for Landon and Legore."

Sleman Optimistic.

Similar optimism was expressed by Paul Sleman, former chairman of the Republican State central committee for the county.

"Under normal conditions," he said, Montgomery County, in national elections, is Republican. This is due to the preponderance of Republicans in the suburban sections of the county, where the voters number more than 60 per cent of the total vote of the county.

"There is every evidence that the Republicans will poll their full strength for Landon and for Legore.

The indications are clear that thousands of old line Democrats, both in the agricultural and suburban sections of the county, are opposed to the Roosevelt policies and will support the Republican candidates."

Earl W. Shinn, president of the Landon-Legore Club of Montgomery County, also claimed the support of Jeffersonian Democrats. He added that in 1932 Roosevelt had received only 9,882 votes out of a Democratic enrollment of 16,611 and that in the Democratic primaries last May Roosevelt polled only 6,407 votes out of an enrollment of 20,070.

Lovettsville, Va., Oct. 24.—Miss Mary Hattie Orrison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Orrison, of Lovettsville, was married Thursday in York, Pa., to John J. Arnold, son of Otis Arnold, of Jefferson, Md., by the Rev. Alvin Myers, pastor of the First Methodist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold will reside in Frederick, Md.

Action Delayed On Bond Issue In Alexandria

Committee Named to Draft Ordinance on Costs of Water Firm Repairs.

The Alexandria city council, at a recessed meeting, again deferred action on a proposed bond issue of $300,000, owing, it was said, to absence from the city of Councilman Henry O'B. Cooper, and the desire to have this matter given consideration by the entire body. The bond issue is expected to be considered Tuesday.

The principal matter discussed was damage claimed done to the city streets by repairs of mains by the Alexandria Water Co.

Councilman L. C. Barley offered a motion that the company be notified it must repair all leaks in mains within 30 days. After passage of this motion, council adopted a resolution providing that the city manager, attorney and engineer constitute a committee to draft an ordinance on mains repair. City Manager E. C. Dunn said repair costs have not been adjusted by the water company, as there is a water bill standing against the city. The amounts may offset each other.

The city engineer was requested to report on feasibility of listing persons in the city who have not yet tapped sewers, and Engineer McCartney said he is now working on such a list. He then was instructed to submit the partial list.

Council adopted a resolution to renew loans for six months at a rate not to exceed the present interest rate. The loans total $182,650. The mayor, city treasurer and clerk are authorized to sign the renewal notes.

City Attorney Budwesky said under the $1 per year license for penny merchandising machines, sigarette machines here have injured tobacco licenses, since the cigarettes are purchased in Washington.

Mayor E. C. Davison suggested need for garages to house the 75 pieces of motor equipment owned by the city, and that such a place is needed for repair work. The proposal has been pending several years. The city engineer council had suggested building such a place under a $5,000 appropriation but said the type and size building would cost $15,000.

A number of citizens protested extension of a street in Colonial Park, and at suggestion of Councilman Barley this matter was deferred until Tuesday to allow protestors and the attorney representing the applicant to be heard.

A group of blocks in the city was rezoned for commercial purposes. The council received an invitation of Lieut. Comdr. Paul H. Wiedron, U. S. Navy, to visit the Alexandria Naval Torpedo Station Tuesday, Navy Day.

Hunger Strikers Win.

Beuthen, Germany, Oct. 24 (AP).—Eight hundred coal miners across the Polish border, ending a hunger strike, stumbled out of their pits tonight, exhausted by their four-day fast. The management accepted all their demands. The miners will go back to work Monday.

Carroll Held Guilty In Murder of Girl

Staunton, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—An Augusta Circuit Court jury convicted Raymond Carroll of second degree murder today in the death of young Pauline Parry, Waynesboro rayon worker, and fixed punishment at 12 years' imprisonment.

Carroll was arrested last July 19 on a warrant sworn out by his brother, Charles, charging him with the fatal assault on the young woman as she was walking home from a carnival in August, 1934. She died two months later in a Staunton hospital.

Report of Auto Theft Filed as Car Crashes

While Woolwine Waddell, of Rockville, was reporting theft of his car to Sergt. Roy Bodmer, at Montgomery County Police Headquarters in Rockville, Md., yesterday, Sheriff G. Eddington Bell phoned in to report that the car was in an accident near Potomac, Md.

The car had failed to make a turn at Normandy Farms and crashed into a bank. Robert Roden, 22, of 638 D street northwest, was taken to the office of Dr. W. S. Murphy in Rockville and treated for severe cuts on face and head and later lodged in the Rockville jail charged with theft of the car.

'Mail Order Romeo' Gets Five Years; $1,000 Fine

San Francisco, Oct. 24 (AP).—Samuel Frank, mail-order Romeo, received the maximum sentence for mail fraud in Federal court today—a five-year prison term and a $1,000 fine.

Judge A. F. St. Sure termed Frank a "menace to society," and expressed regret he could not impose a ten-year sentence.

Court records disclosed Frank corresponded with 13,000 women, and obtained "loans" from many of them on the promise of marriage. Postoffice inspectors testified Frank already was married.

Virginia Prison Farms Proposed by Shirley

Richmond, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—Henry G. Shirley, State Highway Commissioner, said today he saw a solution to the State's convict labor problem in the establishment of subsistence farms throughout Virginia.

Beard Leads 5,000 Scouts On Pilgrimage

Annual Visit Made to Grave of 'Teddy' Roosevelt; Tribute Is Paid.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 24.—An 88-year-old Boy Scout who once roamed the outdoors with former President Theodore Roosevelt led 5,000 younger scouts in a pilgrimage to his old friend's grave today.

For the seventeenth successive year, Daniel Carter Beard, national scout commissioner, leaded the annual procession to the cemetery at Oyster Bay, Long Island, to honor the dead "Chief Scout Citizen."

Behind "Uncle Dan" in the line of pilgrims from New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and Delaware were scouts and scout leaders in Indian regalia and the buckskin of pioneer woodsmen.

With American flags and troop colors massed in front of them, the scouts marched in a single column from Oyster Bay village to the Roosevelt burial spot a mile away.

In this small town the rough-riding President began the scouting activity which was to end with his selection as the first honorary vice president of the organization. His first post was a committeemanship in Oyster Bay's Troop 39. His last was "Chief Scout Citizen," a title he held when he died in 1919.

In tribute to "T. R.'s" devotion to scouting ideals, the 5,000 men and boys filed past his grave, halted by contingents, and saluted while a picked scout of each group laid a wreath on the tomb.

Rose petals were tossed to the winds in a memorial ceremony that followed. The scouts repeated their oath and laws. Commissioner Beard and another old friend of the former President, the Rev. Dr. T. H. Mackenzie, eulogized briefly. Indian rituals were invoked and "taps" were blown.

Five D. C. Youths Exhibit Art Work

The ninth annual Scholastic High School Arts and Crafts Exhibition is now in its second week at the National Gallery. Five Washingtonians are represented in the exhibition. Peter de Anna, 15, 104 E street, a graduate of Central High School and now a student at Corcoran Art Gallery, has an outstanding exhibit of a water-color study of a colored laborer. Harold H. Geise, 17, and Donald Hall Robertson, 17, also of Central, and Ebbie Chase, 16, and Alan Moran, 17, both of Roosevelt High School, also have places of interest in the exhibit.

Members of the Diplomatic Corps from Belgium, Canada, Germany, Russia Austria, Denmark and France have visited the exhibit. The exhibits for these countries were submitted through co-operation of the ministers of education of the respective countries.

Pezolds to Mark Golden Wedding

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Pezold, 2023 Fourteenth street southeast, will observe their golden wedding anniversary on Saturday, October 31. The observance will be a remarriage ceremony at the Emanuel Episcopal Church, Thirteenth and V streets, at 8 p. m. A reception will follow in the parish hall.

The bride of 50 years is the former Miss Margaret Gottsman, of Georgetown. Her marriage to Mr. Pezold took place in Washington at the little St. John's Lutheran Church still standing on Fourth street.

There are seven children—Arthur Pezold, of Birginia; Raymond Pezold, of New York City; Clarence Pezold, Clyde Pezold, Mrs. Victor Casalege and Mrs. Lloyd Wineland, of Washington, and David Pezold, of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Pezold have been residents of Anacostia for 47 years.

Five Will Contest For Oratory Prize

The annual oratorical contest of the Filipino Center will take place tonight at the G Street Y. M. C. A. Five persons will take part.

A gold medal for first prize winner has been donated by Commissioner Quentin Paredes, of the Philippines, and will be presented by his son, Quentin Parades, jr. The silver medal for winner of second place was given by Mr. and Mrs. Florentino Calabia.

Judges for the contest are Prof. William A. Read, of Southeastern University; Stephen J. Spingarn, of the Treasury Department, and Miss Dorothy Abts, instructor in social service at Catholic University.

Society of Natives Meets Tomorrow

Meetings will be resumed by the Society of Natives for the 1936-37 season at the Washington Club, Seventeenth and K streets northwest, at 8 p. m. tomorrow.

William E. Richardson, president, announced yesterday that Judge Robert E. Mattingly would deliver an address, and that James F. Duhamel, the historian, would give a brief talk on "Historic Rock Creek."

A musical program will be presented, featuring Miss Elizabeth Cates, painist, and Miss Carolyn Schultze, soprano. Mrs. Vesta L. Watson is chairman of the entertainment committee.

Tribute Will Be Paid D.A.R. Unit Founder

Memorial services in honor of Miss Bertha Frances Wolfe, founder and honorary regent of Capt. Wendell Wolfe Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, will be held at the chapter's business meeting Tuesday at the home of Mrs. Ada Mills Payne, 55 Rhode Island avenue northwest.

On the same day, in Somerset, Ky., a D. A. R. marker will be placed on Miss Wolfe's grave by members of the Somerset chapter of the organization. The services here will be in charge of Mrs. L. C. Hover, chaplain.

Scientists Fear Relief Effects, Roosevelt Told

Dr. Karl T. Compton Says Outlay Endangers Development.

By the Associated Press.

Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 24.—Dr. Karl T. Compton, president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, asserted today in an open letter to President Roosevelt that engineers and scientists were disturbed lest the attention and money devoted to relief should interfere with the support due science.

Dr. Compton's letter was a reply to President Roosevelt who recently called upon educators to consider whether the curricula of engineering schools was so balanced as to give coming generations of engineers the vision and flexible technical capacity necessary to meet the full range of engineering responsibility."

Asserting "increasing emphasis is being placed upon fundamentals rather than specialties" and there is "a notable increase in attention to the study of economics and social sciences," Dr. Compton said he wondered why the President's "exhortation" was "directed specifically toward engineers."

Mistaken Cure Feared.

Calling "relief, emergency work and regulation" a "palliative" method of dealing with social ills, Dr. Compton said:

"We engineers and scientists * * * are disturbed lest the palliative measures be mistaken for the cure and lest the attention and money devoted to relief and regulation should interfere with simultaneous adequate attention and support to the basic contributions which our sciences can certainly make if given a chance."

"As illustrations of our cause for concern, and of the need for broader understanding by political leaders as well as engineers," he continued, "I would respectively refer to four events:

"(1) The engineering and scientific organizations of the country combined to urge that a small portion of the public works expenditures be devoted to research aimed at better designs and materials for public works for the future.

Advisory Board Cited.

"(2) Your science advisory board of prominent engineers and scientists recommended that attention be given to development of scientific knowledge on which can be built the new industries, so urgently desired by your administration to provide employment.

"(3) Various groups urged that the present efforts to aid farmer be supplemented by a really adequate attempt to create new markets for farm products through discovery of new industrial uses for these products through research. None of these recommendations was acted upon.

"(4) Your letter to us calls attention of the public to the 'dislocations' produced by science, and quite properly calls on us to try to cure them, but it does not indicate interest in the creative work and permanent values which engineers and scientists continue to regard as their chief contributions to social welfare."

15,272 Catholic Aids Slain in Spain, Report

Rome, Oct. 24 (U.P.).—The Catholic newspaper Venire D'Italia today published a purported list of Communist atrocities in Spain asserting that 15,272 priests, friars and nuns have been killed.

The newspaper listed among the victims the Bishops of Almeria, Guadic, Jean, Lerida Cuenoa, Siguenza, Cuidad Real, Segorbe, Barbastro and Tarrangona.

The report said that 18,987 churches, convents and religious schools had been burned or sacked.

Trotzky Sues Oslo Paper In Move to Expose Reds

Oslo, Norway, Oct. 24 (A.P.).—Declaring he intends to "unmask the reckless policy of the Soviets," Leon Trotzky, bolshevist exile, today announced a suit against the newspaper Arbeideren, Norway's principal Communist organ.

The suit was based on a dispatch from Moscow which the newspaper published last August, headed "Kirov murder committed on Trotzky's direct advice." It accused Trotzky of co-operating with the German secret police.

The suit was the first step in what Trotzky promises will be a sensational expose of the Soviet regime.

Roosevelt High Principal Plans Gay Retirement After 51 Years

'They're the Thing!' Says Allan Davis, 70, Who Quits Job Nov. 14.

Allan Davis sat back comfortable in the chair behind the principal's desk at Roosevelt High School and smiled.

He's going to be 70 next month—November 14. And he's going to retire. For the first time in 51 years Washington public schools will be without his services.

This has excited his friends—his school associates and the thousands whom he has fitted for positions in life. And they are talking a lot about his leaving the driver's seat.

The jovial countenance that has been Allan Davis' through the years does not vanish as he hears about all this excitement. He might even say he likes it—but get excited himself? Never.

"Pshaw—there were schools here for me to grow up into. And there will be schools after I leave."

What really makes this smiling veteran happy are the things that have been accomplished while he had a place at the helm. He says:

"Schools used to be so aristocratic. Why, do you know in the eighth grade I belonged to there were 40 pupils, and just 4 of them were able to pass the final test?"

Dedicated to Service.

Allan Davis believed there was something wrong with the system when only a handful could come out on top. He decided to dedicate himself to the job of making education more available and more useful to the masses of young folk.

He didn't have to wait long for a chance to begin. He was still a student in high school here when the principal offered him his first job.

"Allan," said the school official, "study up on your physics this summer, and next fall I'll give you a job teaching."

Allan managed to lay hands on a science text, and spent the vacation months reading it. In September he had the answers for all the test questions given him, and the job was his.

"I didn't know that taking that job was to be the bravest deed in my life," Davis said yesterday. "But it was. On the first day of school I walked into a class of 40 girls—boys and girls attended separate classes in those days. And I was to teach those girls physics.

"It turned out we got along just fine. Those girls did good work, and they taught me a lot about physics."

Davis has been a teacher ever since. Of course, he became a principal in 1890, when he was given charge of Washington's first business high school. But ever since then he has been primarily a teacher. He says he has always tried to "get under the skin," of the pupils, under him, and the teachers, too.

Methods Explosive.

Davis doesn't remember the day he walked into a class session of one of his English teachers—but the English teacher does. She was putting her class through "Hamlet" and things weren't going so well. The class just wasn't responding. In the midst of the apathy Principal Davis walked in. He observed for a while and then interrupting the recitation asked:

"Do you mean we're still teaching Shakespeare in school?"

Today Davis believes Shakespeare has his place in school, but he still holds that whatever is presented youngsters should be interesting, or made interesting. Education shouldn't be altogether academics and discipline.

Davis hasn't let his office become a court for the trial of classroom miscreants. One teacher sent a boy to his office once, and the principal received him. The boy was handed a pencil and paper to write down the whole story.

ALLAN DAVIS.

When he was finished Davis read the written account, thought a moment and laid it aside. Then he pointed the finger of authority at the accused lad and said:

"Look here, young man, I have to get along with that teacher, too. Let's see if we can't do something about it."

Davis conducted business school during his first years in the Thomson School at Twelfth and K streets northwest. Then some of the boys he had graduated got behind a movement for a larger school, and eventually a business high school was established in a six-room building at Ninth and R streets. Then in 1932 Roosevelt High School was completed and Allan Davis and his staff of teachers, with several additions, moved out there.

Veteran of Washington Schools Is Happy Over Service.

The story of Davis as an educator might be told in the account of the growth of business education in the District. That would hardly be complete, however, for the same man organized the first public night school in the Capital.

Davis, however, insists that in his half century of school work he has done just two things:

"Back in 1906, I took a flyer into politics—the only time in my life that I did it. "I was chairman of the Teachers' Council, and we set out to get a higher salary scale for the teachers.

"We did a thorough job. We card indexed every Congressman. Then we got every one of our 1,700 teachers to contact all the Congressmen she knew. We took just two years to get that salary raise."

The other red-letter achievement in his record is his anti-Red rider activities last winter. As a man who had worked long in the interests of free education, Davis was bitterly opposed to Representative Thomas L. Blanton's efforts, through the Red rider, to restrict free speech in the class room.

Relief Workers InMaineDenied Vote, Is Charge

Thousands Disqualified by Pauper Law, Agents Report to Senate.

By the Associated Press.

Charges that "thousands of voters" in the recent Maine elections were threatened with disqualification because they were on relief were made this week to the Senate Campaign Fund committee by its agents.

Many voters failed to register and vote "because they had been told they would be challenged on that ground," the report said.

The charges were quickly denied by Daniel F. Field, Maine Republican national committeeman, who said he did not "know of a single instance in which a relief recipient was prevented from voting because he was receiving relief."

Field added, "We have a pauper law in Maine, but I don't know that it was invoked."

Counter-Charge Made.

In a counter-charge, he said Republican investigators had found that voting in Lewiston and Auburn had been conducted in "a highly irregular manner." Those are Democratic strongholds.

The Senate committee said its investigators found that "voters were threatened by statements from election officials to the effect they would not be eligible to vote and that these statements were supported by a letter from the office of the State's attorney general."

This letter purporting to be from Attorney General Clyde R. Chapman held that persons on emergency relief were "deemed to be paupers," and not entitled to vote, the committee agents said.

Chairman Lonergan (Democrat), Connecticut, said the reports of threatened disfranchisement had been referred to Walter Myers, committee attorney, for an opinion.

Law Is Cited.

Lonergan said that according to some complaints received by the committee investigators the attorney general's office did not take into consideration recent State laws providing that no person should be disqualified from voting because he was on relief.

The investigators' report cited a law approved March 23, 1935, which said:

"The fact that the money for the payment of the wages of any person employed by any city or town is derived from relief funds shall not operated to give such person the status of a pauper, so that he shall be denied on that account the right of franchise."

Thousands Honor Couzens at Bier

Detroit, Oct. 24 (A.P.).—Thousands of Michigan people filed silently through Detroit's city hall today to pay respect at the coffin of United States Senator James Couzens.

Long before the doors of the city hall were opened at noon, a crowd estimated by police at 4,000 gathered to wait for a last view of the man who represented them as Senator for 14 years and gave millions of dollars from his automobile fortune for the care of crippled children and to other charities.

The Senator's body later was taken to his home in Bloomfield Hills for a public funeral there at 2 p. m. Monday.

Liberia Snares Chief To End Jungle Revolt

Monrovia, Liberia, Oct. 24 (A.P.).—After four years of savage fighting in the jungles of Southern Liberia, the government announced today a frontier force of militia at last had captured the powerful "Will-O'-Wisp" superchief, King Nimley, head of the warring Kru tribes. More than 20,000 natives have been killed, starved and mutilated in the bitter conflict, it was estimated, and more than half of the Liberian militia slain or wounded.

Italo-ReichPact For Unity Gets HitlerApproval

Fascist Front Is Assured; Germany Recognizes Rule in Ethiopia.

By the Associated Press.

Munich, Oct. 24.—Dictator Hitler tonight announced agreement toward an Italo-German Fascist front against the rest of Europe.

Hitler gave final approval at Berchtesgaden to a joint Italo-German statement after conferring with Count Galeazzo Ciano, Italian foreign minister and Mussolini's son-in-law.

The statement was a declaration of Nazi-Fascist friendship and determination of the two nations to consider each other's wishes before any international action.

The declaration will be published tomorrow, officials said, and through Ciano will carry an expression of Mussolini's approval.

Tomorrow's declaration will be in general terms, official sources said, and will not be binding as a formal treaty.

Returning here after a two-and-one-half hour conversation with Hitler, Ciano was welcomed by Nazi storm troops. The city gave him the biggest welcome of his stay in Germany.

More concrete evidence of understanding between the two nations, however, was the simultaneous announcement in Rome and Berlin that Germany had recognized Ethiopia as Italian and acknowledged existence of the new Italian empire.

Landon Offers Two-Point Plan On World Peace

trade barriers and re-establishing healthy economic conditions."

Should war come in the world, Landon proposed to help keep America out by:

Developing a neutrality policy which, while not "an absolute guarantee of peace," is "one of the great hopes" since isolation "is unfair to our own people and impossible."

Enacting legislation for "taking the profits out of war."

"In these high resolves, God helping us," the Republican candidate said, "we shall protect America against war. And we shall do our full part to maintain the healing of peace throughout the world."

Landon's speech, the first on foreign affairs and the first of five major addresses with which he will close his Presidential campaign in populous Midwestern and Eastern voting districts, represented his final personal bid for Indiana's 14 electoral votes. It climaxed a day during which the Kansan viewed a parade in his honor and conferred with State party chieftains.

Although he reported to newspapermen improvement in a cold and slightly sore throat which have hung on for three days, Landon's public appearances in Indianapolis were restricted. The Governor kept his throat wrapped with a woolen muffler.

Emphasizing that "war will never be the father of peace," Landon told his Coliseum audience that use of stronger armies to halt a conflict once begun "will always be a delusion to crush the hope and break the hearts of those who seek to wipe out war.

"I shall do everything in my power to prevent the tragedy of war from ever touching our country," he said. "I shall encourage with all my power the cause of peace. I shall not merely talk about my hatred of war."

Asserting "the time has come to face foreign conditions realistically," the nominee viewed the world outlook:

"Nations are suspicious of one another and fearful of one another. Economic nationalism is rampant. To be able as a neutral to exert an influence for peace we must have a government which is trusted at home and broad. We must mind our own business. As Theodore Roosevelt said, we must not become a 'meddlesome Matty.'

"Without arrogance we must support our own rights. We must take no action that would injure others. * * * We are determined in this restless world to keep our own nation an oasis of peace. We want this Western hemisphere to be a lesson to all mankind that men and races can live together in harmony."

Departing from his prepared address, Landon, in discussing foreign affairs, said: "I do not propose to be a talkative President."

The original read "talkative man."

Landon was interrupted by applause when he stated: "I am a member of the American Legion." Indianapolis is the national headquarters of the legion. Again as he asserted, "The protection of the doughboy should be put above the protection of the dollar," the crowd cheered wildly.

He was interrupted 29 times during his 24-minute address. The crowd led out a final wild cheer as Landon turned, waved to the crowd and left the platform.

The Gov. Landon's itinerary from Indianapolis to New York, as announced today, follows:

Sunday—Leave Indianapolis via Baltimore & Ohio 2:15 p. m. Arrive Cincinnati (operating stop only) 6:25 p. m. (E. S. T.)

Monday—Arrive Baltimore via Baltimore & Ohio 10:45 a. m. for address, Mount Royal Station; leave Baltimore 11:15 a. m. Arrive Philadelphia 1:20 p. m. Address in Convention Hall 9:30 p. m. Leave Philadelphia via Pennsylvania 11:40 p. m.

Home and Resting Place of Colonial Patriot to Be Marked Today

Fairfax D. A. R. Pays Lindsay Tribute Today

Chapter to Dedicate Grave Marker for Colonial Hero and Wife.

Memories of bygone years will return to Laurel Hill in Fairfax County, Va., today when ceremonies on a shady knoll overlooking Occoquan Bay and the Potomac River honor the name of William Lindsay, colonial patriot, soldier and Virginia gentleman.

More than 190 years ago, William Lindsay stood in a brilliant autumn sun on the brow of this knoll and selected Laurel Hill and its surrounding woodland acres as the site of his family home.

And still later—in 1792—he was carried quietly from a rambling frame house to his final resting place beneath spreading trees on the hillside.

Years passed. In the early 1800's his pretty wife, Ann Calvert, great-granddaughter of Cecil Calvert, Lord Baltimore, was buried a short distance from her husband on grassy slopes of the knoll.

Their graves were marked with sandstone slabs. But time and the elements erased the markers and the Lindsay graves remained forgotten in the hustle and bustle of a new era.

Name Not Forgotten.

But the name of William Lindsay, engraved on the well-worn pages of history, was not forgotten. Not long ago members of the Fairfax County Chapter of the D. A. R. launched a movement to locate graves of Colonial patriots throughout the country. Among the first to be found was that of William Lindsay.

The original Lindsay home on Laurel Hill, part of which is still standing, now is a part of the Lorton Reformatory reservation and occupied by Col. William Peak, reformatory superintendent, and members of his family. Additions and improvements have been made, but two original rooms of the old structure remain the same.

It was known that William Lindsay was buried near the famous house, but exact location of the grave had been lost in the dim past. Through efforts of D. A. R. historians, Mrs. Theresa Davis, who lived on the plantation as a child, was taken back to her former home. Although nearly blind, Mrs. Davis walked to a group of trees on the edge of the knoll and identified the location.

And so today, natives and visitors will gather on the spot to unveil a gleaming white marker—locating forever the mortal remains of William Lindsay.

It was 12 miles from "Laurel Hill" where William Lindsay first saw the light of Colonial days. The eldest son of Robert and Susannah Lindsay, he was born at The Mount, rolling plantation of his parents.

William Lindsay's childhood was spent in Fairfax County. Stirring days of the Revolutionary War saw him as a member of one of Virginia's militia regiments. Serving with valor during early periods of the conflict, he was wounded in action during the battle of Guilford Court House in 1781.

Following the war, William Lindsay established his home in Colchester, Prince William County. There he became a wealthy businessman, acting as commission merchant for Virginia planters.

Later, seeking a new home for his family—having married Ann Calvert shortly before the war—William Lindsay stood on the famous knoll overlooking "a thousand acres of good land" and picked the site of Laurel Hill.

Tradition through the years had established nearly every home in the Lindsay family atop a hill. It was with this in mind that William Lindsay chose the location of the house where he died.

Ann Calvert Lindsay was noted for her devotion to Laurel Hill. Her hobby was beautiful flower gardens. To this end, she spent tireless hours beautifying grounds around the house.

And it was behind one of Grandmere's gardens, on the crest of a sandy knoll, where the family burial plot was finally located.

William Lindsay was the first adult to be interred on the spot. Around him were the final resting places of Hierome Lindsay, his second son, who also served in the Revolution; Opie Lindsay, of the Mount, brother of William, a dispatch carrier in the Continental Army, and several other members of the Lindsay family.

At the time of William Lindsay, the Laurel Hill plantation afforded a broad view of the Potomac River. The famous old Telegraph road, used throughout the Revolution for mail and armies and providing direct communication with Mount Vernon, passed the dividing line of Lindsay's estate.

At today's ceremonies, two young descendants of the Lindsay family will officially unveil the marker. They are Ellen and William Triplett, great-grandchildren of Sarah Lindsay Triplett, third daughter of William and Ann.

And the colorful Lindsay family history is not without its touch of mystery. A grandson of William and Ann, Hierame Lindsay Johnston, left home one fall afternoon to go hunting. He wandered into the Virginia woodlands and never returned. To this day, his fate remains a mystery.

There were many tragic deaths recorded during early days at Laurel Hill. John Lindsay, 19-year-old son of William and Ann, died before his twentieth birthday after serving in the Navy during the second war with Great Britain.

Thomas Lindsay, another son, enlisted in the Navy at an early age and went to his death when a battleship sank with all hands.

Moore Will Speak.

As a direct descendant of the Lindsay family, R. Walton Moore, Assistant Secretary of State, will deliver today's dedicatory address.

Ceremonies will begin at 3:30 p. m. Arrangements have been completed by Mrs. John Brookfield, acting historian of the D. A. R. chapter; Mrs. Craig Hunter, chairman of the committee on historic spots and Col. Peak.

Capt. M. M. Barnard, general superintendent of District Penal Institutions, will welcome guests and visitors.

'Peace in Work' Is Aim of Rome, Mussolini Says

Caesar's Day Civic Virtues Maintained in Darkened Europe, He Adds.

By the Associated Press.

Bologna, Italy, Oct. 24.—Premier Mussolini, thundering out a "message of peace" here where he narrowly escaped assassination ten years ago, today thrust before the world "an olive branch growing out of an immense forest of 8,000,000 bayonets."

He told 100,000 Bolognese he desired to "launch a message which should go beyond the mountains and seas."

"It is a message of peace, peace in work and work in peace," he shouted.

"People such as the Italian people, heirs to an ancient and magnificent civilization, have certain rights on the surface of this earth," he added.

"The nations which formerly knew us only in a literary sense now are amazed at our economic and military achievements."

He declared that as the European horizon darkens, Italy "offers the world an admirable spectacle of calm and discipline—the Roman civic virtues."

His "Message of Peace" was Il Duce's climax in a day of speechmaking.

Earlier, in Corridonia, he dedicated a monument to his old Socialist comrade, Filippo Corridoni, who fell in the World War. En route to Bologna he addressed 75,000 persons in Macerata.

In Corridonia, without direct allusion to the Spanish civil war, Mussolini described "intervention" as representing the "purest ideal of fascism."

"Corridoni was an interventionist"—meaning he favored intervention against Austria in the World War—"therefore he represents the purest ideal of fascism."

Railway Clerks Back President Roosevelt

Re-election of President Roosevelt is heartily indorsed in a resolution adopted by the Eastern Regional Association of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employes.

The brotherhood, which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, claims more than 50,000 members employed by eastern railroads. Its resolution was adopted at the regular semiannual meeting in New York.

Democrats File Campaign Cost Of $2,845,074

$1,324,416 Expenditure Shown Between Sept. 1 and Oct. 21.

By the Associated Press.

Campaign expenditures of $1,324,416 between September 1 and October 21 were reported yesterday by the Democratic National Committee, bringing its outlay for the year to $2,845,074.

Receipts amounting to $1,408,947 since September 1 were listed in the committee's 125-page report, filed with the Clerk of the House. With earlier contributions, this gave the committee an income of $2,934,603 so far this year.

The Republican National Committee on Friday reported it spent $3,161,617 and collected $2,987,765 between September 1 and October 18. Its expenditures for the year were $5,686,536.

Total Republican contributions since January 1 could not be determined exactly from records in the clerk's office, because of accidental damage to some of them, but since June 1 they totaled $5,038,419.

Miners Donate $100,000.

A $100,000 donation from the United Mine Workers was the largest single contribution on the new Democratic list, which was less than half as long as the Republican. The greatest gift from an individual was $40,000 from Walter A. Jones, of Pittsburgh.

Donations of $25,000 each were made by Curtis Bok, Philadelphia, and Lucius B. Manning, Chicago, while James W. Gerard, of New York, gave $15,000.

Contributors of $10,000 each were Emil Schwartzhaupt, New York; Bert Fish, Deland, Fla.; John A. Turtletaub, New York; Arthur Mullen, Omaha, Nebr., and Nicholas M. Schenck, New York.

National and State finance committees of Tennessee turned over $24,000 to party headquarters, and the Arkansas finance committee gave $18,000. Donations of $5,000 each were made by the Mississippi, South Carolina, Virginia, Alabama, Connecticut and Florida State Democratic organizations.

Morgenthau Gives $5,000.

Other contributions included:

Clifton H. Scott, Little Rock, Ark., $18,000; the national and State Democratic finance committees of Tennessee, $24,000.

Louis S. Rosenstein, New York, $7,500; G. W. Stratton, Los Angeles, $5,000; Karl Hoblitzelle, Dallas, Tex., $7,500; Jacob Ruppert, New York City, $5,000; Henry Morgenthau, New York City, $5,000; William C. Bullitt, Paris, France, $6,000.

Among the contributors of $5,000 each were Cornelius V. Whitney, New York; F. J. Lewis, Chicago; E. A. Cudahy, Chicago; E. A. Cudahy, jr., Chicago; John F. Montgomery, Washington, D. C.; Nathan Straus, New York City; Percy S. Straus, New York; F. W. Burford, Dallas, Tex.; E. W. Burford, Dallas; Albert Hovell, New York; Margaret D. Biddle, Overbrook, Pa.; Joseph E. Davies, Washington, D. C.

Miscellaneous receipts since September 1 included $22,050 from the sale of advertising in the Democratic National Convention book, and $142,711 from the sale of copies.

The enrollment of "Roosevelt Nominators and Electors," most of whom paid $1 each, brought in $237,390 in the same period.

Debts Total $581,307.

The report showed unpaid obligations totaling $581,307, including $36,876 borrowed from Joseph B. Kennedy, of New York; $12,500 from M. L. Benedum, of Pittsburgh, and $10,000 from Robert B. Myers, of New York.

The National Committee's balance on hand October 21 was $84,531.

Two other Democratic organizations—the Congressional campaign committee and the national Congressional committee—both interested primarily in contests for the House of Representatives, reported contributions totaling $32,731 since September 1. Much of this money, however, was advanced by the Democratic National Committee.

Expenditures of $27,817 were listed by the two Congressional committees for the same period.

Statements filed by State divisions of the American Liberty League in Delaware, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, northern California, Massachusetts and Maryland showed total receipts up to October 19 of $42,893, including heavy contributions from national headquarters.

Expenditures of both major parties showed substantial outlays for radio time and publicity staffs. Their disbursements also included large sums for campaign emblems, traveling expenses of candidates, and postage.

Final financial reports of political organizations prior to the election are due October 29.

3,000 Hear Nice Attack New Deal

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Loveville, Md., Oct. 24.—A crowd of 3,000 persons gathered at a rally staged here today by St. Mary's County Republicans to hear Gov. Harry W. Nice and others attack the New Deal and urge the election of Gov. Alfred M. Landon.

Later Nice, addressing a Republican mass meeting at La Plata, accused hte Democratic Administration of failing to carry out its campaign pledges and explained why he could not fulfill one of his own.

The Republican governor, who had to abandon his campaign pledge of two-dollar automobile licenses, explaine dthe finances of the State made such a move impossible.

Mrs. Simpson, Friend of King Edward, May Elude Limelight After Divorce Action

Mrs. Wallis Simpson, whose divorce action heads the list of cases to be heard by Justice Sir John Anthony Hawke at Ipswich assizes, is pictured above in a variety of moods. Friends have said Mrs. Simpson may visit some British colony—possibly the West Indies or Bermuda—after the divorce case is heard, to escape public attention until King Edward's coronation next spring.

AAA to Dismiss 500 Employes At End of Year

Wheat Contract Workers Involved; Number May Go as High as 700.

Five to seven hundred Federal employes, now clearing up AAA wheat contracts, will be discharged about January 1, or shortly afterward, it was announced yesterday by T. Weed Harvey, assistant to the administrator in charge of business management.

The action will affect clerks and other minor employes, most of them without civil service status, now working in the old Postoffice Building in the office of the comptroller. Although soil conservation activities will provide employment for most of the comptroller's office staff, Harvey said a large number of lesser appointees could not be absorbed within the department.

Harvey also reported employes in the AAA had been reduced by roughly 1,400 since January 6, when the act was invalidated. The present force numbers 5,200. About 75 resignations have been turned in each month, most of them caused by offers of Federal work or in State agricultural administration positions.

Harvey also forecast wholesale reduction in AAA employes by January, 1938, when administration of soil conservation passes to the States. Although Harvey refused to estimate the number of employes who will be affected, the total has been placed at less than a third of the 6,600 employed the first of this year.

No difficulty in placing these former employes with State administrations 14 months from now, is predicted, but Harvey said questionnaires sent but to those affected revealed an overwhelming majority refuse to consider State appointments. One hundred questionnaires turned in Friday revealed only two willing to accept such appointments. Plans are being discussed for a new efficiency rating seven months from now, on which the dismissals would be based, he added.

The assistant to the administrator said his estimates regarding the 1938 personnel program were based solely on the present AAA soil conservation program. Enactment of crop insurance plans, or changes in the present program would invalidate present predictions.

Bar Leader Backs Roosevelt Policies

Prince Georges Courthouse, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—Declaring the Rooseveit record "full of accomplished facts justifying his re-election," Virginius R. Shackelford, of Orange, former president of the Virginia Bar Association, said here Friday he believed the "progressive people of the United States are not dumb enough to put the fate of measures in which they believe in the hands of the Republican Party."

Landon, he told a Prince Georges Democratic rally, "approves of practically every measure adopted by the President, but says that now he can do the job better than Mr. Roosevelt.

"Not questioning Mr. Landon's sincerity," Shackelford declared, "we must doubt his ability to do these things over the combined opposition of his running companions and the fundamental principles of reaction upon which the Republican Party relies."

Duke's Futile Hunt for Rich U. S. Girl Recalls Successes of Other Peers

Anxious to marry any woman with money, the Duke of Leinster recently admitted to a London bankruptcy court that he had squandered $700,000 courting rich American heiresses.

The duke thereby set a new record for candidness, and probably a new record for capital lost in this usually highly lucrative investment field, a check of international marriages showed yesterday.

Leinster, 44, Irish, and not without humor, told the court that after he had sold stock in himself, "negotiations" with two prominent heiresses here had collapsed, and that he finally had wed Mrs. Raffaele van Neck, of New York. She apparently was unable to extricate him from his fortune-hunting losses.

Others Have Done Well.

From time to time he was reported engaged to various prospects, including a few Goulds and Vanderbilts, and cinema actresses Gloria Swanson and Pola Negri. These women seem to have been hard customers, as no deals were closed, despite the lure of the duke's title, which is a No. 1 title as titles go, having some kind of a distant claim on the regency of England itself. King Edward VIII is reported unworried about the validity of Leinster's claim.

While Leinster may have failed, the long-time record shows that Europeans have done very well in the happy hunting grounds across the sea.

Among the first successes was that scored by Count Boni de Castellane, a bald and mustached Frenchman who frequented the Lonchamp racetrack and the Deauville Casino during the nineties. His marriage to Anna Gould in 1895 permitted him to realize his fondest dreams.

He became as conspicuous a figure as J. Pierpont Morgan or W. K. Vanderbilt in the American press, which did not take his self-assigned task of dazzling Paris with his elegant waistcoats, yachts, and stable of thoroughbreds very seriously.

$4,000,000 In 5 Years.

He built a famous marble palace in the Bois de Boulogne and assiduously set about enhancing the name he had already won in Paris—"the prince of extravagance." Some of the parties he gave for visiting nobility have never been surpassed to this day for pomp and display.

Then his wife grew tired of "receiving kings and emperors one day and bills and slaps in the face the next," as her lawyer told the court when divorce action was begun suddenly. The papers in the case charged the count with infidelity and extravagance. Accounts were produced to show he had squandered between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 in five years.

After frantically trying to settle the suit, the count then demanded an annuity from his wife, but the court rejected his plea and Boni was faced with the prospect of supporting himself. He wrote a book, "How I Discovered America," in which he related his unhappy experiences with American women.

Anna Gould two years later married his cousin, Prince de Sagan, in London.

The flashy success of Boni advertised the possibilities of the American field to gallant but moneyless Europeans. His story was chronicled the length and breadth of the continent and there was a great influx of titled gentlemen volunteering to swap their titles for cash. Many an American girl proudly accepted the proffered bargains and marched to the altar on what was purely a commercial perambulation.

Recent Followers.

Among the more conspicuous recent followers of an earlier precedent were the famous "marrying M'Divani boys, Serge, Alexis and David, all from a way-station kingdom in the wild mountains of southern Russia known as Georgia, where they all held the interesting titles of "prince." Some of the crueler critics of the M'Divanis have pointed out that anyone who owned a goat and a pair of shoes was entitled to be called prince in Georgia, but this is a rank calumny. Georgia has an accredited royalty which, though different from others, is nevertheless recognized as first class in Georgia.

A box score record of their marriages follows:

Serge:

No. 1—Pola Negri, married in France, 1927, divorced in Paris, 1931.

No. 2—Mary McCormick, Paris, 1931, divorced, Los Angeles, 1933.

No. 3—Princess Louis Astor Van Alen, Palm Beach, 1936.

Alexis:

No. 1—Louise Astor van Alen, 1931, divorced in Holland, 1932.

No. 2—Barbara Hutton in Paris, 1933, divorced in Reno, 1935.

David:

No. 1—Mae Murray, 1926, divorced, 1933.

Killed Last Winter.

Serge was killed while playing polo at Palm Beach last winter, shortly after his marriage to his sister-in-law, the aristocratic and wealthy Princess Van Alen. Alexis was killed shortly after his divorce from Barbara Hutton, in an auto crash in Spain, in 1935.

Barbara Hutton, heiress to two great American fortunes, the Post (breakfast food) millions and the Woolworth (five and ten cent store) millions, after cutting loose from Prince Alexis, experienced no trouble finding a titled successor, Count Kurt von Haugwitz-Reventlow, of Denmark.

The Danish count's financial status has been the subject of much argument. On one side there is the statement that he is independently wealthy and on the other the declaration that he is dependent on allowances from his brother and his wife. It does not particularly matter. He is reported happy with his $40,000,000 bride and their baby, born last winter. They were married 24 hours after Barbara received her divorce, and a near-riot took place outside their hotel in San Francisco as crowds rushed to see the heiress and her new spouse. They spent their honeymoon in the same hotel in which Barbara and Prince Alexis had honeymooned a few years before.

Wed Oil Heiress.

History and the social register are full of international romances, which usually have two important factors of money on the woman's side and a title on the man's. None is remembered better than that of Count Ludwig Salm von Hoogstraeten, generally known around Park Avenue and Palm Beach as plain "Salm," to Millicent Rogers, heiress of Standard Oil millions.

Millicent's father, Henry, was a powerful figure who stood beside John D. Rockefeller in the amassing of the oil fortune. He objected bitterly to Salm's enjoying the fortune he had won, but she married the count regardless. She next tried a South American, Arturo Peralta-Ramos, in 1927, after divorcing Count Salm. Peter Salm, her son, will inherit upwards of $15,000,000. She is heir to an equal amount.

Endless stories could be told about such marriages, naming countless principals, such as Swiss Riding Master Max Oser and Mathilda McCormick, Consuelo Vanderbilt and the Duke of Marlboro (which ended with the duke marrying Consuelo's chum, Gladys Deacon), and Prince Hohenloehe-Schillingsfurth.

But although they could all be recounted, it is doubtful if any of the itinerant titleholders would be as frank about his motives as the Duke of Leinster, whose attempts all failed and brought him only a $700,000 deficit.

Youth Struck With Bat During Ball Game Dies

Roanoke, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—Ralph Musick, 18, son of Mr. and Mrs. Talmage Musick, near here, died Thursday as a result of injuries, received on the playground of Big Mountain School Wednesday. He was struck on the head accidentally by a baseball bat in the hands of a cousin during a ball game.

The family physician was of the opinion a weak heart contributed to his death.

Veterans' Unit Planned To Foster Legislation

Chicago, Oct. 24 (AP).—A proposed united front among the Nation's major former service men's organizations, designed to mobilize all veterans in support of important legislative objectives, was planned today by national officers of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Commander in Chief Bernard W. Kearney, Gloversville, N. Y., announced that the National Council had instructed the organization's leaders to summon a conference in Washington of representatives of the American Legion, Disabled American Veterans and the United Spanish-American War Veterans on the opening day of the Seventy-fifth session of Congress in January.

Churches Plan 4-Day Mission For Next Month

Notables to Address Sessions Opening Here Sunday, November 22.

Plans for a huge four-day preaching mission, in which Protestant churches throughout the city will participate, now are under way, the Washington Federation of Churches reported yesterday.

The mission, similar to others conducted this fall in nine other large cities, will be held in Washington November 22 to 25, and will consist of mass meetings, seminars and conferences in which religious leaders of this country and from abroad will speak.

There will be more than 20 speakers, the Rev. W. L. Darby, executive secretary of the Federation of Churches, said. One of them is from India, two from Europe.

Bishop Henry W. Hobson, of Cincinnati, chairman of the Forward Movement, and Dr. George W. Truett, Dallas, Tex., president of the Baptist World Alliance, will address the opening mass meetings.

Others include: Dr. Harold Hough, dean of Drew Seminary, Madison, N. J.; Mrs. Grace Sloan Overton, author and lecturer, of Harlan, Ind.; Dr. Harry Lathrop Reed, president of Auburn Theological Seminary, Auburn, N. Y.; Dr. Walter E. Woodbury, of New York, superintendent of evangelism for the Northern Baptist Convention; Dr. Worth M. Tippy, of New York, secretary of the Department of Social Service of the Federal Council of Churches.

The meetings will be in various churches. Some of the time there will be sessions in several of the churches at once.

The Rev. Oscar F. Blcakwelder, pastor of the Lutheran Church of the Reformation, Washington, is one of the ministers taking part in the national mission.

Police Study Death Of Clerk in PWA

A death certificate was being withheld last night while police attempted to establish whether Harvey R. Pierce, 39, of 3026 Porter street northwest, fell or jumped from a Houston Hotel window Friday night.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald said he would not issue a certificate until the investigation was finished. Police said Pierce apparently leaped from the window with suicidal intent.

Pierce, a clerk for the Public Works Administration, died in Emergency Hospital a short time after his body hurtled from a seventh floor window and landed on E street between Ninth and Tenth streets northwest.

Death Breaks Chain Of Six Generations

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Grafton, W. Va., Oct. 24.—The death of Mrs. Malinda Knight, 89, of Flemington, Thursday, broke a chain of six living generations. Mrs. Knight left 39 living descendants, including one daughter, five grandchildren, 25 great-grandchildren, two great-great-grandchildren and six great-great-great grandchildren. She was the mother of six children.

Poultrymen Re-elect Virginia State Staff

Kilmarnock, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—The ninth annual convention of the Virginia Poultry Federation concluded its sessions here Friday with the re-election of officers of the organization and discussions of poultrymen's problems.

Officers re-elected were C. W. Wampler, of Harrisonburg, president; E. C. Vosbury, of Fairfax, vice president, and H. L. Moore, of Blacksburg, secretary-tressurer.

Dr. Ballou Cites Overcrowding In Kemp Reply

Unrestricted Admission of Pupils Will Curtail School Program.

Unrestricted admission of children of nonresident parents to District public schools will result in a "serious curtailment of the educational program," Dr. Frank W. Ballou superintendent of schools, declared yesterday in an amended answer to the petition of Lois Kemp, 11, of Clarendon, Va., that she be admitted to Gordon Junior High School.

The amended answer was the District Corporation Counsel's reply to the decision of Justice Jennings Bailey, of District Court, that all children of parents employed in the District of Columbia are entitled to free public education in the District. The amended answer amplifies the court's record as the case goes to the Court of Appeals.

School officials insist the law relative to the admission of nonresident pupils is "permissive," not "mandatory." Lois Kemp, through her father, John S. Kemp, a PWA official employed in the District, petitioned the court for a writ of mandamus compelling the superintendent to admit her to Gordon Junior High School. Justice Bailey upheld the petition last Monday.

Dr. Ballou in his amended answer gave figures showing the crowded condition of the schools. He said an enrollment of 58,711 in 1920 had grown to 76,039 by 1930, and today stood at 92,781 pupils. This growth has not only taxed classroom facilities, but has given teachers too heavy a burden for proper instruction. The ratio, he said, should be not more than 26 pupils for each teacher. Actually there are 30.1 pupils for each teacher.

Junior and senior high schools are especially crowded. The capacity of the District's 12 white junior high schools is 11,012. This year, Dr. Ballou reported, 12,983 boys and girls in these schools.

No children of nonresident parents have been admitted to junior high schools this year.

The superintendent said that requiring him to admit to the public schools all children of nonresident parents will "deprive the children of resident parents of the proper facilities of the public school system."

New York Maps Drive On 'Bootlegged' Coal

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—A Conference of State and local officials mapped a drive today to keep out of New York City shipments of coal they said was mined illegally in Pennsylvania's anthracite region.

Assistant District Attorney John C. McDermott, of New York County, who said 5,000 tons of the coal dug by unhired miners poured daily into Eastern cities, disclosed that a city ordinance already had been drawn here to make it a criminal offense to bring anthracite into the city without a certificate of origin.

Guardsmen Will Help Police To Halt Halloween Rowdyism

Outlying residential areas will be better policed on Halloween Saturday night than in previous years, it was disclosed yesterday, as a result of an arrangement made yesterday by Thomas E. Lodge, vice chairman of the civic committee preparing for the Halloween parade.

With the consent of Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and the concurrence of Col. John W. Oehmann, the District National Guard has agreed to furnish volunteers to do patrol duty along the line of the parade, thus leaving the majority of the police on duty in the precincts.

Last year rowdies did damage of $900 alone to street lights and other equipment of the Potomac Electric Power Co. as the police were pulled in from the precincts to handle the crowds downtown. Thousands of dollars worth of damage was done to private property.

Hazen said that there will be an ample police force on hand in the downtown area during the parade, but that National Guardsmen will assist in holding back crowds and in directing traffic.

It is expected that between 100 and 150 National Guardsmen will volunteer for the service.

'Death-per-Car' Data Rate D. C. As a 'Safe' City

Traffic Survey Puts Capital Low on List; Van Duzer Assails 'Basis.'

Washington has the lowest traffic death rate of any of the larger cities in the country, a survey of figures based on the number of automobile registrations during the last year showed.

Previously, the District accident fatality rate has been figured on the city's total population in relation to the number of deaths. Under this system, Washington is far behind in the "safest city" race.

At present, a total of 190,000 automobiles are registered in the District. This figure, according to Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, probably will reach 200,000 before the end of the year.

Tabulations during the 12-month period ended September 31, showed there was one traffic fatality to every 2,288 registered autos. Thus far this year, 70 persons have been killed in crashes. Last year at this time, 90 deaths had been recorded and two years ago, 100.

Although encouraged by the decrease in local accident deaths, Van Duzer scored the system of computing fatality rates by comparing deaths with registration figures.

"If the death rate is figured purely on the basis of auto registrations," he said, "it is impossible to obtain a true picture of conditions. The pedestrian, a major factor in the accident toll, must be considered."

He pointed out, however, that Washington's death rate is compiled from figures in the metropolitan area only. The influx of cars and motorists from nearby sections of Maryland and Virginia is not considered.

Meanwhile, Van Duzer's office announced that first applications for 1937 license plates will be mailed Tuesday.

Van Duzer warned motorists that if they haven't received tag applications by November 12, immediate steps should be taken to learn the reason.

A total of 10,000 traffic violation warrants are still outstanding against local drivers. Unless collateral is deposited on these, plates will not be issued, police warned.

8,000 to March In Parade Today Of Church Unit

Between 8,000 and 10,000 Washington Catholics will march down Constitution avenue this afternoon in a demonstration celebrating the feast of Christ the King. The parade will move to the Washington Monument grounds, where a pontifical benediction will be celebrated in the Sylvan Theater.

The celebration is one observed on the last Sunday of October, and the impressive demonstration today will be staged by the Washington Holy Name Society.

Church dignitaries will take part in the celebration. Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of Baltimore, will ride at the head of the procession, and the Right Rev. Joseph Corrigan, rector of Catholic University, will preach the sermon.

Starts at 2 O'clock.

The parade will start from Sixth street and Constitution avenue at 2 o'clock, William Collins, president of the society, said last night.

Inspector Edward J. Kelly, of the Metropolitan Police, will head the parade, and uniformed police, under Inspector Maurice J. Collins, will act as escort.

Riding with Archbishop Curley will be the Rev. Michael Riordan, dean of spiritual directors of Holy Name Societies in the Capital, and Mgr. Eugene Connelly, who recently resigned as spiritual director of the Washington unit of Holy Name Societies.

The Rev. Joseph Moran, the present spiritual director, and President Collins will head the corps of marchers.

Students to March.

Delegations from all societies in the city will be represented. There will be marching groups from the several religious orders at Catholic University, and one unit will be filled by Catholic University students.

Representatives of the Dominican Order wil lhave a prominent place in the parade. This order founded the Holy Name Society more than 600 years ago.

Today's celebration of the feast of Christ the King is the largest staged in Washington since 1924, when the national convention of Holy Name Societies was held here.

The ceremonies in the Sylvan Theater will be as colorful as the parade. The noted Sulpician Seminary choir will be there to furnish music.

Civil Service Unit Rules U. S. Agents Can Retire at 62

Department of Justice agents who survive gunfire of public enemies to reach the age of 62 are entitled to retire, the Civil Service Commission decided this week.

The commission's decision, effective October 31, will result in immediate retirement of eight agents, including D. H. Dickason, in charge of the Bureau of Investigation office at Butte, Mont.; Leon Bone, E. B. Montgomery, Charles Petrovitski, L. T. Plummer, J. C. Rider, J. M. Toller and A. E. Radert.

All of the veteran agents, the Justice Department said, have "excellent records." Civil Service regulations prescribe 70 as the retirement age for most Civil Service employes. Those with particularly dangerous or arduous jobs are retired earlier.

The minimum pay for retiring agents with 30 years' service is $1,200.

In requesting a lower retirement age for its agents, Justice Department officials cited dozens of cases in which agents risked their lives. Among captures mentioned were those of Alvin Karpis, John Dillinger, Harry Campbell, Charles (Pretty Boy) Floyd, "Machine Gun" Kelly and Kate (Mom) Barker and her son, Fred.

District Knights Templar Pass in Review

2 Dairies Cite Harm in Move To Boost Milk

Briefs Contend Plan Would Reduce Consumption; Commission Defied.

In two briefs filed yesterday with the AAA, the Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase Dairy, Washington's largest milk distributor, and Arlington Farms Dairy threw their weight against the four-cent-a-gallon price increase in milk asked by the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers' Association.

Both dairies asserted that farmers supplying milk to Washington are better paid than producers in any other area.

In the brief filed by Chestnut Farms, it was stated that "an increase in price will of necessity diminish milk consumption and, as a whole, the milk industry will be worse off because of the lesser amount consumed."

It has been said by some distributors that if the increase in price is allowed the producers, the cost will be passed along to the consumer.

Chestnut Farms laid responsibility with the Milk Producers Association for the fear expressed by B. B. Derrick, secretary of the association, that a milk shortage was threatened.

Meanwhile, Hazel's Dairy, one of three large distributing units in the Arlington-Alexandria area, yesterday hurled defiance at the Virginia Milk Commission. It announced that it would revert to its regular price of 11 cents a quart "until the commission's regulations have been developed to a point where they will be binding on all retailers in this area."

Officials of the dairy complained that other distributors in the area were not at present abiding by the price regulations of the commission.

The dairy had earlier in the week distributed circulars to its customers announcing that its milk price was being raised from 11 to 13 cents.

Elena de Sayn Wins Praise at Concert

Elena de Sayn, with Dorothy Paul as her coadjutor, gave a violin recital last evening in the music room of the Grafton Hotel, including in her program the Bach suite in E minor, the Franck sonata, and pieces by Debussy and the late William Woodin.

In her reading of Bach, she evinced a musicianly feeling for style and perceptive care for the accents of phrasing. Her bowing was firm, her fingering had technical ease, and her tone was rounded and clear. There were a few faults of intonation on the E string, and the color of her tone was somewhat pallid, although it increased in warmth in the final gigue.

Her best playing of the evening was done in the Franck sonata which was suffused with emotional sincerity. In her prefatory remark that she considered this sonata to be an autobiography, she gave the clew to the respect with which she read the work. Not only the sonata but the symphony and other works of Franck's as well are autobiographical, inasmuch as they reveal the spirituality of a man who was pure of heart and noble of mind.

Miss De Sayn dealt very creditably with the first three movements, disclosing a genuine appreciation of their rich content. The final movement did not go so well, but it seldom does in anyone's hands, for the tessitura of the melodic line, once the canon has been passed, is too high. That soaring exultation needs a choir of violins to be effective.

Funeral Tomorrow For Miss Bryarly

Funeral services for Miss Katharine Lee Bryarly, Volunteer Pilgrim Aide at Washington Cathedral, will be held at 9:30 a. m. tomorrow in the Chapel of the Resurrection at the Cathedral with Canon Raymond L. Wolven, chaplain to Bishop Freeman, officiating. Burial will be in Winchester, Va., at 2 p. m.

Miss Bryarly died Friday at her home in Hammond Court, Thirtieth and Q streets northwest.

Born in Winchester, Va., Miss Bryarly had lived in Washington for the past 22 years. She was engaged in Red Cross work here during the World War.

She was a charter member of the Volunteer Pilgrim Aides, which Bishop Freeman organized three years ago to welcome visitors to the cathedral.

Washington Commandery No. 1 Wins Knights Templar Event

Unit Captures First Prize in Class A March at Annual Field Day Exercises in McKinley High School Gymnasium.

Stepping smartly as they passed in review, Washington Commandery, No. 1, Knights Templar, won first prize in Class A in the autumn field day exercises of the organization in the McKinley High School gymnasium last night. The winners scored 943 points.

Second prize in the competition for this group was won by Columbia Commandery, No. 2, with 924 points.

In Class B, De Molay Commandery, No. 4, captured first honors, with Orient, No. 5, second. In this class were units having fewer than 24 marchers in line.

Music furnished by the Grotto Band. Sir Knight Arthur Shaw, commander, was grand marshal.

A crowd of 1,500 men and women watched the Knights Templar, colorfully arrayed in their uniforms and their sweeping white plumes, as they swept by the reviewing stand.

Four hundred Sir Knights from all the District commanderies participated.

D.C. Man Honored By Junior Chamber

Special Dispatch to The Post.

St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 24.—Henry Reining, jr., of Washington, was appointed chairman of the newly-created public service standards committee of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce at a meeting of directors here today.

As its first official act, the committee asked junior chambers to learn from candidates in the coming election their attitudes toward merit systems for Government personnel.

Reining, a member of the Washington Junior Chamber of Commerce, is educational director of the National Institute of Public Affairs. He is a former teacher at Princeton and the University of Southern California.

Another member of the Washington Junior Chamber, Otis T. Wingo, has been taking part in the meetings.

Bold Thieves Take Track Equipment; Cars May Be Next

It might be well to warn the District police to keep a close watch on the Capitol building and other immovable objects after an episode yesterday.

Sewer covers, steel guard rails, steel slot rail joints and several hundred tons of other equipment has been stolen from a lot at Thirty-sixth and M streets northwest, it was reported yesterday.

The property, track equipment for Capital Transit Co., was reported stolen by Edwin P. Gouch, engineer for the utility. He said the metal is valued at $1,548.

Police sent a lookout for four colored men in a horse drawn cart after several of the lighter pieces were sold to a junk dealer.

Union Mission Reports Rising Charity Needs

Increased Calls at Station Noted at Anniversary Banquet of Board.

The Central Union Mission provided 133,800 free meals and 51,532 lodgings free during the 12-month period ending September 30, John S. Bennett, superintendent, reported last night at the fifty-second anniversary banquet of the mission's board of directors in Hotel Mayflower.

These figures, it was pointed out, show the increase in the mission's work over the preceding year when 99,584 free meals were served and 38,665 lodgings provided.

Also, for the last 12-month period reported there was a mission chapel attendance of 63,095 in comparison with 50,310 the year before.

Reports on the work of the Children's Emergency Home and Camp Bennett, also run by the mission, were made by Mrs. Bennett.

Dr. William S. Abernethy, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, spoke at the banquet. A feature of the occasion was radio talks by two members of the mission's board.

The talks, in the form of answers to questions asked them by E. H. DeGroot, jr., president of the board, were by James Trimble, vice president, and Wilbur LaRoe, jr. Music was furnished by the Mission Glee Club, led by Homer Rodeheaver.

Manor Park Slates Pre-election Rally

Arrangements for a street parade in Manor Park on election eve, November 2, followed by a nonpartisan rally at 8:30 p. m. in Whittier School, to be addressed by Judge Robert E. Mattingly, were announced yesterday.

The rally will be sponsored by Manor Park Citizens Association, of which Ernest H. Pullman, 201 Sheridan street northwest, is president. Music will be furnished by the Drum and Bugle Corps of Fort Stevens Post, American Legion.

The parade will form at 6218 Third street, where the assocation was organized 13 years ago. Charles H. Howard, first vice president, will be marshal.

Sager's Survey Of Street Cars Nearing Finish

Elgen Awaits Reply on Proposal for Program of Replacement.

Fred A. Sager, chief engineer of the Public Utilities Commission, is completing a survey of Capital Transit Co. street cars, it was disclosed yesterday, as Riley E. Elgen, chairman, awaited a reply to his suggestion that the company submit a 5-year program for replacing obsolete equipment. For several months Sager has been inspecting the rolling stock. His report will give the commission its first authentic information on many street cars which, "on the books" have outlined their usefulness.

E. D. Merrill, vice president and general manager of the transit company, yesterday declined to comment on Elgen's proposal, beyond stating the company is interested in improving its service and is working on a plan of rehabilitation for 1937.

Elgen explained he is not committed to any definite number of car replacements each year, despite his suggestion that 50 new trolleys might be put into service annually, with the first group appearing before the middle of next year.

43 Beyond Age.

He said he arrived at the figure by noting that 43 street cars still in service have passed the depreciation reserve period and that a few others will reach that stage within the next few months.

The commission, however, has no authority to order obsolete cars taken out of service unless they are menaces to public health or safety.

Elgen said he has an open mind as to the number of such cars that should be replaced within the next year or five years. He does want a program drafted, however.

No Decision on Type.

Neither Elgen nor the commission has adopted any attitude as to whether the new cars should be adapted for one-man or two-man operation, as they consider that a matter to be decided at a later date.

It is believed the Capital Transit Company will make any offers for purchase of new equipment conditional upon the further spread of the one-man system.

During the public hearing preliminary to the one-man order issued in late summer the transit company indicated it intends to convert the entire system to one-man operation eventually. The commission, recognizing this, in its order specified that all further purchases of one-man cars must be of a type of trolley at least equal to the President's conference cars.

Y. W. to Dedicate Gift Annex Today

The eight-story Y. W. C. A. annex at 1011 Seventeenth street northwest will be formally opened and dedicated at 3 p. m. today, Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, chairman of the dedicatory committee, announced yesterday.

Mrs. Henry Alvah Strong will present her gift to Mrs. Albert W. Atwood, president of the local association. Mrs. Wilson Compton, finance chairman and a member of the building committee, will report.

The exercises will be in the parlors of the new building, which accommodates 200 young women. Seven rooms are available for emergency sleeping quarters. There are large and small parlors, a patio, game room, kitchenettes, roof garden, music rooms and other provisions for the residents' comfort.

Kentucky to Keep Registries Open

A recent provision of the Kentucky election commission has made it possible for Kentucky residents who are Government employes here to register and vote in Kentucky on election day, it was announced yesterday.

The Kentucky Democratic Club of Washington is running a special train to Kentucky Saturday to carry residents of that State to the polls. The train leaves Union Station at 6 p. m. and will continue to Louisville.

The Kentucky Democratic Club will meet at 8 p. m. Wednesday to discuss plans for the trip.

Conception Students Plan Breakfast Party

A Communion breakfast at Sholl's G street restaurant this morning will open the 1936-37 season of the Immaculate Conception Social Club. The group will attend 8:15 mass.

Short talks and a discussion of the season's plans will feature the gathering. The Rev. Joseph Gehdra is spiritual adviser of the club.

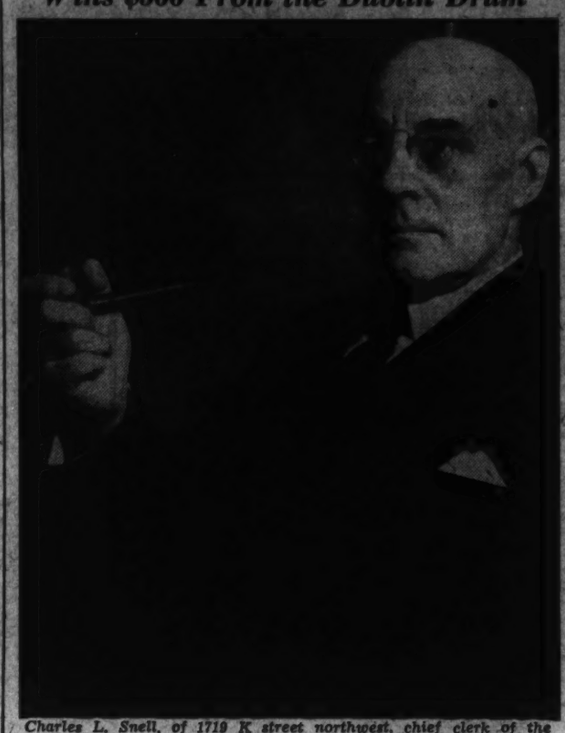
New WPA Paper Dedicates Issue To Highest Court

The second issue of Work, organ of the District Works Progress Administration, appeared yesterday with a new array of contributors and a cover dedication to the United States Supreme Court under the heading, "Equal Justice Under Law."

George E. Allen, District WPA administrator, led the issue with an article entitled "WPA Girds for the Winter," in which he predicted that the WPA policy "of providing useful work for persons actually in need in the District of Columbia will be continued during the winter."

Other contributors include Rexford G. Tugwell, Resettlement Administration head, who discusses the Greenbelt Subdivision; Col. Dan I. Sultan, Engineer Commissioner, on Federal aid projects to reduce pollution in the Potomac river; Elwood Street, director of public welfare, on British methods of handling unemployment, and James Ring, administrative assistant of the Alley Dwelling Authority, on alley slum clearance achievements.

Wins $500 From the Dublin Drum



Charles L. Snell, of 1719 K street northwest, chief clerk of the Marine Corps, who was one of ten Washingtonians winning $500 consolation prizes in the Irish Sweepstakes drawing yesterday.

Ten Washingtonians Awarded $500 Irish Sweepstakes Prizes

Retired Octogenarian, U. S. Messenger Who Drives Taxi on Side Among Capital Winners of Consolation Money in Cambridgeshire Race.

Five-hundred-dollar consolation prizes in the Irish Sweepstakes drawing came yesterday to ten Washingtonians, including a retired octogenarian and a Federal messenger who drives a taxicab on the side because he is the sole support of a wife, three children and a mother-in-law.

Few of the lucky 10 were identified because the majority preferred to hide behind pseudonyms like "Brick Top," "One Alone" and "Unlucky Girls."

Charles L. Snell, chief clerk of the Marine Corps, was one of those who gave his full name and address in buying his sweepstakes ticket. He lives at 1719 K street northwest.

"I bought it from a beautiful Irish girl," he said. "How could I lose?"

He thinks he'll set aside a portion of his winnings for travel, earmark a sum for tax payments and resubscribe to The Washington Post.

Upon being notified his name was among the hundreds plucked yesterday from the Dublin drum in the consolation drawing, 84-year-old Frank T. Razey, 647 H street northeast, celebrated by taking his wife to Laurel for the races. He is a retired employe of the Government Printing Office.

Jones Is Identified.

Still another $500 prize winner was one "William K. Jones, 23 street northwest, Washington."

A search through the telephone and city directories failed to turn up a William K. Jones on Twenty-third or any other street but did produce William Campbell Jones, who lives at 820 Twenty-third street northwest.

And this Mr. Jones held a ticket on the right race—the Cambridgeshire, to be run next Wednesday at Newmarket, England—and issued by the Irish Hospitals!

He is both a Commerce Department messenger and a taxicab driver.

"Yes, indeed," he sputtered, "I got three little ones, a wife and a mother-in-law. I hope this is me—I mean I hope I'm William K. Jones—aw, you know what I mean."

The other local fortunates, whose anonymity was assured by incomplete addresses or distinctive names, were:

C. Buchanan, Fourteenth street northwest.

"Stung Again" Included.

"Stung Again," Fifteenth street northwest.

"Brick Top," First place northwest.

"Mary," Ontario place.

"One Alone," E. S. E.

"Unlucky Girls," Eighteenth street northwest.

Another was Paul W. Dutman, G street northeast. A check on directories disclosed no such name, however.

A total of 1,600 consolation prizes was drawn yesterday, 752 of them going to ticket holders in the United States. Americans also received five of the residual awards, worth $4,480 each.

Distribution of $8,044,825 in prize money hinges on outcome of the Cambridgeshire race, said an Associated Press dispatch from Dublin.

2 Firemen Hurt In Montgomery Rally Contest

Association Raises Question of Banning Events After Accident.

Shortly after two Kensington volunteer firemen had been injured in a hook-up contest, the sixth annual convention of the Montgomery County Association of Volunteer Firemen last night referred to member departments the question of eliminating association-sponsored contests.

Robert Gooding, 18, suffered a severe injury to his eye and his brother, Preston Gooding, 25, a sprained ankle when a nozzle escaped the hands of a part of their team and struck them. They were treated at Washington Sanitarium and Hospital.

J. Thomas Kennedy, of Silver Spring, was elected president of the association, defeating Spencer J. H. Brown, of Sandy Spring by a narrow margin. Robert P. Dunlop, of Chevy Chase was re-elected secretary-treasurer. The convention was addressed last night by J. Millard Tawes, of Crisfield, president of the Maryland State Firemen's Association, and by Battalion Chief Edward O'Connor, of Washington.

Vote in January.

The resolution which would do away with contests because of the danger to competing firemen and spectators was introduced by George F. Hamilton, of Silver Spring. The question will be voted on at the quarterly meeting of the association in January.

The United States Fire Engine Co. No. 3 of Frederick, Md., was awarded first prize for best appearance in the parade, which was held jointly by the firemen and the Silver Spring Business Men's Association. Cottage City Truck Co. won honorable mention.

Hereford, Baltimore County, won the prize for being the company from the farthest distance.

The Silver Spring Volunteer Fire Department won the Charlotte Bryson Randall Memorial Trophy donated by Bernard J. Cassell, of Chevy Chase, her brother, for the Montgomery County company making the best appearance.

Wins Pumper Trophy.

Gaithersburg-Washington Grove Volunteer Fire Department won the second leg on the Randall Pumper Trophy, with Glen Echo second and Chevy Chase third.

Glen Echo won the Evening Star Pumper Trophy, with Chevy Chase second and Kensington third.

Judges of the parade and contests were Battalion Chief Robert S. Tate and Capt. William C. Brust, both of Baltimore, and Capts. A. J. Lipske, Lieut. F. A. Biondi and Sergt. A. H. Schwenk of the District of Columbia Fire Department.

Jewish Dinner Set As School Benefit

The Brotherhood and Sisterhood of the Washington Hebrew Congregation will give a dinner dance at the Hotel Mayflower Tuesday evening, November 3, to raise funds for a new Sabbath school.

The modernizing work now being completed will, according to Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, give Washington Jewry one of the most advanced systems of Sabbath school in the United States. Instead of being segregated into graded classes, the children will be divided into groups named after the tribes of Israel. Courses in arts and crafts and in dramatics will be offered.

Co-chairmen of the dinner dance committee are Mrs. Fedora J. Lewis and Sidney Lust. Tickets for the affair may be procured from Burnett Baer, 5425 Connecticut avenue northwest.

Welfare Board Backs Director In Relief Plea

Report Asks Funds to Care for Employables Not on WPA Rolls.

The Board of Public Welfare yesterday backed up Elwood Street, welfare director, in his plea for an appropriation to care for destitute employables barred from direct relief and unable to get WPA assignments.

In its annual report to the District Commissioners, submitted in advance of a public meeting Tuesday night in the Government Auditorium, the board pointed out that it had carried out a pledge of reducing unemployment relief expenditures during the past fiscal year. This was accomplished by transferring thousands of cases from work relief to WPA jobs.

"Sufficient money was not available in spite of a supplementary relief appropriation amounting to $350,000 to care for all the employable cases who could not be assigned to WPA jobs," the board said.

10,000 Destitute.

"By the end of the fiscal year the Public Assistance Division was caring only for those cases of relief in which there was no employable person. This reduction resulted in much hardship.

"It is the opinion of the board of public welfare that sufficient relief funds should be provided to care for the needs, not only of unemployable persons but also of employable persons who for good reasons cannot find work and who cannot be assigned to Governmental work programs."

Street sometime ago estimated there are 10,000 persons or about 3,000 cases of employables who are not receiving Government aid though destitute. The cost of providing relief for this class, he said, would be about $1,000,000 a year.

Research Staff Asked.

The welfare board also recommended a Congressional appropriation for a competent research staff to investigate interlocking causes of dependency, disease, delinquency and defectiveness and prepare recommendations to diminish the load upon the taxpayers and improve services to these groups of people.

The report cited 21 improvements effected during the year by the welfare board and concluded with a tribute to District WPA for its aid to the welfare department and to the commissioners for their cooperation in maintaining the merit system in all appointments.

The program for the public meeting Tuesday night, beginning at 8 o'clock, includes reading of the report by Street, an address by Health Officer George C. Ruhland and musical selections by the band of the National Training School for Boys.

Exhibits of the work of the District welfare institutions will be on display all day Tuesday and until Wednesday in the Government Auditorium, on Constitution avenue between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets.

Samuel to Lecture At Forum Tonight

A capacity attendance is expected tonight at the Jewish Community Center to hear Maurice Samuel, author and lecturer, and authority on world Jewish affairs, open the winter program of the National Jewish Forum, commencing at 8:15.

Samuel will be presented by Simon Hirshman, chairman of the center's educational committee.

Returning only last week from a tour of Europe, the Jewish speaker will present his first report to Jews in this country on conditions in Palestine. Prior to his visit to Palestine, Samuel spent four months in South Africa.

The educational committee membership includes Mrs. I. Kahn, Isidore Hershfield, David Weiner, Jeanne Porton, Abe Shefferman, L. V. Freudberg, Judge Nathan Cayton, Mrs. H. Bernton, Louis Ottenberg, Dr. Abram Simon, Joel Wolfsohn, Mrs. William Bralove, Mrs. Morris Cafritz and Mrs. A. L. Dembitz.

Mrs. M.A. Anderson Funeral Tomorrow

Mrs. Mary A. Anderson, 51, wife of John F. Anderson, a representative of the International Association of Machinists, died yesterday at her home, 333 Tennessee avenue northeast.

Born in Chester, Ill., Mrs. Anderson had lived in Washington 20 years. She was a member of Centennial chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, and of the Machinists' Union Auxiliary.

Surviving, besides her husband, are two daughters, Clarice and Loretta Anderson; a son, Byron Anderson, and three brothers, Omar and Oscar Hampton, of East St. Louis, Ill., and Walter Hampton, of Salt Lake City.

Funeral services will be held at her home at 2 p. m. tomorrow. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Narcotic Charges Hold 4 for Jury

Four Chinese were held for the grand jury yesterday on charges of violating the Harrison narcotic act and the import and export acts when they were arraigned before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage.

Commissioner Turnage ordered Lee Wing, 44, held under $3,000, while Tip Wong, 40, Ging Mark, 29, and Chin Han, 35, were placed under bail of $2,000 each.

The men were arrested Thursday by Federal agents and local detectives in the 400 block H street northwest. Raiding officers said they broke into the place with a warrant and discovered a large supply of narcotics, opium pipes and heaters.

All of the men except Han said they are laundrymen and live at the H street address. Han, a merchant, told police he lived in New York City.

Kiwanis to Honor Dr. C.R.C. Johnson

Organization of a boys and girls club to honor the memory of the late Dr. C. R. C. Johnson was announced Friday at the twelfth anniversary of the Manassas (Va.) Kiwanis Club, of which Dr. Johnson was president in 1931. The proposed club will "create interesting projects for the boys and girls of Manassas and Prince William County to perform under supervision of the Manassas Kiwanis Club as a means of making youth of these communities more useful citizens."

Members of Washington Kiwanis Club who attended the anniversary, program were Harry G. Kimball, Charles W. Pimper, Jo V. Morgan and Edwin F. Hill. The Alexandria club was represented by Harry F. Kennedy, Walter Pierpont, David C. Book and Irving Diener.

Druggist Says Skeleton Is That Of Missing Son

Believes, However, Youth Lost 11 Months Did Not Kill Self.

By the Associated Press.

Morristown, N. J., Oct. 24.—Dr. Lawrence Upjohn, of Kalamazoo, Mich., head of the large pharmaceutical supply company bearing his name, late today identified a skeleton found on Sparta Mountain as that of his 19-year-old son, Allan.

The recognition of dental work, clothes and a spinal injury ended search for the boy which his father had been making since he disappeared last Thanksgiving. The trail had led to Detroit, to Chicago, to Newark, N. J., to Jacksonville, Fla. Then it was lost.

A mushroom hunter found the clothed skeleton in the woods near Sparta on October 6. State police traced a laundry mark and learned it was that of the Upjohns when they lived in East Orange five years ago. A New Jersey dentist described the dental work and a Michigan dentist recognized it. The father, his wife, and another son, Dr. E. L. Upjohn, came East.

The senior Upjohn conceded that the police were correct in theorizing a bullet wound through the skull of the skeleton was self-inflicted, but he insisted Allan was not the type who would commit suicide.

Flocks of the Capital's Starlings Diminish With City's Noises Too Tough on Their Nerves

Bird-Life Authority Believes Unwelcome Visitors 'Couldn't Take It.'

Those chattering, jabbering, jittery mongrels of the heavens, the starlings, are diminishing in Washington's metropolitan area because they "can't take it."

This is the theory of Harry Allard, plant and soil expert of the Department of Agriculture, who makes the study of birds and wild life his hobby, and is recognized as a national authority in this field.

When, in seasons immediately past, noise devices, such as tin cans filled with clattering stones and hand klaxons, were used to drive the starlings from District trees and even the Capitol itself, the effect was more or less permanent on the starlings' nerves.

And when the gaudy balloons of Clifford Lanham's legions went soaring up the light poles and the telegraph and telephone poles, it was just too much!

"I think the starlings have been frightened away," said Allard yesterday.

Starlings always have been welcome at Allard's private bird sanctuary in the spacious lawn of his home at 3000 Seventh street north, Lyon Park, Va.

He has found these much-discussed feathered creatures a mass of contradictions.

They are at the same time the Communists and the "Babbitts" of the bird kingdom.

Communists, he points out, because they are extremely gregarious, and seem to share and share alike. Complete collectivists, according to Allard, with little or no apparent desire to hoard things for themselves. Ambitionless wanderers of the skies, with "monkey see, monkey do" complexes.

"Babbitts," he asserts, because they are the most domestic of birds. Every starling mother is an expert dietitian, and a regular schedule of feeding tiny insects to the young, and progressing up the scale to very large beetles just before they learn to fly, is maintained.

HARRY A. ALLARD.

Father starling not only provides, but does the chores around the nest. When the mother is gone, he keeps the infants warm and feeds them. He has even been known to sit upon the eggs, about to hatch, when his wife has gone calling in some other tree.

Like more aristocratic birds, starlings are extremely sensitive to sunrise and dawn.

It is only when they are surrounded by the bright, winking lights of the city that they keep bad hours and set up their clamor while the townsfolk curse them and seek amusement or try to sleep.

Allard has gotten up at dawn no end to observe the habits of all birds upon arising, except, of course, the wise old owl, who keeps morning newspaper hours, and the nightingale, who slumbers in the sun and sings in the starlight.

He has discovered, among other things, that birds are "grouchier" at dawn, when they awaken, than at any other time. Then their cries are angry and frequent—staccatto and shrill.

He has observed the habits of his winged visitors and found them not so vastly different from the human scheme. Presumably the morning worm supplants the morning coffee and cigarette for most birds.

Unlike the Ubiquitous Sparrow, They Found Life Too Complex.

Weyerhaeuser Investigators Hold Mahan Aid

Edward Fliss Is Captured in Hunt for $40,000 of Ransom Funds.

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, Oct. 24.—Justice Department agents, still trailing an unrecovered $40,000 from the $200,000 George Weyerhaeuser ransom, have announced the arrest here of Edward Fliss, 30, former associate of William Mahan, kidnaper of the young timber fortune heir.

The United States District Attorney at Tacoma, Wash., said he would be charged with conspiracy to exchange Weyerhaeuser ransom money.

Fliss, alias Frank Lane, was one of the three men convicted in 1929 of kidnaping the late Tacoma Lieutenant Governor, W. B. Kinne.

He was captured last night in a hotel not far from where Mahan was arrested five months ago. Mahan is serving a life sentence in the Weyerhaeuser kidnaping.

Federal agents here announced the Fliss arrest only after it was made public in Washington by J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. They declined to discuss details.

Fliss, originally sentenced to serve 11 to 25 years for kidnaping Kinne, was pardoned July 23, 1934. Justice Agents said he was serving a jail sentence for vagrancy when the Weyerhaeuser boy was kidnaped near his Tacoma home on June 4, 1935.

Former Post Aid Sees Solution Of Mayan Mystery of Centuries

Dr. William Kennedy, Now of Pan-American University, Believes He Has Key to Read Inscriptions That Tell Origin of Earliest Americans.

Habits and the history of America's earliest inhabitants will no longer be a mystery if a prediction of Dr. William A. Kennedy comes true.

The president of the Pan-American University at Lima, Peru, believes he has discovered a lead that will give him a key to the Mayan hieroglyphics which, when deciphered, will reveal the origin and customs of Indians who established mighty empires in the western hemisphere long before the days of the Spanish conquistadores.

"There is every indication that the Mayan Empire was started by peoples migrating to the American continent from Java," Kennedy stated recently. "Ancient Buddha temples I explored and studied in Java were ornamented with the same figures—crocodiles with mouths agape and a human head traced within—as are many of the second Mayan Empire ruins."

If Dr. Kennedy actually finds a key to the hieroglyphics that decorate many Mayan relics, he will solve a mystery that has fascinated him for many a number of years and that finally took him to Peru in 1935 to establish the university which he now heads and which is supported by 15 Latin-American republics.

Preceding his departure for Peru, he was financial editor of The Washington Post. He drifted into newspaper work after being for many years an employe of an English banking firm. In the latter capacity, he traveled widely and spent some time in Asia, where he discovered there is a definite connection between Mayan culture and ancient Javan civilization. Making an exhaustive study of this subject, he learned that many tropical types of ornamentation on Mayan ruins are identical with those that characterize the art of Javan antiquities.

A native of Kentucky, Dr. Kennedy was educated in this country before he went to England and subsequently became a world traveler. During the World War he returned to America and entered journalistic work. In the early days of 1931, he came to Washington to join the staff of The Post.

His associates soon discovered that this quiet man who went about his business methodically and discharged it efficiently had an amazing fund of knowledge about countries throughout the world. Later, they learned his chief interest lay in tracing what he conceived to be the origin of Mayan life and Mayan culture.

During the four years he spent here, he completed two books, "The Jungle Queen" and "The King of Maya Land."

Smoke Screen Charge Costs Tear 18 Months

Alleged Member of Warring Gang Pleads Guilty to Two Counts.

George F. Tear, 24, alleged member of the "Rags" Warring mob, today is under sentence to from 18 months to 2 years following a plea of guilty to charges of operating an automobile with a smoke screen and assault with a dangerous weapon. By direction of Justice Peyton Gordon, Tear, known to his colleagues as "Teddy," was permitted to serve both sentences concurrently.

In addition, Tear is awaiting outcome of an appeal he now has pending in the United States Court of Appeals. He was convicted, with 15 others of participation in a liquor ring conspiracy that, according to Government figures, caused a loss to the Government of hundreds of thousands of dollars in alcohol taxes.

The smoke screen charge against Tear arose from a pursuit in which he and special agents of the Treasury Department matched speed. When the agents won, they found Tear's automobile equipped with a smoke screen. Prior to that he was charged with having attempted to wreck the automobile of two policemen who were seeking him on a speeding charge. When Tear's machine repeatedly attempted to run the pursuing car off the road or jam it against a tree or post, the officers charges him with assault with a dangerous weapon.

New Deal Brake Upon Recovery, Smith Declares

Competition With Business Charged in Pittsburgh Address.

socialistic scheme that they have been able to think of."

Cites Stand in Past.

Then launching into his attack on "Government competition with business," he said:

"As far back as I can remember the Democratic Party at every national convention has raved at the Republican Party for its interference with business and one of the favorite slogans of the Democratic Party has been in the past 'more business in government, less government in business.'

"It remained, however, for our New Deal President to set that theory of Democracy entirely aside and I submit in all kindness and in all fairness to the American people tonight where in your life did you see in any Administration either Democrat or Republican that has interfered so much with business as the New Deal has in the last three and one-half years?"

Turning to the President's speeches in which he has emphasized business recovery, Smith said:

"The New Deal said times are better. Spend some more money. Times are better. Borrow some more money, times are better. Times are better.

"Can you imagine the president of a great corporation that would bring in that kind of a report to the directors? What would happen to that president? Do you think for a minute the directors would go over and pat him on the back and say 'well done?' Well done, good and noble servant?' Why not at all. Here is what would happen to him. Out the window."

Turning to the unemployment problem, he said the New Deal was trying to solve it without "knowing anything about it."

"They have never made any census of the unemployed," he said.

Says Atmosphere Is "Hostile."

Coming back to the Government's relations with business, he said:

"The New Deal has not helped business. It has retarded it. An atmosphere was created hostile to business and hostile to banking for the purpose of carrying out reforms, as they called them."

"Government went into business in competition with business," he asserted. "Agencies set up by the Government under the pretext of aiding recovery went into business in competition with business."

He said one instance of this was a corporation which "the President ordered set up under the laws of Delaware to manufacture everything operated by electricity and then paid $1,000,000 to make the Government a stockholder."

"They are using the money of the people of the United States to put the Government itself into competition with business men who pay the taxes to run the Government," he continued.

Another instance, he charged, was the use of WPA funds in Minnesota "to put a private telephone company out of business."

"Now, what was the great big issue in 1932? What was the thing we talked the most about? What was the thing that the Administration started out to try to cure up the quickest possible moment? There was no other issue so great that was confronting the country.

"It was the relief of unemployment. There were no Democrats or Republicans separated from each other in that. We are all in favor of the relief of that. At the earliest possible moment. And as I said in Chicago the other night, if the distress that grows out of unemployment was defeated nobody in the United States would find any fault with the bill. When it was presented to us we would pay it. But the trouble is, the trouble has not been solved."

Kennedy Answers Smith.

Boston, Oct. 24 (AP).—Words attributed to Alfred E. Smith in 1933, were quoted by Joseph P. Kennedy tonight in answer to the former New York Governor's more recent criticisms of President Roosevelt.

Defending the President from charges of "communism" and "dictatorship," Kennedy—first chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission—said in a campaign speech prepared for delivery at a dinner of the Democratic Business Men's League of Massachusetts:

"If President Roosevelt had the slightest * * * desire to become a dictator, to change our form of government and to alter our existing system of private property and individual initiative, why did he not seize the opportunity which was offered to him in the spring of 1933? He rejected that opportunity even though many men of wealth * * * were arguing that we declare a moratorium on constitutional government. * * *

"Former Gov. Al Smith in February, 1933, thought that the crisis was more serious than the World War and should be fought by democracy abrogating to itself the powers of 'a tyrant, a despot, or a monarch.'

"As for the Constitution, his view in 1933 was somewhat different from now when he said:

"'Let us look back a few years to 1917 and 1918. What did we do then? Why we took the Constitution, wrapped it up and put it on a shelf and forgot it until it was over.'"

At this same time, Kennedy asserted, "Gov. Landon out in Kansas was talking about the need for a dictator in the oil industry." * * *

Death Unmasks Doctor As Female; Lived as Man

San Diego, Calif., Oct. 24 (U.P.).—The secret of a woman who masqueraded as a man for at least 12 years was revealed today by San Diego health records, two days after the woman's death.

A death certificate on file with health authorities revealed that Dr. Eugene C. Perkins, 67, retired physician, died Thursday of heart disease. The certificate further revealed that Dr. Perkins was female. Dr. Perkins had lived in La Jolla for 12 years and had been known to associates there as a man and as the husband of Margaret Curren Perkins, who died six months ago.

Frank Capps, Veterans Aid, Funeral Today

Funeral services for Frank Capps, 42, consultant to the Veterans' Administration Board of Appeals, who died Friday night shortly after suffering a heart attack as he watched the Wake Forest-George Washington football game, will be held this afternoon in Farmville, N. C. Burial will be in the Capps' family plot at Wilson.

Mr. Capps went to the game with his wife and their niece, Miss Jean Horton, a student. He was taken to his apartment in the Roosevelt Hotel after the attack, and died there.

He came to Washington about three years ago from Raleigh, N. C., where he had been librarian at North Carolina State College. A member of the Air Corps during the World War, he was a former vice commander of the North Carolina Department of the American Legion.

Surviving Mr. Capps are his wife, a daughter, Novella, and two brothers, Clarence Capps, of Akron, Ohio, and Carl Capps, of Norfolk, Va.

District Shows Way In Seal Campaign

The District of Columbia ranked ahead of all the States in the Nation for per capita cash receipts from the December, 1935, sale of Christmas seals, it was announced yesterday by Mrs. Ernest R. Grant, managing director of the local Tuberculosis Association.

Mrs. Grant said official tabulation, completed October 20, showed the per capita Christmas seal sale in the District last year was 7.2 cents, 1.2 cents higher than next ranking area, Delaware.

"While we are of course proud of this record," said Mrs. Grant, "and most grateful to the many, many friends who have helped to make it possible for us thus to continue our campaign of health education and care for the victims of tuberculosis, we know that this necessary work must go on with increased effectiveness. Therefore, it is earnestly hoped that the goal of a per capita of 10 cents, for which all the States are striving, will be reached ahead of the others and during the coming annual sale of our Christmas seals, the thirtieth since the seals were first used as a means of financing the tuberculosis fight."

Too Rigid Law For Speeders Scored by Club

A. A. A. Unit Sees Danger Unless 'Iniquities' Are Corrected.

The District's automatic suspension of driving permits of speeders came under fire Friday at the monthly meeting of the advisory board of the A. A. A. District of Columbia Motor Club.

Following presentation of a report which pointed out that licenses automatically are suspended for exceeding 35 miles an hour regardless of whether the violation occurred in a 22 or 30 mile zone, the board reported:

"We are mindful of the need for a strong enforcement program without fear or favor, but from the flood of complaints that have poured in here there appears to be a danger that the program will defeat its own ends unless corrective measures are taken to do away with inequities.

"It is manifestly not good enforcement policy to allow a 13-mile leeway in the more congested sections and only a 5-mile leeway in the outlying zones. Drastic punishment is certainly due the flagrant violators, but unfavorable reaction is bound to grow if normally careful motorists are punished harshly for a matter of only a few miles per hour, particularly in view of the possibility of error on the part of the arresting officer."

The board appointed a committee to study the question and submit immediate recommendations.

Proposals for increase in local automobile taxes were branded unnecessary and unjust by Maj. Roy F. Britton, director of the National Highway Users Conference

Landon Pledges Foreign Policy of 'Good Faith and Justice Toward All'

Can't Use War To Stop Wars, Kansan Asserts

Peaceful Mediation Is Most Successful Method, He Tells Indianians.

Indianapolis, Oct. 24.—Following is the text of Gov. Alf M. Landon's speech delivered at the State Fairgrounds, Indianapolis, tonight:

For many years I have heard of the special interest shown by the people of Indianapolis and Indiana in the foreign relations of this country. I know the women have been largely responsible for this and I want to compliment them, because there is no more important question before mankind today than whether peace shall rule the world, or war.

So tonight, here in Indianapolis, I want to talk about the relations of America to world peace.

The conduct of foreign relations was placed by the Constitution in the hands of the President. The policies are his. But, in my judgment, those Presidents have been well advised who have made it their practice not only to consult the Department of State, and the majority members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, but the minority members as well.

Landon Principle Stated.

The carrying out of these policies, the actual negotiating is done by the Secretary of State. This is because in the eyes of the outside world the President's decision is final. In consequence, if the President talks directly with foreign officials any careless remark may lead to international misunderstandings. As Mr. Coolidge once said: "One of the first lessons a President has to learn is that every word he says weighs a ton." In foreign affairs I do not propose to be a talkative man. But I do propose to appoint as Secretary of State a competent man grounded in sound American principles. I do propose to build morale in the department and the foreign service by rewarding merit as it deserves. A devoted, competent and courageous foreign service is one of the first insurance policies we must take against war.

Our principal aim in foreign relations must always be to "observe good faith and justice toward all nations, cultivate peace and harmony with all."

Stopping a war once begun has never proved practical except by the use of stronger armies. This means war to stop war. While men are what they are this will always be a delusion to crush the hope and break the hearts of those who seek to wipe out war.

War will never be the father of peace!

Pledges to Work for Peace.

I shall do everything within my power to prevent the tragedy of war from ever touching our country. I shall encourage with all my power the cause of peace. I shall not merely talk about my hatred of war.

Of course, this Nation will never be guilty of a war of aggression. We have no territorial ambitions. We have no intention of interfering with any nation. Our real danger in the future, as in the past, lies in being drawn into a war not of our own making. Our first problem, then, is to consider what can be done to avert war throughout the world; our second, to consider our own policy if war should come.

Since the great war the world has been working on the idea of a collective security through the League of Nations. But the League has failed. Failed for reasons that certainly have become obvious in the light of experience. The League Covenant assumed that in every war it would be simple to point the finger of justice at the aggressor. Then all nations would make common cause and overwhelm the aggressor in a short struggle. With this certain fate ahead it was hoped no nation would venture to break the peace.

But as the events of recent years, and especially of the last few months, have shown, the matter is not nearly so simple as this. Various causes have increasingly divided the nations into two great camps. If the methods provided in the League Covenant were really adopted. These two camps would become hostile alliances, more or less equal, in another terrible war tradgedy. As I have said, we cannot use war to end war.

But even if the League program is unworkable, the outlook is still far from hopeless. There is a plan for peace which has the sanction of both great age and modern usefulness. I refer to the settlement of international disputes before they reach an acute stage by the peaceful methods of mediation and arbitration.

Mediation always has been the first resort. It still can be used effectively.

It mediation fails, nations may still turn to arbitration. We in America have used this method with success scores of times for more than 100 years. We should make this machinery more nearly perfect and seek to bring other nations to the same view. We should extend, as fast as wisdom allows, the framing of rules and principles governing the international relations of peace. As this field of law grows, we should make larger the number of subjects over which compulsory arbitration might extend.

This is the direction in which measures for the peaceful settlement of international disputes may wisely and effectively be pushed forward.

Much has been said of the need for a sanction to compel nations to observe awards made against them. Experience has demonstrated that no penalty is necessary. The great obstacle to be overcome is not the carrying out of the awards. It is to persuade the nations of the world to bring their disputes to arbitration. The greatest service which our country can render for the doing away with war is to encourage by every honorable means within our power, except the use of armed force, the arbitration of international disputes. To this end we must devote our utmost efforts.

As for ourselves, while we have been leaders in the settlement of disputes by arbitration, we cannot use the World Court. Those many fine men and women of both parties, who in the past have desired American membership in the Court, will, I am sure agree that circumstances have changed. Some of the judges of the court now represent dictatorships, not democratic governments. It was always difficult to keep political influences out of the court. It is impossible now. The United States could not be involved in a political court.

But there are other ways to help the world keep the peace. We must restore international confidence in the good faith of the American Government. This has been shattered by the contradictions of the present Administration.

The President ruthlessly disrupted the London Economic Conference by refusing to accept from the conference the very proposals which he himself had made. Only last year he overrode the neutrality legislation he himself had sponsored. He attempted to put the United States in the forefront of the sanctionist powers against Italy. His action made it probable that if war had come we would have been involved.

Once this good faith has been restored, there will be special occasions in the future, as there have been in the past, when we can be helpful in settling international difficulties.

We are always ready to take part in international conferences on matters affecting the common welfare where it is distinctly understood no political commitments are involved. Before the World War we often did this. Then we became wary because we feared such conferences might be used to involve us in foreign politics through the League. We cannot escape this fear under the present Administration. We cannot forget that the President himself was an early supporter of the League. His position on American foreign relations as on so many other vital questions, is still undisclosed. But the Republican Party at Cleveland definitely declared against both League and World Court membership. Under my Administration, with those issues finally settled, we can go forward along our normal course within the family of nations of which we are a member.

Confidence in our good faith is especially needed in our relations with the nations of the two Americas. We must not become arrogant or presume on our size or our power to obtain something that is not our due. We have been accused of imperalism because from time to time we have landed troops in Latin America. The accusation is not true. Nevertheless I am glad our troops are now all at home.

Value of Fairness Cited.

In this hemisphere there must be the fullest co-operation for peace. We must point the way by scrupulous fairness in our dealing with others. It will be my purpose, when elected, to make the United States in reality, to use John Jay's term, a good neighbor to Latin America.

Another way in which we can work toward world peace is by co-operating in the reduction of armaments. We led the way in the Washington Naval Limitation Conference. We must continue to work in this direction whenever the opportunity offers. At the same time we must fully maintain our own defenses. We have already reduced our land forces to the absolute minimum.

We have always been ready to limit and reduce our naval forces and shall continue to be ready, but only in proportion as others limit and reduce theirs. In such ways as these we can help to lessen the danger of a general war.

Still another contribution is to assist in lowering world-wide trade barriers and re-establishing healthy economic conditions. Economic misery keeps nations restless and uneasy. As I have repeatedly said, a revival of world trade is an aid to the preservation of peace. I pledge myself to do everything in my power to bring this about. It is an obligation we owe first of all to America, and then to the world. But if war should come, what then? What can we do to stay out?

Way to Peace Pointed.

Two policies have been urged. One is that of complete, or nearly complete isolation. The other is the development of our policy of neutrality. Isolation is unfair to our own people and impossible. In this modern world no nation can be isolated. Neutrality cannot be an absolute guarantee of peace. Nevertheless, I believe it holds out one of the great hopes.

The doctrine of neutral rights has been one of slow growth. As international trade developed, nations began to insist on the interests of neutrals as against the interests of belligerents.

Thus, they sought to localize not only the actual war area itself, but also its harmful though indirect effects upon trade and commerce. This was and is the way of progress. Thus there grew up a set of rules and principles for governing the conduct of neutrals. These have nothing to do with the sympathies which a nation may have. They have nothing to do with the much talked of war guilt. They aim simply at stopping the warring nations from interfering with the interests and welfare of neutral nations. They aim at keeping the neutrals from being drawn into the conflict.

Aggression Danger Small.

Specific pledges not to go to war under any condition, risk encouraging belligerents to attempt aggression which would, in fact, precipitate us into war. In view of our enormous potential strength, demonstrated in 1917 and 1918, I believe hereafter nations will be reluctant to violate any neutral rights upon which we insist.

I must mention one more safeguard for our peace. I am a member of the American Legion, and from the moment when the legion announced the policy, I have been in complete sympathy with the general objective of taking the profits out of war. We must be willing to forego short-run profits for the sake of peace. The necessary legislation must be adopted before any war danger comes upon us.

No legislation will make it certain that we shall avert war. But this is another quarantine against it. In time of war it seems to me that the protection of the doughboy should be put above the protection of the dollar.

The time has come to face foreign conditions realistically. Nations are suspicious of one another and fearful of one another. Economic nationalism is rampant. Dictatorship is crowding out democratic governments. Certain nations live under Fascist dictatorship, others under Communist dictatorship.

We recognize that every people has the right to choose its own form of government. But we in our country will have nothing to do with either of these alien philosophies. We believe in government by and for the people.

To be able as a neutral to exert an influence for peace we must have a government which is trusted at home and abroad. We must mind our own business. As Theodore Roosevelt said, we must not become a "Meddlesome Matty." Without arrogance we must protect our own rights. We must take no action that would injure others. In seeking our own prosperity we must seek also the prosperity of other nations. Prosperity throughout the world means larger happiness and that strengthens the forces against war. We are determined in this restless world to keep our own nation an oasis of peace. We want this Western Hemisphere to be a lesson to all mankind that men and races can live together in harmony.

In these high resolves, God helping us, we shall protect America against war. And we shall do our full part to maintain the healing of peace throughout the world.

Ashes of Columbus Put In New Urn at Tomb

Ciudad Trjuillo, Dominican Republic, Oct. 24 (AP).—The ashes of Christopher Columbus were deposited today in a new rock-crystal urn. The urn, replacing the original lead casket, was presented by President Rafael Trujillo in observance of his birthday. High diplomatic officials attended the ceremonies at the Columbus tomb.

The president asserted the transfer was the first step in a program to end with completion of a lighthouse memorial six years hence, the 450th anniversary of the discovery of America.

Jewish Lad, 17, Leads Attack of Panthers in Easy Triumph.

South Benders Handed Worst Defeat Since Yale Game of '14.

By the United Press.

Pittsburgh, Oct. 24.—Led by Marshall Goldberg, a young Jewish boy who will celebrate his eighteenth birthday on the morrow, the Pittsburgh Panthers marched four times into the promised land back of Notre Dame's goal posts today to defeat the Irish, 26 to 0.

The defeat, the worst suffered by the South Benners since Yale licked them, 28 to 0 in 1914, toppled them from the ranks of the unbeaten and completely smashed their national championship aspirations. The Panthers, rallying magnificently from a setback at the hands of Duquesne a week ago, executed their rout before a crowd of 70,224, which packed every seat in the mammoth stadium.

Goldberg, a swivel-hipped sophomore with the speed of a deer, was the spearhead of a Pitt attack which functioned with relentless pressure for a full 60 minutes, and which rammed across a touchdown each in the second and third periods, and two in the fourth.

Notre Dame's famed attack broke completely in the face of a Pitt line. The Irish made only four first downs, and the first one didn't come until the opening of the final period when Pitt was safely out front and its ranks sprinkled with substitutes. Notre Dame gained but 64 yards from scrimmage and was in Pittsburgh territory but once during the afternoon.

Pitt, on the other hand, moved forward almost continuously. The Panthers piled up 15 first downs and gained 306 yards. They went through, around, and over the completely outclassed Notre Dames from start to finish.

Goldberg Is Spearhead.

Halfback Goldberg, weighing 175 pounds and standing 5 feet 9, scored but one of the four Pitt touchdowns but his spectacular open field running was responsible for two others as the Panthers rushed over one touchdown in each the second and their periods and then rolled over two more in the final.

The Panthers or Goldberg, marched straight down the field for 65 yards and a touchdown in the second period with Bill Stapulis lugging it over from the 2-yard line. With a minute to play in the half, Bobby Larue returned a punt 67 yards to Notre Dame's 3 but the timer's whistle ended the threat with the Panthers 3 yards away from the goal.

Pitt collected its second touchdown shortly after the third period opened. Goldberg returned Larry Danbom's punt 50 yards to Notre Dame's 40 and on the next play Stapulis went over, only to have the ball called back and Pitt penalized 15 yards for holding. Stapulis threw a perfect pass to Fabian Hoffman, sub end, who streaked 35 yards for the score.

Irish Penalized.

An untoward incident opened the road for a third Pitt score in the final period. As Pitt drove back to the Irish 28, Charlies O'Reilly, Irish sub quarterback, was charged by officials of slugging Don Hensley. The Irish were penalized half the distance putting the ball on their 14. Four cracks at the line and Goldberg was over for the score.

The final score with the rout on, came as John Wood, sub Pitt back, intercepted Jake Kovalcik's pass on his 45 and ran 55 yards behind beautiful interference for the score.

Frank Souchak, Pitt end, made placements after the first and third touchdowns.

Red Hardy Runs 35 Yds. With Blocked Kick; Last Threat Fails.

40-Yard Pass Saves New York Team From Loss in Final Minutes.

By Lewis F. Atchison.
A Staff Correspondent.

Yankee Stadium, New York, Oct. 24.—One rapier-like thrust, a sleek yellow piece of leather, propelled 40 yards through the cool October air by Bernie Bloom and caught in the end zone by Harry Shorten, abruptly halted Georgetown's triumphant march to victory here this afternoon, giving New York University a 7-7 tie with the Hoyas in an exciting if not brilliant game.

Twenty thousand temporarily deranged fans saw the undefeated and unscored on Hilltoppers' assume a 7-0 lead in the second period as "Red" Hardy crashed through the line, blocked Danny Dowd's punt, recovered the ball in midair and raced 35 yards for a touchdown. Bill Valliquette place-kicked the point.

Score Is Surprise.

The assembled populace could have been no more surprised at this sudden and unexpected turn of events had the stadium collapsed. Until this play Georgetown was a sadly outplayed, outclassed football team.

But an even greater surprise was New York's game-tying pass early in the final period. Georgetown's line, bristling with as much fight as a couple of European armies, had just repelled the Violet's one real scoring threat of the afternoon on its own 2-yard line. Duff had kicked back to his own 30-yard stripe, where the line was turning back the enemy thrusts with a cast-iron resistance.

Suddenly Bloom faded back clutching the ball with a big, sweaty palm, and as the gray horde swarmed in on him hurled a long and beautiful pass in the general direction of the end zone. Tony Barabas, a newcomer to the backfield this season, and Tommy Keating, of Georgetown; Harry Shorten, of N. Y. U., and the ball arrived simultaneously in the far corner of the end zone. They went up together like animated balloons, but

Manero Is Second In Argentine Open

Buenos Aires, Oct. 24 (AP).—Although Tony Manero, United States open golf champion, fired a subpar 71 today, he finished the first half of the Argentine open tournament one stroke off the blistering pace set by Martin Pose, young Argentine pro.

Manero's one-under par round today, added to his first-round 73, gave him 144 for the 36 holes, with the final two rounds to be played tomorrow.

Johnny Revolta, Milwaukee, Wis., pro and travelling-mate of Manero, ended the first two rounds in a five-way tie for third place, at 146.

Guckeyson Stars as Old Liners Score at Will Over Orangemen.

By John R. Vosburgh.
A Staff Correspondent.

Archbold Stadium, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 24.—Its scoring punch clicking smoothly with Bill Guckeyson, the Bethesda broncho, as the mainspring, the University of Maryland bowled over a big Syracuse eleven, 20 to 0, before 14,000 spectators here today.

Starting his first game of the season, Guckeyson struck impressively in his drive for all-American recognition by slashing over for Maryland's first touchdown in the second quarter and shooting a perfect pass to Johnny Ghormley a few moments later for the second.

But no one-man team was Maryland today. Flanked by two of the best ends in the East, Vic Willis and Blair Smith, and supported by a secondary which jarred the stadium every time it hit a Syracuse ball carrier, the Terps' gold-jerseyed line outclassed the Syracuse forward wall from start to finish.

Bill Wolfe at guard and Frank Dearmney and Bob Walton at center stood out conspicuously as the Old Liners rolled to their fourth victory in five starts. Beaten and scored upon only by North Carolina, when Guckeyson was out of the line-up, Maryland added Syracuse to a list of victims which includes St. John's, V. P. I. and Virginia.

Although Syracuse completed 14 passes in 26 tries, the Maryland secondary consistently nailed the receiver to erase most of the damage. Syracuse never threatened seriously to score, failing to pene-

Colgate Smears La Fayette, 41 to 0

Hamilton, N. Y., Oct. 24 (U.P.).—Colgate's Red Raiders, using three full teams, rolled roughshod over La Fayette, 41-0 today.

"Rubberlegs" Jaeger, Colgate's ace right-halfback, and Johnny Long, reserve halfback, each raced for two touchdowns to lead the point making.

Drohan scored on a pass from Choborda and Red Chesbro, left tackle, went over on a trick play for the sixth touchdown.

Tigers Trim Navy Crew By 7 to 0

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Staff Writer.

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 24.—Princeton rallied from a jittery start today to strike swiftly for a third period touchdown and beat the Navy, 7 to 0, before a crowd of 51,000 fans who jammed Palmer Stadium.

Navy piled up a 12-to-3 margin in first downs but experienced its second straight week of frustration due chiefly to poorly executed passes and a sharp Tiger defense. The Midshipmen lost to Yale last Saturday.

Spectacular returns of kicks by Jack White, speedy Princeton halfback, paved the way for the game's only touchdown early in the third quarter. White raced 81 yards to Navy's 15-yard stripe with Irwin Fike's kickoff. The Sailors halted the Tiger attack on their 6-yard stripe, but White returned Sneed Schmidt's punt 26 yards before he was brought down again on the 15-yard line.

Ken Sandbach, Tiger field general, capitalized this opportunity personally by crossing the Navy goal line, around his own left end, on a

A Better Ole Miss Team Has Too Much Power for Catholic U.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

University, Miss., Oct. 24.—The Ole Miss team displayed both defensive and offensive form much above anything known in previous games and outplayed and outscored the Catholic University football team here this afternoon, 14-0.

Ole Miss began an offensive drive in the first quarter and a pass behind the line of scrimmage from Clarence Hapes, big fullback, to his sensational brother, Ray, allowed the latter to knife through left tackle and across the goal line after a 15-yard run, but the ball was called back for penalty and Catholic U. held the score a blank.

Pass Brings Second Score.

Early in the second quarter Parker Hall, replacing Hapes at fullback, tossed 25 yards to Red Parker for a touchdown, and Bruiser Kinard, All-American threat at tackle, place-kicked the extra point.

Later in the quarter, a drive down the field set the stage for a pass from Dave Bernard to Buster Poole for 15 yards, who shook Irish Carroll off his jersey and tripped across for the last marker. Kinard's kick was again good.

The only serious scoring attempt the Capital City team unleashed was in the early minutes of the fourth quarter. Playing a wide open game, shocking Irish Carroll, Ray Hapes' rival for the spotlight, into the forefront, the invaders were able to push down to the 5-yard line before being stopped by a wide-awake Ole Miss lineup.

The last play, bringing the crowd

70-Yard Punt Return Wins for Vols in Final Period.

By the Associated Press.

Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 24.—Thomas (Red) Harp, 155-pound halfback, pulled down a punt and raced 70 yards for a touchdown in the last period today to give Tennessee's Volunteers a 15-to-13 decision over the hitherto unbeaten Duke Blue Devils.

Approximately 20,000 home-coming day fans witnessed the brilliant scoring duel, with Maj. Bob Neyland and Tennessee's aggressive gridders maintainnig the "Knoxville Jinx" over Wallace Wade and Duke, previously unconquered in four games and rated one of the Nation's strongest elevens.

Duke Regains Lead.

Trailing 9 to 6 after Tennessee rallied to score a safety and a touchdown early in the third period, Duke seemed to have grabbed victory when Elmore (Honey) Hackney fired a bullet pass for a touchdown to Capt. Clarence (Ace) Parker in the end zone to move ahead 13 to 9.

With about five minutes left to play and Harp and Parker sparring for "breaks" with punts, the little Tennessee halfback wrapped his arms around one of the Duke quar-

Gophers' Powerhouse Offensive Crushes Feared Rivals.

By the United Press.

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 24.—Minnesota's mighty Gophers crumbled the inspired defense of old Purdue within eight minutes today and crushed the vaunted Boilermakers, 33 to 0, with their twenty-first victory before 47,830 fans in Memorial Stadium.

Ever-conquering Minnesota shattered Purdue's high hopes with a touchdown early in the first quarter and a stunning barrage of two in the third and two more in the fourth.

The Boilermakers recklessly fired their great backs at the golden line, but the racing offensive that rolled up 117 points in three previous games was hurled back time and time again in scoring territory.

The Gopher victory seemed to be the turning point in the transition of the 1936 Minnesota eleven into a great team of the caliber that brought two consecutive national champsionships into the Northwest.

In the relaxed, effortless manner of Coach Bernie Bierman's finest, it passed, ran, blocked more cleanly and tackled harder than against any team this fall.

Purdue's two slashing backs, Cecil Isbel and Johnny Drake, were constant threats in the first half and made the first 30 minutes into one of the fiercest offensive battles Minnesota has encountered in three years.

But, in the middle of the first quarter, Minnesota snatched an intercepted forward pass and brought out a string of laterals and running plays that sifted through the Boilermakers for 42 yards and the opening touchdown.

Purdue Fades.

Purdue gave out in the second half before a surge of Minnesota manpower and was trampled under four or more touchdowns. The Boilermakers staged a willing and desperate battle, but were outmanned and outcharged. Toward the end reserve players like Matheny, Bates, Moore and Wrightson and a flock of others were tearing big gaps in Purdue's line, which was rapidly weakening and tiring.

In the final accounting it was Andy Uram, Whitman Rork, Bill Matheny, Julie Alfonse and Larry

U. S. Team Soars Into Lead International Horse Show

By Bill McCormick.

The United States jumped into the lead over Chile on the Meadowbrook course yesterday in the hectic see-saw that is the international jumping contest of the Inter-American Horse Show.

A better than capacity crowd of more than 5,000 occupied every seat and jammed every nook and cranny of the Riding and Hunt Club's grounds in Rock Creek as the United States scored only 18½ faults to jump into an 8-point lead over Chile, which wound up the day with an aggregate score of 38 faults.

The Mexican horsemen, green, but game, scored a total of 35¼ faults yesterday to put them in a poor third, with an aggregate of 66½.

Both the Chilean team, which led after the first day's competition, and the U. S. team, which ran a close second going into today's jumping, faltered but the Chileans faltered more than did our riders.

Capt. Eduardo Yanez, on Toqui, was the only Chilean to turn in a really good performance. He was the only rider except his teammate, Lieut. Rafael Montti, to complete the 18-jump course under the maximum allowance of 1 minute 36 sec-

20,000 See Talma Dee, 19-1, Win Selima Stakes

The Official Finish Photograph of Laurel's Feature

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 24.—Some of the money Mrs. Ethel V. Mars' family earned selling chewy candy to the Nation, and which she invested in horse flesh, paid dividends here this afternoon when Talma Dee, a determined daughter of the sire Bulldog, jolted the turf world with a smashing victory in the Selima Stakes.

A 19-1 shot, Talma Dee withstood a punishing drive from Jockey Alfred Robertson to lead from flag fall to finish and hold a margin of a length over the King Ranch's Dawn Play. The latter took place honors with the aid of the camera by a nose from C. V. Whitney's Peplum. Fourth money was salvaged by Walter M. Jeffords' Regal Lily.

A field of 15 marched postward in the Selima, yearly looked upon as the real coming out party for 2-year-old fillies. Starter Milton proved patient and finally sent the bulky group away in good alignment.

Talma Dee's victory brought $22,480 to Mrs. Mars and proved only the third victory in eight starts this year for the game filly. She had won only $2,100 before she hit the imaginary wire this afternoon. Talma Dee paid a $40.10 mutuel.

The day's secondary feature, the $5,000 added Maryland Handicap, proved a thrilling victory for E. D. Shaffer's Floradora, trained by B. S. Mitchell. The triumph made it a perfect day for the sire Bull Dog, for Floradora is his 3-year-old daughter. By coincidence, the winners of both stakes were No. 7 post position. Floradora brought her backers $19 for each $2 investment.

Excellent time, under perfect racing conditions, was made in both events. Talma Dee turned in 1:39 2-5 for her mile, matching the second best time of the Selima, while Floradora stepped the mile and a quarter in 2:03 1-5, better than average time for the Maryland Handicap.

The camera was used in the finish of both races and proved embarrassing to officials and bewildering to the crowd in the Selima. After Peplum's number had been displayed as the second horse in the unofficial result, Dawn Play was given the second money after the negative had been consulted. This gave the "stoopers," or those who look for discarded tickets, a chance for a field day.

The program, the best of the fall season in this state, proved a lure for the largest crowd to date, more than 20,000 indulging in the sport.

Fervid, veteran mare owned by Mrs. J. M. Black, won the opening race with Jockey C. Kurtsinger in the saddle. Fervid was whipped to the wire a neck in front of R. A. Moore's Hail, with Candle Fly third and a half-length away in a field of a dozen cheap platers. The time for the mile and a sixteenth was 1:49 with Fervid paying a $7.80 mutuel.

Matey Wins Easily.

Mrs. Walter M. Jeffords' Matey scored an easy victory in the second race, defeating five other juveniles at a mile and 70 yards. Siam was an easy second ahead of Mr. Canron, the early pacesetter. The winner was a $3.30 favorite and was clocked in 1:44.

Go Home, flying the colors of the Maemere Farm, won the third race by a length from Galmica, a long shot, with Beth Bon third. Go Home came to the outside entering the stretch and withstood a driving finish under the handling of Jockey E. Litzenberger. Beth Bon broke last and gained the lead at the far turn only to surrender to the rushes of Go Home and Galmica nearing the wire. The winner was clocked in the mediocre time of 1:12 4/5 and paid a $6.20 mutuel.

Moon side, owned by Eddie Kane, showed an excellent front-running effort to win the sixth race from four other good routers. Jockey Jackie Westrope sent the broadside gelding away winging and he held an advantage over a persistent Thursday. Azucar, one-time winner of the Santa Anita Handicap, was third. The winner's margin was three parts of a length. He paid $8.20 and ran the mile and a sixteenth in 1:45.

Miss Merriment Is Beaten by Myrtlewood

Bluegrass Filly Is Winner by Two Lengths Over Whitney Colt.

Lexington, Ky., Oct. 24 (AP).—Brownell Combs' Myrtlewood defeated John Hay Whitney's Miss Merriment in a six-furlong match race today at Keeneland. The race was the highlight of the program closing the nine-day meeting at the new Kentucky track.

The four-year-old daughter of Blue Larkspur crossed the finish line two lengths ahead of the Eastern colt. Miss Merriment, which had won seven races in each of her last three campaigns, took a scant lead at the start, but was headed off by the Bluegrass filly at the quarter pole and never relinquished the lead.

Myrtlewood's time was 1:11 4-5. She was ridden by Jockey George South. Johnny Gilbert was astride Miss Merriment.

The race brought together what are regarded as the two fleetest fillies of the country and was the last race for each before retirement. A trophy was awarded the winner by the Keeneland Association.

The day's secondary feature, the $2,500 Lexington stakes, at six furlongs, was taken by Manhasset stable's White Tie.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MOONSIDE, $8.20, $4.70, $3.90; THURSDAY, $6.70, $4.10; AZUCAR, $6.00.

MOONSIDE sprinted to the front at once, shook off repeated challenges of THURSDAY and held advantage through stretch under energetic handling. THURSDAY pressed the pace throughout and closed with good speed. AZUCAR made up some ground during the running. MAERIEL was poorly ridden, was allowed to drop back and failed to rally. CORINTO, placed closer than usual, was kept in on the rail throughout and dropped back slowly after the half.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—FERVID, $7.80, $5.00, $3.80; HAIL, $19.70, $12.80; CANDLE FLY, $5.10.

FERVID, in close attendance of the pace of CHIEF HOLLIS from the start, disposed of that one in the early stretch, but had to be kept to severe punishment to withstand closing rush of HAIL. The latter, outrun to the stretch, went to the outside for racing room and came with a belated rush and was wearing the winner down. CANDLE FLY, sluggish at the break and a trailer along the backstretch, came between horses with a sharp move and was going fastest at the finish. BERRY PATCH, close to the leaders, faltered in the closing eighth. SEA FINN went evenly, but could not threaten. BUD BROWN showed a good effort. LAPIS had early speed. CHIEF HOLLIS stopped under hustling tactics.

SECOND RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won handily; place driving. Went to post at 2:09. Off at 2:11. Winner, W. M. Jeffords' ch. c. (2), by Man o' War—Tavy. Trained by P. M. Burch. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 4-5, 0:47 4-5, 1:13 4-5, 1:39 2-5, 1:44.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MATEY, $3.30, $2.50, $2.20; SIAM, $3.20, $2.60; MR. CANRON, $3.60.

MATEY, much the best, saved ground while being allowed to settle into stride, came through on the rail after being slightly shut off at the far turn, took command from SIAM and was in hand through the final sixteenth. SIAM, hard ridden throughout, disposed of MR. CANRON after a half, was shaken up but was no match for the winner. HIGH VELOCITY and PRAIRIE PRINCE were outrun.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:42½. Off at 2:44½. Winner, Maemere Farms' ch. g. (3), by Grandace—Last Inning. Trained by D. T. Leonard. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 3-5. 0:47 1-5, 1:12 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GO HOME, $6.20, $3.90, $3.10; GALMICA, $16.10, $6.40; BETH BON, $3.00.

GO HOME, sent to the outside for racing room entering the stretch, rallied gamely to punishment to take command and was driving at the end. GALMICA came between horses with a rush, was slightly bothered by the winner and closed willingly. BETH BON, poorly handled, was away last, was rushed up along the rail to take command, was rated to the stretch and could not resist GO HOME and GALMICA. MINEY MYERSON dropped back after a quarter. BARTERING KATE could not keep up.

DAILY DOUBLE PAID $25.40.

FOURTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $10,000 added. The Selima Stakes. For 2-year-old fillies. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:19. Off at 3:22½. Winner, Milky Way Farm's br. f. (2), by Bull Dog—Barbara. Trained by A. Pelleteria. Net value to winner, $22,480; second, $2,000; third, $1,000; fourth, $400. Time, 0:23 1-5, 0:47, 1:13, 1:39 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TALMA DEE, $40.10, $16.40, $9.10; DAWN PLAY (entry), $7.30, $5.80; PEPLUM, $9.00.

TALMA DEE had speed to go to the front in the sprint for the first turn, opened a wide gap entering the backstretch, was taken under slight restraint for a breather on the swing for the stretch and rallied to strong handling to hold away to the end. DAWN PLAY, off slowly, saved ground to the backstretch, improved position with a sharp move along the backstretch, and closed with a belated rush. PEPLUM, within striking distance of the leaders from the start, went to the outside at the far turn and closed with good courage under punishment. REGAL LILY held a good position to the far turn, rallied to drive and finished with good courage. MAECLOUD, in tight quarters for a half, came full of run after being blocked in the early stretch. THE SCHEMER raced wide at the turn, gained some ground approaching the stretch, but tiring. ROSENNA went evenly. TONIANNA was forwardly placed and faltered. EVENING TIDE stopped after pressing the pace. MORNING could not keep up. WHICH PRINT was through after a half. APOGEE went in the air at the break.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-quarter miles. Purse, $5,000 added. The Maryland Handicap. For 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:59. Off at 4:02. Winner, E. D. Shaffer's br. f. (3), by Bull Dog—Gentle Star. Trained by B. S. Mitchell. Value to winner, $4,650; second, $1,000; third, $500; fourth, $150. Time, 0:23 3-5, 0:47 3-5, 1:12 1-5, 1:38 1-5, 2:03 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—FLORADORA, $19.90, $6.80, $4.50; MEMORY BOOK, $3.40, $2.70; BOW AND ARROW, $3.80.

FLORADORA, pulled up when in trouble swinging for the backstretch and then steered wide to become a forward factor, rallied when put to drive to wear down BOW AND ARROW, but had to be kept to persevere the much stouter rush of MEMORY BOOK. The latter was in a pocket along the backstretch and came with good energy in the final stages. BOW AND ARROW ran FAIR KNIGHTESS into defeat and held on willingly, but unable to resist the other two. GIANT KILLER, outrun for a half, closed some ground in the stretch. FAIR KNIGHTESS began to stop at the far turn. SPLIT SECOND dropped out of it after a half.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,200. The Glenwood Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:36. Off at 4:36½. Winner, E. Kane's br. g. (4), by Broadside—Over the Moon. Trained by T. Malone. Value to winner, $850; second, $200; third, $150; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24, 0:48 1-5, 1:13 3-5, 1:39 1-5, 1:45.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MOONSIDE, $8.20, $4.70, $3.90; THURSDAY, $6.70, $4.10; AZUCAR, $6.00.

MOONSIDE sprinted to the front at once, shook off repeated challenges of THURSDAY and held advantage through stretch under energetic handling. THURSDAY pressed the pace throughout and closed with good speed. AZUCAR made up some ground during the running. MAERIEL was poorly ridden, was allowed to drop back and failed to rally. CORINTO, placed closer than usual, was kept in on the rail throughout and dropped back slowly after the half.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TALMA DEE, $40.10, $16.40, $9.10; DAWN PLAY (entry), $7.30, $5.80; PEPLUM, $9.00.

TALMA DEE had speed to go to the front in the sprint for the first turn, opened a wide gap entering the backstretch, was taken under slight restraint for a breather on the swing for the stretch and rallied to strong handling to hold away to the end. DAWN PLAY, off slowly, saved ground to the backstretch, improved position with a sharp move along the backstretch, and closed with a belated rush. PEPLUM, within striking distance of the leaders from the start, went to the outside at the far turn and closed with good courage under punishment. REGAL LILY held a good position to the far turn, rallied to drive and finished with good courage. MAECLOUD, in tight quarters for a half, came full of run after being blocked in the early stretch. THE SCHEMER raced wide at the turn, gained some ground approaching the stretch, but tiring. ROSENNA went evenly. TONIANNA was forwardly placed and faltered. EVENING TIDE stopped after pressing the pace. MORNING could not keep up. WHICH PRINT was through after a half. APOGEE went in the air at the break.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-quarter miles. Purse, $5,000 added. The Maryland Handicap. For 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:59. Off at 4:02. Winner, E. FLORADORA, pulled up when in trouble swinging for the backstretch and then steered wide to become a forward factor, rallied when put to drive to wear down BOW AND ARROW, but had to be kept to persevere the much stouter rush of MEMORY BOOK. The latter was in a pocket along the backstretch and came with good energy in the final stages. BOW AND ARROW ran FAIR KNIGHTESS into defeat and held on willingly, but unable to resist the other two. GIANT KILLER, outrun for a half, closed some ground in the stretch. FAIR KNIGHTESS began to stop at the far turn. SPLIT SECOND dropped out of it after a half.

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—Despite a self-imposed handicap of 132 yards in penalties, Fordham's powerful football team turned back St. Mary's Gaels, 7-6, today in the Polo Grounds before a crowd of 50,000 spectators on the execution of a point after touchdown by Quarterback Andy Palau.

The Galloping Gaels, had the gallop taken out of them the first time they collided with the Rams' rugged forward wall and their widely heralded passing attack with Les (Just) Groux pitching was ineffective.

Fordham incurred seven penalties of 15 yards each for a total of 105 yards for back in motion after the shift. Two of them came in succession early in the first period, setting Fordham back on her one-yard line. Palau, standing deep in the end zone, punted to Hugh Sill, who ran the ball back 20 yards to the 18.

Vital Pass Fails.

Groux lost a yard trying to crack Fordham's left tackle and then rifled a pass to Gianonni, standing close to the goal line and in the clear, but the Gael end feebly failed to hold on to the ball. Sill picked up 2 yards through center.

With the crowd yelling "block that kick," Quarterback Lou Ferry, with Sill holding the ball on the Rams' 24, booted it beautifully across the bar and through the uprights for a field goal and three points.

Without fuss or ado, Ferry a few minutes later discarded his head gear, dropped back to the 42 and again with Sill holding the ball, lifted the leather across the bar.

It looked like the Fordhams would fall to pieces when they drew another 15-yard penalty for a man in motion, setting them back on their 48.

Capt. Frank Mautte was smeared on the Rams' 38, but thereafter the Rams snapped back into form like a steel spring suddenly released.

Al Gurske passed to Palau for 21 yards and then the Rams unleashed a neat forward lateral, good for 26 yards, Palau to Jacunski to Wojciehowicz. The march was halted temporarily by an offside penalty and then Palau passed to Jacunski in the end zone for a touchdown. Palau converted from placement.

That was the end of the scoring and the rest of the game saw them out-fight and out-play the Gaels.

Fordham's victory over the Gaels, cut the Californians' lead in their intersectional series which now stands, three victories for St. Mary's two for Fordham and one a tie.

Baylor Bears And Aggies Tie

Teams in Scoreless Battle as 7,000 Watch.

Waco, Tex., Oct. 24 (AP).—A slick field and a slimy football cramped the style of the Texas Aggies and Baylor Bears as they battled to a scoreless tie today before 7,000.

Sensational punting by Lloyd Russell, Baylor halfback, and Bill Stages and Doc Pitner for A. and M. made it a good football game despite the mud and an intermittent rain.

Neither the Aggies nor the Bears was able to get anywhere with running attacks. The few passes attempted were wild or batted down.

Baylor made the only earned first down, Bob Masters on two successive end runs, in the fourth period, accounted for it.

Both teams began punting soon after the game opened and from that point to the closing gun they often kicked on first downs, waiting patiently for the break which never came.

Citadel Swamped, 21-0, by Davidson

Davidson, N. C., Oct. 24 (AP).—Davidson's Wildcats, paced by the brilliant Teeney Lafferty, struck suddenly three times here today to defeat a fighting band of Citadel Bulldogs, 21 to 0, in a Southern Conference football clash before 6,000 spectators.

Each score came on a lightning-like thrust.

Before the game was five minutes old, Lafferty faded back and tossed a long pass to Ed Armfield, who took the ball over his shoulder and dashed across the goal line. Fred Dennis, Davidson's hard blocking back, snagged a Citadel aerial to dash for the second score in the third period. Lafferty got the final touchdown in the last quarter, when he returned a punt 45 yards.

You're Wrong—It's Not a Pass, But Columbia Recovering a Fumble

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Hudasky, Columbia fullback, is reaching high in the air, not to catch a pass as it appears, but to drag down a Michigan fumble which has bounced high from the ground in the first quarter at Ann Arbor yesterday.

Michigan 13-0 Victor Over Columbia

Wolverines Rescue Grid System With Drive, Hold Foes on 1-Yard Line.

By the United Press.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Oct. 24.—Michigan's maize and blue banner which hasn't been lowered in defeat by an intersectional rival in 11 years waved on high again today when the Wolverines conquered Columbia's invading Lions, 13 to 0, before a crowd of 25,000.

The triumph came at a time when Michigan's football fortunes were at their lowest ebb, with their coach, Harry Kipke, and the Wolverine system under fire from all sides after successive defeats by Michigan State, Indiana and Minnesota.

But a fighting team came back to rescue some of Michigan's former glory, with a highly deserved triumph. The Wolverines' running game smashed through the light Columbia line for 238 yards, and only the breaks of the game kept them from piling up a bigger score.

Michigan Scores.

Michigan scored its first touchdown in the second period after Fullback Cedric Sweet's punt had driven Columbia back to its own 7-yard line.

Wally Hook, sophomore halfback from Grand Rapids, Mich., ripped off 7 yards. John Smithers failed to gain. Then Sweet, the 200-pound fullback from Fremont, Mich., plunged off Columbia's right guard, tore into the open and outran the defensive halfback to cross the goal standing up after a gain of 11 yards. Smithers kicked goal.

Two minutes before the game ended, Stark Ritchie, substitute Michigan halfback from Battle Creek, intercepted a pass by Joe Vollmer, who was throwing from behind his own goal line, and raced 25 yards for the second touchdown. Smithers missed the goal.

Michigan had to put on a couple of great goal-line stands to keep Columbia from scoring. The Lions swept 54 yards down the field early in the second period to Michigan's 3-yard line, but two passes over the goal line were incomplete and they lost the ball.

Lions Held at Bay.

In the third period a Michigan penalty gave Columbia first down on the Wolverine 1-yard line. Michigan stood off five more Lion charges, including one on an offside penalty, and finally took the ball on downs on the 7-yard line.

Michigan rolled up a total yardage of 283 yards to Columbia's 163.

Detroit Smothers Manhattan, 20 to 0

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—The air-minded Titans of Detroit University today filled the Brooklyn skies with passes and smothered a helpless Manhattan eleven, 20 to 0, before a gallery of 12,000, gathered to celebrate a new intersectional warfare between the two schools.

Andy Farkas raced over the Manhattan goal line once in the second and twice in the fourth period. Early in the second Farkas tore off a 25-yard dash to Manhattan's 25 and scored two plays later.

These sprints warmed him up sufficiently so that in the fourth he was able to gallop 45 yards through the entire Manhattan team for the second score.

Hal Cooper, Titan center, pulled one of Vic Fusia's overheads out of the air to start the last Detroit push on Manhattan's 35. Palumbo, who had replaced Piper, flung a long one to Dave Ripley, then shot another to Farkas over the goal line. Shada's kick was wide.

40,000 See Dartmouth Rout Harvard, 26 to 7

By the United Press.

Harvard Stadium, Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 24.—A Dartmouth eleven whose repertoire ranged from bullet-like passes to the old Statue of Liberty play riddled Harvard, 26 to 7, today in their forty-third football meeting, before 40,000 spectators.

Even in defeat Harvard found some consolation in the fact that—in the last minute of play—it scored its first touchdown of the season against a major opponent.

Dartmouth made 15 first downs and gained 333 yards by rushing. While Harvard made 10 first downs and gained 144 yards. Dartmouth completed five of nine passes attempted for a gain of 97 yards, whereas Harvard completed three of 11 attempted for 64 yards.

Harvard held the upper hand in the first period but failed to capitalize a scoring chance when Jones recovered a fumble on Dartmouth's 16.

In the second period, a blocked kick paved the way for Dartmouth's first touchdown, scored by Warren King, Dartmouth left half.

Zob MacLead, right half, added another touchdown in the third period as the climax of a 73-yard march.

A 47-yard dash along the side line by MacLeod set the stage for Dartmouth's third touchdown, scored by Phil Conti, who went over from the 4-yard line.

Dartmouth's final touchdown also was scored by Conti—this time on a Statue of Liberty play from the 11-yard line.

There was only a minute left to play when Art Oakes, substitute Harvard back, shot a long pass which was deflected by Conti and taken on the fly by Ben Smith, substitute Crimson end, who was downed on Dartmouth's 7. Penalties put the ball on the 1-foot line. Oakes went over and fumbled in the end zone but was credited with the touchdown.

Huskies Defeat California, 13-0

Washington's Victory Is 3d Straight in League.

By the Associated Press.

Seattle, Oct. 24.—The University of Washington charged another lap closer to the Rose Bowl today with a 13-to-0 football triumph over California.

The victory was the third straight for Coach Jimmy Phelan and his Huskies and kept Washington in the Pacific Coast forefront with an undefeated, untied record in conference competition. Minnesota, however, holds a 14-to-7 win over the Huskies in intersectional play.

Twenty thousand spectators saw Washington virtually eliminate California from the coast league race when Jimmy Cain and Byron Haines drove over the Bear goal line for touchdowns. Both scores were made from the one-foot line on fourth downs. Cain diving over center for the first score in the second period, and Haines circling left end for the other in the third.

Episcopal Downs Gilman Prep, 14-6

Baltimore, Oct. 24 (AP).—A 45-yard forward pass and a drive from midfield gave the more experienced and powerful Episcopal High School football team, of Alexandria, Va., a 14-to-6 victory over Gilman Country School before 1,500 spectators today.

Randall took Marbury's long pass on the Gilman goal line and stepped across the marker for Episcopal High's first score in the opening quarter. In the second quarter Goodwin got away for 40 yards then plunged 5 yards through Gilman's line to score again for Episcopal.

Campbell scored for Gilman in the third quarter against Episcopal High's team, driving 5 yards through the line after a march from midfield.

Uclans Down Oregon State

Bruins, Led by Williams, Triumph by 22-13.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Oct. 24.—The Bruins of the University of California at Los Angeles, aided by the line-smashing, place-kicking ability of Fullback Billy Bob Williams, chalked up a Coast Conference victory today over Oregon State, 22 to 13.

With 30,000 fans in the stands, Williams broke a 12-to-13 deadlock midway in the final period with a 24-yard place kick.

The boot broke the Bruins' lethargy, and U. C. L. A. romped over with another touchdown a moment later.

U. C. L. A. offsides made both Heaver scores easy affairs. Twice the Bruins were penalized 1 yard from the goal line for jumping the signal.

Oregon State made 14 first downs to the Bruins' 13, but were outrushed 220 to 121 yards. The Beavers gained 74 yards through the air, the Bruins 34.

Sportswriters Shoot Works Next Saturday

Competition in the 100-target shoot for the Sportswriters Cup has been postponed a week and will be held next Saturday. The cup, donated by the Washington Gun Club, is now held by Buck O'Neil of The Times.

In place of the scheduled shoot yesterday, the week's regular club event was held. Walter S. Wilson was high with 45, in the 50-target contest, and 23 in the 25-target handicap. He won a leg on the Hunter-Wilson 3-month trophy.

Northwestern Beats Illinois Easily, 13-2

Wildcats Stage Two Long Marches, One With Subs, to Clinch Game.

By the Associated Press.

Champaign, Ill., Oct. 24.—Northwestern's powerful Wildcat used its claws just twice today to rake out two touchdowns and conquer Illinois' courageous little eleven, 13 to 2, for its third straight Western conference football triumph, as an Illini homecoming crowd of 27,000 spectators looked on.

Apparently content to win without cutting loose any more than necessary, Northwestern, with its two "Dashing Dons," who wrecked Ohio State's title hopes a week ago, again furnishing the punch, fashioned a touchdown in the second period, and smashed ruthlessly down the field 73 yards for another in the third frame.

The Illini escaped a shutout when a questionable bit of Wildcat strategy in the final period accounted for a safety.

Stage Long Marches.

A neat kick by Dave Strong, sophomore Illinois quarterback, in the last session, which went out of bounds on Northwestern's 6-yard mark, led to the Northwestern safety. Instead of kicking out, Clarence Hinton, Wildcat Negro back, was sent off on a try at Illinois' right end. Chased back by Rightend Bob Castelo, Hinton drifted back behind his own goal line, where he was downed by Wardley.

Northwestern took the field with substitute sitting in for the two "Dons," Halfback Bernard Jefferson, Center Leon Fuller and two regular guards, Capt. Steve Reid and Les Schreiber.

The six regulars entered the game in the second to lead the way in a 41-yard touchdown march. The Illini held for three downs on the 4-yard line, but on the last play, Geyer lateraled to Heap, who flashed around his rightend to score. Geyer place-kicked for the point.

The Wildcats took the ball on the kick-off in the third period, and, with the same ball carriers functioning, never stopped until Geyer crashed through for a touchdown. The try for the point went amiss.

Norfolk, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—Maury's Commodores, 1935 State champions, made an auspicious debut at Foreman Field today by defeating Glass High, of Lynchburg, 13 to 7, before a crowd of nearly 4,000.

Rice's Last Minute Touchdown Beats Favored Texas Team, 7-0

By the Associated Press.

Houston, Tex., Oct. 24.—The hard-fighting Rice Owls, three times beaten away from the goal line, smashed through for a last-minute touchdown and defeated the favored Texas Longhorns, 7 to 0, in a Southwest Conference football game today.

A crowd of 17,000 saw the contest.

A smart play by Schuehle, Rice quarterback, paved the way to the counter after a sustained line drive, engineered by Caldwell. Russell and Vickers carried the ball from the Texas 38 to the 11.

Hancock, crippled Owl back, was sent into the game and apparently the stage was set for an attempt at a field goal. Schuehle pulled a neat quarterback sneak, however, and wriggled through to the shadow of the goal line. Vickers plunged over on the next play and then kicked goal from placement.

The Owls led in first downs, 17 to 13, and from scrimmage they gained 258 yards with a loss of 28, while the Longhorns were making 196 yards with a loss of 32.

Army Trounces Springfield By 33 to 0

27,000 Watch Cadets Use Every Man on Bench in Effortless Win.

West Point, N. Y., Oct. 24 (AP).—The Army ran double-time over little Springfield College, 33-0, today, scoring two touchdowns in the first, two more in the second, and another in the third period.

With 27,000 fans packed in Michie Stadium, Army employed little more than fundamental football and used almost every substitute on the bench.

A double lateral pass, Sid Martin to Jim Craig to John Samuel gained 25 yards to the Springfield 31 and started the rout. Straight football took them to the 4, from where Martin scored.

The Army turned a good break into their second touchdown. A pass from Martin was deflected twice by Springfield players into the arms of Harris Rogner, who ran 34 yards untouched to score. Jim Schwenk placekicked one point but missed the other.

First Team Scores.

Coach Davidson put the first team into the game in the second period and they marched 35 yards in three minutes to score, Monk Meyer carrying the ball over from the eleven.

The fourth Army touchdown came near the end of the second period when Frank Hartline, Army center, intercepted a Springfield pass and ran 20 yards to the goal. Jim Ryan converted.

A 56-yard punt return by Martin to the Springfield 4-yard line and a plunge from there by Craig gave the Cadets their final touchdown. Schwenk placedkicked the extra point.

Army made eight first downs to Springfield's two and outrushed the New Englanders 189 to 69. The Cadets threw 12 passes and completed half of them for a gain of 93 yards. Springfield tried 10 passes and completed one.

Tennessee Mars Duke Record, 15-13

terback's long boots on the 30-yard line, swept toward the side of the field as his teammates formed a beautiful line of interference and galloped across the goal for the winning points.

Tennessee played brilliantly all the way. With their offensive checked for most of the first half, the Volunteers' light but hard-charging line stopped three Duke scoring threats almost on the goal line. Once they threw up a stone wall defense to halt a drive at the 3-yard line, again on the 1-foot line and another time at the 4-yard stripe.

Vols' Early Threats Fail.

Tennessee invaded Duke territory for the first time in the second period, reaching the 45-yard line but the Blue Devil line held and Harp kicked out of bounds on the 15. Tipton picked up 2 yards but Duke was penalized 15 yards for holding and Parker kicked out to Duke's 35.

Duke kicked to Tennessee and the Volunteers started another drive. A 28-yard pass from Dickens to Wyatt carried to Duke's 27. Dickens broke around right end for 14 yards and after Herring failed at the line Dickens dropped back and shot a beautiful pass to Herring, who caught it on the 1-yard line and stepped across the goal. Herring placekicked the extra point. The third period ended Duke, 6; Tennessee, 9.

Parker Scores.

Unable to gain, Parker kicked to Tennessee and Dickens kicked right back, with Hackney returning the ball to midfield. Parker reversed his field and ran 15 yards to Tennessee's 22. After Smith had failed to gain and Hackney lost four on an attempted pass, the Duke halfback fired a low pass which Parker caught in the end zone for a touchdown.

From its own 28-yard line, Tennessee inaugurated a drive. Harp's pass to Hendricks netted 17 yards to the 49. On another attempted pass Harp ran through the middle when Duke's defense spread out for 21 yards to the Blue Devil's 30. Tennessee tried one line play and three long passes fell incomplete. Duke took the ball on its own 35. Unable to gain, Parker kicked, and Harp took the ball on Tennessee's 30. Behind brilliant interference he raced 70 yards for a touchdown. Herring missed the try for extra point.

Mike's Meat Fund Started, to Sustain L. S. U.'s Tiger

By the Associated Press.

Shreveport, La., Oct. 24.—A meat fund for Mike, the Royal Bengal tiger mascot of the L. S. U. football team, has been started by a Shreveport resident, W. Burch Lee sr., former Federal Court clerk.

Lee mailed a check for $10 to Dr. J. M. Smith, president of the university, to assist in supplying the tiger its required ration of 12 pounds of meat daily.

Mike, riding in his cage trailer behind a motor car, arrived in Shreveport last night for the L. S. U.-Arkansas football game today.

Buckeyes Take To Air, Beat Hoosiers

Dye's Toss to Capt. Wendt Brings Only Score in Hectic Battle.

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 24 (AP).—Ohio State turned on the power today, but was forced to take to the air to defeat a stubborn Indiana team 7 to 0.

The defeat dragged the Hoosiers down alongside the Bucks in the Western Conference race. The Ohioans, defending cochampions with Minnesota, saw their chances to repeat go glimmering a week ago when defeated by Northwestern. Indiana had beaten Michigan.

Quarterback William "Tippy" Dye's 13-yard flip to Capt. Merle Wendt in the second period accounted for the only touchdown of the contest. Wendt place kicked the extra point, racking up the total of seven to his credit.

Ohio showed its power by making 12 of its 13 first downs by rushing.

Indiana was never deep in Ohio territory, but the passes of Quarterback Huffman and Halfback Filchock were a constant menace. Borrowing a page from the Buckeye book, the invaders passed with abandon while deep in their own territory, and on one occasion tossed an aerial from behind their own goal line.

The Bucks piled up 189 yards from rushing to 66 for the Hoosiers. The invaders completed 5 of 15 forward passes for 88 yards, while Ohio advanced 40 yards on four passes out of 41. Ohio intercepted four of the Hoosier heaves, while two of the Ohio aerials fell in enemy hands.

High School Grid Games Fatal to 2

Dandridge, Tenn., Oct. 24 (AP).—"Mother, I'm o. k." whispered George Alfred Thomas, 19-year-old Maury High School football guard, just before he lapsed into unconsciousness today.

Half an hour later he died of internal injuries suffered in a game with Sevierville High School yesterday.

The 180-pound youth was struck in the abdomen just after the kick-off in the second half.

His teammates were at his bedside until he died.

Houston, Tex.—Viry Fontenot, 18, player on the Crosby High School football team, died today of injuries suffered in a game with Liberty High School at Crosby yesterday. Justice R. R. Zierlein said cerebral concussion, incurred when he was tackled, caused his death.

Kentucky Downs Florida U., 7 to 0

Lexington, Ky., Oct. 24 (AP).—The Florida Alligators threw a tremendous scare into Kentucky's Wildcats here today before losing 7-to-0 to give the Cats their first Southeastern Conference victory of the season.

Florida threatened to tie the score in the final minutes only to spoil a brilliant drive with a fumble on Kentucky's 7-yard lnie. Kentucky had fumbled earlier on the Gators' 1-yard line.

Kentucky was seriously handicapped by the absence of its backfield star, Bob Davis, the nation's leading scorer, out with an injury.

Kentucky scored in the second quarter when Davis returned a Florida punt 43 yards across the visitors' goal line. Simpson's placement added the extra point.

Mississippi State, T.C.U. Play 0-0 Tie

Dallas, Oct. 24. (AP).—Aerial machines grounded in rain and ankle-deep muck, Texas Christian and Mississippi State gave the game over to a pair of stout lines and sloshed to a scoreless tie at the Cotton Bowl here today.

Throughout a dull 60 minutes both teams kicked constantly, waiting for a break that never came.

Unable to gain through a fine Mississippi line, Texas Christian got two breaks that provided scoring opportunities, but an attempted field goal and a passing flurry from the 9-yard stripe failed. The Mississippi offense could not get past the Horned Frogs' 36-yard line, but it did manage four first downs to none for the Texans.

Carnegie Tech Bows, 7 to 0 to Holy Cross

Crusaders Keep Record Clean With Nineteenth Straight Victory.

By the United Press.

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 24.—Holy Cross defeated Carnegie Tech, 7 to 0, today and extended its unbeaten record to 18.

Nearly 24,000 fans saw Ouellette, substitute quarterback, pass to O'Donnell, right end, for the lone touchdown.

Midway in the final period Osmanski, Holy Cross fullback, attempted a field goal, but the kick went only to the 6-yard line. Carnelly punted out for Tech to the 45-yard line. On a Statue of Liberty play Brucato ran to the 9-yard line and the touchdown pass followed.

Carnegie Tech penetrated beyond Holy Cross' 15-yard line four times, but each time lost the ball on downs.

Ga. Tech Ties Vanderbilt In Upset

Neither Team Able to Score and Fumbles by Both Prove Costly.

Nashville, Tenn., Oct. 24 (AP).—Vanderbilt University and Georgia Tech battled to a scoreless tie today before 10,000 fans, the superb line play annulling the offensive fireworks of both teams.

The highly favored Tech Engineers did not get their dazzling attack going until the second half, and even then fumbles and pass interceptions kept them from the Vanderbilt goal line.

It was Tech's first setback in Southeastern Conference competition and Vandy's debut in the loop.

Tech fumbled the ball seven times, Vanderbilt regaining five of them. The Commodores fumbled three times and Tech grabbed all of them.

On the first play of the game, Joe Agee shot a 35-yard pass to Jimmy Huggins, who was behind the Tech secondary, but the ball slithered through his fingers. It was an almost certain touchdown, had he held onto the ball.

Later in the same period Agee tossed to Plasman on the 1-yard line, but the big end dropped the ball.

In the second period Huggins fumbled and the engineers got the ball on Vandy's 22. Four plays failed to gain a single foot.

The third period found the Tech backs operating at full steam. They drove from deep in their own territory to the Vandy 37, but here a fumble by Ed Jones was recovered by Huggins.

Midway in the final period Tech cracked the Commodore forward wall consistently to carry the ball from their own 35 to Vandy's 10-yard line. Here Konemann fumbled and Marvin Franklin recovered to end the invaders' last serious threat.

Frederick Game Body Plans Wild Life Refuge

Frederick, Md., Oct. 24.—Plans were made at a meeting of the Frederick County Game and Fish Protective Association last night to purchase and lease several hundred acres of woodland and abandoned farm acreage for the propagation of wild life. The land acquired by the organization will be deeded to the State Conservation Commission, which will post it against hunting.

A committee composed of Dr. Howard Taylor, George F. Grove, A. H. Derr, and Garnett Ball was appointed to acquire the land.

Washington-Lee Trims Virginia, 13-0, in Homecoming Game

Borries Gets First Score On Pass

Cavaliers Outplay Rivals but Fail to Tally in 3 Goal Tries.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., Oct. 24.—Though outplayed throughout, Washington and Lee won from Virginia here today, 13 to 0, before a big homecoming crowd.

The Generals, who registered but four first downs during the 60 minutes of play against 13 for the Cavaliers, scored two touchdowns in the second quarter. Bill Borries, brother of "Buzz" Borries, former Navy star, produced the first score when he grabbed one of Captain Harry Martin's passes and raced 25 yards to score standing up. Sample's try for placement was blocked by the charging Virginia line.

Later in the period, a fumble by Male which gave Washington and Lee the ball on Virginia's 42-yard line led to the second touchdown for the Generals. Dunlap picked up 6 yards through tackle and then shot a long pass to Borries, who was downed on Virginia's 3-yard mark. Dunlap sifted through the middle of the line to score standing, and Sample booted the ball squarely between the uprights for the extra point.

Virginia Gains 230 Yards.

The Cavaliers reeled off much yardage, the total gains amounting to 250 yards, and three times had possession of the ball within Washington and Lee's 10-yard mark. Their first chance came in the opening period when Dunlap fumbled Martin's punt and Haskell pounced upon the ball on the General's 45-yard line. In 10 plays Virginia had the ball on Washington and Lee's 3-yard mark for a first down. A low pass from center was fumbled by Capt. Martin and on the next running play an additional 10 yards was lost. A pass failed and the ball went over to the Generals.

Virginia threatened again in the third quarter. After Hale had reeled of 17 yards, Nistad hurled a pass to Turnbull, who was downed on the Generals' 10-yard line. There the drive ended, however, as Virginia's fourth-down lateral was fumbled.

Martin Out for Year.

Early in the final period, Weeks broke through the Generals' line and blocked Moore's punt, Haskell falling on the ball on Washington and Lee's 10-yard line but there the Generals braced.

Throughout the second half, play was almost entirely in Washington and Lee territory, and not a single first down was registered by the Generals.

Early in the second period, Virginia lost the services of Capt. Martin, who had a big bone in his right ankle broken and the ligaments badly torn. He will be out of the line-up for the remainder of the season.

In the final quarter the ambulance was again rushed on the gridiron to bear away Davenport, star Cavaliers end who, late in the contest was shifted to center, a position which he played throughout last season. His back was injured.

Tigers Defeat Middies On Trick Play

prettily executed "hidden ball play." Sandbach dashed 13 yards to score as the Middies, completely bamboozled by a play that looked like an "end-around," discovered too late that the Princeton quarterback had sneaked off with the pigskin. Sandbach also booted the extra point from placement.

Navy lost no time piling up a statistical advantage. The Midshipmen outrushed and outpassed Princeton by as decisive a margin as they did Yale the previous week, but again things went wrong in the "clutches." Brilliant punting by Chick Kaufman and Tom Mountain pulled the Tigers out of several holes. Four interceptions of Navy passes otherwise told the story of Navy's failure to get anywhere.

Whether influenced by the balmy weather or by the admonition against drinking issued early this week by President Dodds, of Princeton, the big crowd refrained from much show of exuberation. Only a few stray whisky bottles were left in the stands by spectators who needed something besides the weather and the game to warm their spirits.

New York U. Back Romps Through Georgetown Defense

Mike Stelmach, quarterback of the Violets, dashing through the Georgetown line for a 5-yard gain behind clever blocking in the first quarter at New York yesterday.

Hoyas Tied, 7-7, By a 40-Yard N.Y.U. Pass

Barabas and Keating came down empty-handed, but Shorten made a perfect landing—perfect for New York.

But the bitterly disappointed Hoyas refused to acknowledge the equality of their host, and on two plays got a ball carrier out beyond the line of scrimmage and almost away for a touchdown, one run ending the ball game.

Barbaras, whose backing up of the line was superb, raced around end on a fake punt for 30 yards and a first down on his own 45-yard mark. Mike Stelmach got him from behind with a policeman's authoritative grip around the ankles. But the last run was the better, the most breath-taking, for only George Brown, a squat but speedy guard, had a chance of preventing the touchdown and staving off defeat.

Elmer Moulin, sophomore quarterback, carried the ball after gaining possession of it for Georgetown on an intercepted pass at midfield. On the first play he whirled over left tackle, cut sharply to his left and headed goalward.

While the stadium rang and rattled with the beat of drums, Georgetown's frenzied cheers and New York University's anguished moans, he stepped off 5, 10, 15, 25, 35 yards before the slightly disheveled form of Brown hove onto the scene. The Violet linemen caught Moulin with both grimy hands and bore him to earth with the full force of his weight on the 30-yard line, and the game was over. Time expired on the play.

Hardy's touchdown run followed an exchange of kicks which found the white-helmeted New Yorkers coming into possession of the ball on their own 33-yard line.

Stelmach passed to Hall, wide open on the left, for 9 yards and Ed Williams, the young giant of the backfield, pushed his 210 pounds over a couple of prostrate Hoyas for first down on his own 44. Here Georgetown's line began to function, holding for three downs and forcing Dowd to punt.

Hardy came through the line like a 6-inch projectile, getting the full force of the punt on his chest, and it stunned him for the moment. But the sight of the ball, bounding giddily on the greensword, revived him sufficiently to scoop it up and head for the goal line. Dowd and a teammate took out after him, and would have caught him had not Maury Nee, a Washington boy and Georgetown end, sprinted up beside "Red" and mowed down the pursuing party with a neat block as Hardy galloped over the line.

Georgetown, after being outplayed from the start, got a break early in the first period, but failed to cash in on it. A poor kick by Dowd, followed by Duff's good one, which was downed by Snyder on N. Y. U.'s 8-yard line, arranged the trappings.

Hoya's Defense Good.

The Violet's running game failed and Stelmach tried a pass that was intercepted by Bob Nolan on the 21-yard line. A five-yard offside penalty against New York, followed by Keating's line plunge, gave the Hoyas a first down on the 11-yard line. They used three downs moving the ball to the 10 as the period ended, and a pass, first play of the second quarter, failed. New York University taking the ball.

of 10,000 to its collective feet, found Vidnovic passing to Schmarr, but an airtight pass defense held and Ole Miss gained the ball.

The game was the homecoming feature at the University of Mississippi, providing a fitting setting for the first major victory for the Dixie boys of the year.

The Catholic team made a better showing in the statistics than on the field, as most of the game was played in Catholic U. territory.

Catholic made ten first downs to tie in this section with the Rebels, but Cathclio completed only 5 passes out of 17 tries, and Ole Miss was more conservative with two completions for touchtowns out of seven attempts. Total yardage from rushing for Ole Miss was 120 yards, as compared with 133 for Catholic U.

Eagles Beaten By Guardsmen In 14-7 Tilt

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New London, Conn., Oct. 24.—United States Coast Guard Academy avenged a defeat at the hands of American University last year when they eked out a 14-7 win over the Washington boys at Jones Stadium this afternoon.

Four thousand shivering spectators thrilled to the powerful offense of the District youths, only to see the Life Savers capitalize on breaks and misplays.

After Bill Cass carried a punt to the Coast Guard 30 in the second quarter American scored. In order, Bartlett, on a reverse around left end, dashed to the 15; Toner tossed a pass to Rogers on the 9, and another to Bartlett over the goal line for first blood. Winslow took the ball over for the extra point.

Sitnik kicked off to Waldron who returned it to the 30-yard line, from which point the Cadets started a 70-yard march to score on a pass from Cass to Mark Whalen, Davis kicked the extra point.

Then Land kicked off to Toner, who fumbled the kick on the Eagle 4-yard line. A poor kick at this point coupled with a nice return by Larry Davis put the Life Savers in scoring position once again. Two short passes Cass to Land and to Waldron brought the ball to the 1-foot line, from which point Waldron scored through center. Davis dropkicked the extra point.

In the fourth period Pete Sitnik blocked Waldron's kick and Shoop recovered on the Coast Guard 49. From here Winslow and Bartlett alternated in carrying the ball to the Coast Guard 1-yard line only to be stopped by another determined Life Saver stand.

Tulsa, Okla., Oct. 24 (AP).—Old-fashioned powerhouse football gave Tulsa University a 13-to-0 homecoming victory today over Oklahoma A. and M. The Tulsans had been rated as an aerial threat.

The first touchdown resulted from a neat 17-yard pass and a slick lateral, but straight football and good kicking put the Tulsans in a position for the score. The second marker came after smashing line bucks.

Gobblers Bow To Stronger N. C. State

V. P. I. Stays on Defensive Throughout to Bow by 13-0 Score.

By the Associated Press.

Raleigh, N. C., Oct. 24.—North Carolina State's Wolfpack defeated the Virginia Tech Gobblers, 13 to 0, before 6,000 football fans here today by pushing over touchdowns in the second and third periods.

State drove down to the Gobblers' 18-yard mark early in the first period, with Ryneska doing most of the ball carrying, but Sodaro intercepted a Wolfpack pass on his 10-yard line and V. P. I. punted to midfield. Cowboy Robinson returned the kick 9 yards, then shot a pass to Gadd for 8 more. Gadd made first down by a quarterback sneak as the period ended with the ball on the V. P. I. 26-yard line. The Gobblers had punted on first down at every opportunity except one.

As the second period ended, Robinson passed to Barden on V. P. I.'s 10, but here the Gobblers held and a fourth down pass into the end zone fell incomplete. V. P. I. punted out to the 46-yard line.

State came right back to score. Davis, a substitute for Robinson, passed to Cara for a 35-yard gain and a first down on the V. P. I. 11. Four running plays got a first down and Ryneska ploughed over for the touchdown. Regdon's placement failed.

State scored its second touchdown early in the third period after Gadd's kick to V. P. I.'s 6-yard line set the Gobblers back on their heels. Davis took Dickerson's kick back to V. P. I.'s 40. A penalty for offside and Ryneska's plunge gave the Wolves a first down on the 29. Davis then passed to Bardes for the touchdown. Regdon place-kicked the point. After the kickoff, the Virginians registered their first first down on their own 40, put a punting duel ensued and State had the ball on the Gobblers' 40 as the period ended: V. P. I., 0; N. C. State, 13.

The Wolves drove to V. P. I.'s 7-yard line and again to the 4 in the fourth quarter, but lost the ball on downs both times. An exchange of punts put State back to its 34, and Schwerdt, sub for Gadd, passed to Berry for a 36-yard gain to the V. P. I. 34. Another long pass went incomplete as the game ended: V. P. I., 0; N. C. State, 13.

Gophers Sweep Over Purdue By 33 to 0

Buhler who were accredited with Minnesota's touchdowns, three of them going as the result of intercepted passes by which the Boilermakers had hoped to offset the ruthless, desperate charging of Minnesota's power.

The game opened with expected thrills when on the second play from scrimmage after receiving the kickoff Uram slipped around left end and tossed a lateral to Alfonse, who galloped 30 yards before he was forced out of bounds. Then the Gophers intercepted Cecil Isbell's pass with Wilkinson snatching the ball and running 31 yards to Purdue's 41.

Uram and Whitman Rork lugged the ball to the 14. Uram flipped a lateral to Alfonse who slid over for the first marker.

The Boilermakers opened up with an aerial attack in the second. Cecil Isbell whipped the ball to Powell, who made a beautiful catch amid a pack of Gophers for a first down on Minnesota's 16. There the Boilermakers lost their only scoring chance when Drake fumbled, King recovering for the Gophers.

Minnesota turned on its power against the weakening Purdue early in the third and pushed over two touchdowns.

Spadaccini tossed a lateral to Uram on the Boilermaker 30 and the latter ran for a touchdown. Then Uram grabbed Isbell's pass on the Minnesota 22 and raced 50 yards to the Purdue 28. Three smashes by Whitman Rork netted the third touchdown.

The Boilermakers started to disintegrate in the final period. Punting exchanges set the invaders back, and Matheny broke away on a 36-yard touchdown gallop.

L.S.U. Turns Back Arkansas, 19 to 7

By the Associated Press.

Shreveport, La., Oct. 24.—Louisiana State University's Tigers turned back the University of Arkansas Razorbacks, 19 to 7, before 15,000 fans at the Louisiana State fair today.

A steady rain made for heavy footing on the playing field.

The Tigers hard running attack dominated the play, although Arkansas made several long gains through the air.

The Porkers' lone touchdown was the result of a fluke play in the fourth period, when the L. S. U. safety man batted an Arkansas pass into the hands of Brown on the goal line. The Arkansas back stepped over the last stripe for a touchdown.

The Razorbacks' daring overhead plays carried them deep into the Louisiana State territory on several occasions, but three times their advance was checked, when heaves were intercepted.

trate farther than Maryland's 30-yard line.

It was Smith, the former Tech High boy, who gave Maryland its first scoring opportunity late in the first period.

Smith gave Maryland possession of the leather on the Syracuse 34-yard line. Guckeyson ripped off 9 yards on a shovel pass from Meade, but Maryland was penalized 15 yards to the Syracuse 40 on the first play of the second period.

Guckeyson shot a long pass to Meade, but the sophomore dropped it. Meade punted out on the 3-yard line, but Maryland took the ball on the Syracuse 25 when the Orange was penalized for roughing the kicker.

Guckeyson picked up 2 yards and then passed to Meade, who made a neat catch and fell on the 6-yard line. The Syracuse line held Guckeyson for no gain, but the bruising Marylander tore around the Syracuse right end on the next play, out-sprinting Killer Kane, fighting Syracuse guard, and raced over the goal line. Guckeyson appeared safely nailed behind the line of scrimmage on the play, but fought and twisted himself free to score. John Gormley's place-kick was good.

Punted 63 Yards.

A quick-kick by Guckeyson to the Syracuse 6-yard line shortly afterward led directly to the second touchdown. It was a beautiful 63-yard punt and Maryland seized it for a big break when it escaped Jimmy Nolan, Syracuse quarterback, with Meade falling on it on the 7-yard line. On the second play, Guckeyson started around his right end but suddenly stopped, picked out Gormley far to the left in the end zone and fired him a perfect strike for the touchdown.

A 19-yard return of a punt to the Syracuse 41-yard line by Guckeyson late in the third quarter started Maryland on its third touchdown jaunt. Charlie Ellinger cut through the left side of his line 13 yards to the 28-yard stripe and Meade picked up 22 more on a lateral from Coleman Headley.

Meade fumbled, but recovered on the 10-yard line and on the next play Headley went around the Syracuse left end on a spectacular run to stagger outside on the 2-yard line.

Syracuse threw back Meade, but on the last down the battering soph smashed through the right side of the line for the touchdown. Gormley's place-kick gave him two out of three for the day.

Syracuse Loses Chance.

Syracuse's big chance came in the second period when a poor punt by Meade went outside on the Maryland 41-yard line, but Marty Glickman, Olympic sprinter, fumbled on the first play and Walton recovered for the Terps.

The Orange staged a 45-yard march to the Maryland 30-yard stripe just before the half ended when Ray Reckmack completed four passes in a row, but Ellinger knocked down another toss as the period ended. Vannie Albanese, celebrated Syracuse back, was the outstanding ground-gainer for the Orange but the Maryland line saw to it that his yardage was distinctly limited. It is a good bet that Coach Vic Hanson, a great all-American end for Syracuse in his day, was watching the brilliant work of Smith and Willis with envy.

The victory gave Maryland the lead in the four-game series between the schools, having won, 10-7, in 1920, losing, 42-0, in 1921 and playing to a 0-0 tie in Baltimore last year.

Field Goal Wins for Norfolk W.-M., 16-to-15, Over Gallaudet

Nixon's Toe Breaks Tie With Blue

Quarterback Star Makes Safety Later to Score Victory.

Claiborne Nixon, a little whirling dervish who spends a good deal of his time practicing field goals, kicked one yesterday for William and Mary College (Norfolk Division), and thereby kicked Gallaudet's silent warriors into defeat by a bitter 16-15 count in their annual football game at Kendall Green.

With both teams locked at 13-all, and the two lines beating off challenges to such an extent that a tie game was in prospect, Quarterback Nixon calmly stepped back to his 20-yard line late in the third quarter and drop-kicked the ball over the uprights with the accuracy of a Tennessee rifleman.

Nixon's drop-kick won the game, but it was a bit of strategy on the part of the Norfolk boy in the last quarter which helped stave off possible defeat.

Penned in on his 2-yard line with the Gallaudet line ready to block a kick, he took the snap from center, ran back for an intentional safety, and thus did Gallaudet climb to within a point of the Southern invaders.

Gallaudet Takes Lead.

Gallaudet, its line and back coordinating like the parts of a smooth-working Diesel engine, gave its supporters cause for cheering when the blue-shirted boys scored two touchdowns in the second quarter, and mounted into a 13-0 lead.

A bullet-like 25-yard pass, Hoffmeister to Capt. Brown, placed the ball on W. and M.'s 5-yard line, from whence Race Drake, stubby, streamlined-built quarterback, knifed through the enemy's right tackle for a touchdown. Hoffmeister kicked the extra point.

A few minutes later Drake raced through the W. and M. front wall for another touchdown from the 6.

Padgett, a sub, caught Hoffmeister's punt on his own 20, reversed his field, zig-zagged 80 yards down the field for W. and M.'s first touchdown. Root, Doyle and Mercer did some fine "taking out" on Padgett's sensational sprint. Edmonds kicked the extra point.

Hardly had two minutes elapsed before Edmonds, a sub, caught a 15-yard pass from Nixon on Gallaudet's 40-yard line, and galloped to a touchdown. Nixon's kick was blocked.

Thus in less than four minutes the visitors had wiped out Gallaudet's lead, tying the score just before the first half whistle was tooted.

Guckeyson's Accurate Pass Nets Maryland Touchdown

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Maryland's candidate for All-American honors, Bill Guckeyson, halfback, has just hurdled a pass which Gormley, back, is about to catch over the goal line in the second period of yesterday's game which the Old Liners won at Syracuse, 20-0. The ball is shown in midair.

Hornets Wallop Wilson Owls By 32 to 0

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Harrisonburg, Va., Oct. 24.—A husky Shenandoah College eleven made its first appearance at home this afternoon with a 32 to 0 victory over the lighter, but fighting Wilson Teachers Owls, of Washington.

Coach Curg Hill used two full teams in the game and the "B" team seemed to get better results than the "A." Coach "Doc" White, of Wilson, had only a few replacements.

The stand made by the Teachers in the last half, when they held Shenandoah to one touchdown, was one of the features of the game. The Hornets ran wild in the second quarter with three touchdowns.

Wilson could do nothing with the burly Shenandoah line and registered only one first down, that after a 9-yard pass, Winter to French. Shenandoah registered 13 first downs, but found the Wilson defense staunch in the scoring zone.

Eddie Wilamowski, of Ambridge, Pa., lugged over two of the Hornet touchdowns and was a consistent ground gainer. He contributed the longest run of the day, a 30-yard dash, which paved the way for the first touchdown. He got off a 50-yard punt, which went out on the 4-yard line in the last quarter and set the pace for the final Shenandoah touchdown. Winter's punt from behind his goal line traveled only 17 yards and Lamb gabbed it and ran for the final score. Johnson ran 20 yards for the second touchdown in the second quarter. Power plays after intercepted Wilson passes provided the two other touchdowns in the second period.

Capt. Newton, Foster, Branca and Ervin played best for the Teachers.

Piedmont Hunt Opens

Upperville, Va., Oct. 24.—Dr. A. C. Randolph, M. F. H., has announced that the reopening meet of the Piedmont Hunt, oldest recognized hunt in America, will be held Wednesday, November 4, from Grafton, home of the master. The meets will go out every Wednesday and Saturday during the season, if the weather permits. The meets were formerly held on Tuesday and Friday but due to conflicts with the days of other hunt meets, a change was made in the Piedmont schedule this year.

Navy Soccer Eleven Noses Out Yale, 1 to 0

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 24.—Scoring a goal late in the first period, and playing a bang-up defensive game the rest of the way, Navy defeated Yale on the soccer pitch here today, 1 to 0.

The Elis got off to a good start and kept play in the Middies' zone during the opening period. Then Navy began to force the issue and within the next minute and a half Capt. Sanderson scored.

He will drive a new type 12-cylinder Alfa-Romeo in the 1937 Indianapolis Memorial Day contest, he said as he and his Italian teammates, Count Antonio Brivio and Dr. Giuseppe Farina, sailed for home on the liner Rex.

Western Maryland's Passes Beat St. Mary's Team, 32-12

By a Staff Correspondent.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 24.—The Green Terrors, of Western Maryland, mindful of last week's 13-0 drubbing at the hands of Villanova, today gained revenge on the touring St. Mary Rattlers, of San Antonio, Tex., by smothering them beneath a barrage of aerial works, 32-12. It was the Texans initial taste of defeat this year.

And Douglas Locke, fullback for the Texans, took the opening kickoff on his own 35-yard line and ran it back 55 yards where it was planted on the Western Maryland 10. Locke, just to prove that he was in earnest, tossed on the next play to Paul Buchanan, end, who was waiting in the end zone. There was no one near him. Gibson's placement was low.

Western Maryland was visibly annoyed and wasted no time with their long passes, which proved their only offensive weapon.

Leroy Campbell, left half, and spearhead of the Terror's attack, took the Texan's kick on his 15-yard line and tore off 25. Shortly afterward a pass—Campbell to Benjamin—gained 45 yards. On a lateral—Campbell to Lutt—the score was tied.

Yavada was wide with his kick.

Again in the second quarter Campbell unleashed his hot hand and flung two passes, one to Lassahn and one to Lathrope, each good for 7 points.

Lathrop kicked squarely between the posts for extra points.

Minutes before the half, Mujwit snapped a Rattler pass and charged for the Texan line only to be cheated of a score by Todd, who stopped him on the 1-yard line. Lathrop plunged through center for the tally.

The game had settled down and the spectators were discussing Navy football tactics when this fellow Todd ran 35 yards for the Texan's second and last tally of the day.

La Salle Trims Mountaineers By 13 to 6

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., Oct. 24.—Marty Brill's La Salle College eleven, of Philadelphia, outfumbled Mount St. Mary's here this afternoon before a home-coming crowd of 3,000 but went on to win, 13 to 6.

La Salle backs had seven costly fumbles to their discredit while Mountaineer backs ran a close second with five. The rivals battled through the first quarter without scoring, La Salle's attack being handicapped by fumbles. Early in the second quarter Kosteva faked a reverse, came out the right side of the line and ran 75 yards to a touchdown. Sciaretta's attempted placement was blocked by Walsky.

In the third period, Williams' pass to Sciaretta was good for 20 yards, putting the ball on the Mount 35-yard stripe. Donohue skirted left end for the remaining distance on the next play. Sciaretta added the point from placement.

Scesney's quick kicks paved the way for the lone Mount touchdown in the final period. August fumbled one of Scesney's quick punts on his own 6-yard line and Ruback recovered for the Mountaineers. Kokie threw a short pass to Scesney and the latter scored standing up. Kokie failed to get off his attempted kick from placement.

Central High Fieldball, Soccer Teams Score

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Lonaconing, Md., Oct. 24.—Central High School's soccer and fieldball teams turned in their second double triumph of the week when they defeated the elevens of Allegany High School, of Cumberland.

The Central girls, unbeaten thus far, scored their fifth consecutive victory over Allegany, 7 to 0, while the local soccerites won 6 o 2.

In the fieldball game, Viola Mathews accounted for three points, Elsie Morton made two and Ruth Rimney collected two at the penalty line.

Petersburg High Wins From Richmond, 6 to 0

Petersburg, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—Petersburg High School conquered Thomas Jefferson, of Richmond, 6-0, to register the Crimson Wave's first victory in a State Conference play here this afternoon.

A 25-yard pass, heaved by Rufus Mitchell into the waiting arms of Johnson, substitute end, gave Petersburg its score at the outset of the second period Nelson's placement for the extra point was blocked.

Jefferson contributed to its own by repeated fumbles.

W.-L. Thinlies Beaten.

Lexington, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—The North Carolina cross country team defeated Washington and Lee, 20 to 35, here today.

Hendrix, of North Carolina, was the first to finish in the fast time of 30 minutes 16 seconds. Coming in fourth, Edwards led the Generals in 30 minutes 18 seconds.

The Tarheels finished first, second, third, fifth and ninth.

Spiders Lose 20-0 Game To Cadets

V.M.I.'s Shophomores Too Much for Richmond at Home-coming.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 24.—The flying squadron of Virginia Military Institute dropped a 20-0 bomb into the University of Richmond's home-coming celebration before 9,000 spectators here today.

The sophomore-piloted Keydets counted late in the first period when Ray Brittingham caught a blocked Richmond kick and ran 13 yards for a touchdown. Trzeciak converted with a placement.

Alert following of the ball gave V. M. I. possession of a fumble on the Spider 12 in the third period and another tally followed. The final score came in the first minute of the fourth quarter when Doc Saunders, V. M. I. end, took Billy Roberson's 35-yard pass across the goal line. Wayt Clark booted the extra point.

Spiders Make More Gains.

Except for the plays which figured directly in the scoring, the Richmond eleven battled almost on even terms with the rugged red and white jerseyed Keydets, getting five first downs to four for the victors.

Superb kicking by Andy Trzeciak, V. M. I. quarter, pushed the Spiders repeatedly back deep into their own territory and erased the advantage held by Richmond in rushing. Spider backs picked up 121 yards on running plays against 97 for the Keydets, but most of the long Richmond gains came late in the game against V. M. I. reserves.

The play of the stalwart lines of the two squads was the outstanding feature of the contest. Tackling and blocking were superior to anything seen in the stadium here this season, with loose handling of the ball by backs on both teams furnishing the only ragged interludes to a well-played game.

Brown No Match For Penn Plungers

Philadelphia, Oct. 24 (AP).—Precise in the air and ponderous on the ground, Pennsylvania crushed Brown University with ease today, 48 to 6, before 35,000 at Franklin Field.

Piling up a pair of touchdowns in each of the first three periods, Penn's deceptive backfield functioned brilliantly behind the powerful line that dashed Princeton's hopes a week ago, giving strong evidence today of being one of the best in the East.

Again it was Lew Elverson and Franky Murray who set the pace for the Quakers against the hapless Bears. Elverson scored two of the Penn touchdowns, while Murray made a like number and booted five extra points in a row from placement.

Rugged Mountaineer Crew Finds Praying Colonels Easy Pass Victims.

By the Associated Press.

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 24.—Kelly Moan passed and kicked the rugged West Virginians to a 26 to 13 victory over Center College here today.

The West Virginians scored in the first period after two long passes, but missed the extra point. Van Huss plunged over for Center in the second from the 1-yard line and Stahl converted.

The Mountaineers struck back quickly, Moan pitching a long one to Lorenz, who scored standing up. Moan converted the point. Barna, big end, blocked Harrington's punt in the same period and recovered it for a touchdown. Again Moan converted.

Stahl plunged through the right side of his line in the third and ran 70 yards to score. In the final period West Virginia clinched the game after a steady drive and Moan plunged through to score.

Mich. State Bows To Marquette, 13-7

Milwaukee, Oct. 24 (AP).—Marquette University, with Ray Buivid's passes, knocked Michigan State off the list of unbeaten football teams here today before a homecoming crowd of 20,000. Buivid passed to Art Guepe in the first period and again in the last to Anderson, substitute end, for a 13-to-7 victory.

Johns Hopkins Soccer Team Beats Terps, 2-1

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 24.—The Johns Hopkins soccer team defeated the University of Maryland today, 2 to 1, in one of the hardest fought games of the season.

The Terrapins took the lead in the first quarter when Morris, outside right, converted a perfect corner kick into a goal. Hopkins came back strong in the second period to knot the count when Linthicum scored on a nice pass from Briggs.

Both teams fought on equal terms until with but five minutes to go for the end of the battle Targin fed Briggs a perfect pass, which was kicked in for the margin of victory.

Staunton Overwhelmed By Massanutten, 27-6

Staunton, Va., Oct. 24.—Outclassed by a smooth, aggressive Massanutten Military Academy eleven, Staunton Military's team was sent down in its first State prep game here today, 27-6.

Bezarro's pass to Murray accounted for the first score after a Staunton fumble was recovered by Massanutten on the 8-yard line. Halfback Terry made two more in the second period, one on an interception and a 60-yard run, another when he picked up his own fumble at midfield and ran through the Staunton team. Staunton capitalized a fumble after the half to score from the Massanutten 37-yard line on Matuzas' beautiful catch of Laux's long pass.

Yale Reserves Beat Rutgers By 28 to 0

First Team Plays a Small Part of Game as Subs Win on Passes.

By the Associated Press.

New Haven, Conn., Oct. 24.—Yale's reserves huffed and puffed out a 28-to-0 triumph over Rutgers today in the first football meeting between the institutions since 1890.

A crowd estimated at 12,000 saw the scarlet-clad visitors yield four touchdowns to the Eli second and third teams.

Capt. Larry Kelley, who played little more than one quarter for Yale, started the Elis' attack functioning midway in the second period, leading a touchdown tempo, which soon after was picked up by Charley Ewart, Al. Wilson and Bud Humphrey.

Rutgers made no serious scoring threat while Yale reeled off 21 first downs to Rutgers' four.

Passes led to virtually all of the victor's scores, Yale completing nine out of 25 for 161 yards, while holding Rutgers to 24 yards on four completed forwards out of 14 tries. midway in the second period, Kelley took Ewart's pass on the 10 and raced over for the first score.

Randolph-Macon Bows to Woodberry

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Front Royal, Va., Oct. 24.—Randolph-Macon Academy lost to the Woodberry Forest football eleven here this afternoon, 20 to 0.

A Randolph-Macon fumble, Woodberry lateral passes and good blocking accounted for the three touchdowns. Randolph-Macon fumbled on its 20-yard line for an 18-yard loss in the first period, and the visitors relayed a lateral pass to W. Adams, who scored.

Woodberry scored again in the third period after W. Adams snared a Randolph-Macon pass and gained 25 yards. Stegeman received a pass behind the goal line for the second marker. The visitors scored for the third time on a 45-yard run with a punt by G. Adams.

W. Adams, Covington, Worthington and Stegeman were outstanding for the visitors and Levens, Lyon Baker, Waugh Frene and Williams did good defensive work for Randolph-Macon.

Washington Pros Seek Lead in Portsmouth Game Here Today

Cubs Strong On Aerial Attack

Local Team Has Chance to Catch Leading Richmond Arrows.

First place in the South Atlantic Association race is the goal of the Washington Pros today when they face a formidable eleven from Portsmouth, Va., in Griffith Stadium at 3 p. m. today.

Through its defeat of the Alexandria Celtics last week, the team reposes snugly in second place and if a strengthened Baltimore outfit can dispose of the Richmond Arrows, now leading, and the Pros can turn back the Cubs of Portsmouth, it will be leading the six-team organization tonight.

But beating the Cubs is quite a problem. The invaders are almost all Tidewater Virginia residents and almost all of them distinguished themselves in Virginia schools. Six are alumni of Virginia Tech, two come from William and Mary and one comes from Hampden-Sydney.

Prominent among the visitors is elongated, easygoing Tommy Johnson, of Newport News, who, as captain of one of the worst teams in the University of Virginia's history, won several games almost by himself.

Air Game Potent.

The Cubs come to Griffith Stadium still in the runnning for the league pennant and not too happy over their 14-6 beating by the Richmond Arrows last Sunday. An intercepted pass followed by a long run led to their defeat at the hands of the league leaders in the Virginia stadium.

Today the Cubs are expected to turn loose their full aerial repertoire, their specialty in league competition.

With one exception the Capital team will present the same line-up which defeated Alexandria last week. Gene Augusterfer, former Catholic University, star, who has been playing fullback, will shift posts with Willis Benner, at quarter. McGann and Buscher will remain at end, Katalinas and Sands at tackle, Laskin and Webb at guard and Andorka at center. G. W.'s Carlin and Dick Nelson will fit in the other backfield posts.

The Washington Pros are unique among professional teams in that almost every player on the squad formerly starred for a District college. Most played for Catholic University, Georgetown, George Washington and Maryland, with a sprinkling of players from North Carolina, Western Maryland and other nearby schools.

Price scale today will be 55 cents for adults and 25 cents for children.

Fairmont State Beats Shepherd by 14 to 13

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Oct. 24.—Shepherdstown, W. Va., Fairmont State Teachers' College made good use of two breaks in their annual game with Shepherd State Teachers' here this afternoon to yield two touchdowns, with a point after each to nose out the locals, 14-13.

Shepherd used an open style to push the play and Fairmont replied in kind when opportunity offered.

A considerable crowd saw the contest, returning here for homecoming day events.

U. S. C.'s Savage Thrusts Beat Stanford, 14-7; Keep Slate Clean

By the Associated Press.

Palo Alto, Calif., Oct. 24.—Coupling savage ground and aerial thrusts with breaks of the game, University of Southern California's Trojans continued pounding toward an undefeated football record today with a 14-to-7 victory over Stanford's Indians.

Thirty-five thousand fans saw the 1936 gridiron creation of Howard Jones thunder through and over a Stanford team for the first time since 1932.

Southern California's first touchdown came in the second period. A pass thrown by Stanford's left-handed fullback, Jake Brigham, was intercepted by big Gilbert Kuhn, U. S. C. center and captain. He was spilled at midfield, where the Trojans brought all their power to bear in a ground and aerial attack. Wehba, substitute left end, caught a pass over the goal line. Wehba also added the extra point.

An intercepted pass in the fourth period gave the Trojans a two-touchdown lead. Coye Dunn, substitute left half, hauled down Brigham's throw 35 yards from Stanford's goal, and behind good interference sprinted over the line. Stanley, substitute right end, place kicked the extra point.

Before Trojan followers were comfortably settled after a wild cheering outburst, Stanford came back with a touchdown of its own, at the end of a 73-yard drive. Calvelli, substituted fullback, went over from the one-yard line.

Crucial Games Set for Today In City Loop

Crucial games are scheduled this afternoon in the National City Football League, with Palace A. C. meeting the Cardinals at Duffy Stadium, Seat Pleasant, and Arlington A. C. facing Trinity A. C. at Ballston's field. Both games will start at 2:30 o'clock.

Regal Clothiers, the league pacesetters, who have won two straight victories, draw a bye.

Today will mark the debut of Palace, which has been holding energetic workouts all week. Among the outstanding Palace players are Tim O'Connor, Monk Pell, Norman Schlorb, Eddie Ealy, Harry Dailey, Mike Cronan, Frank Aquilino and Fred Howlin. The Cardinals will bank on such starts as John Hefferman, Harry Hofberg, Tommy Doonis, Oscar Basilko, Johnny Hughes and Leonard Heinecke.

Arlington, which won from the Cardinals and lost to Regal, will muster 15 former Washington and Lee High School players for today's game. During the past week Coach Archie Via has been working overtime with Arlington to perfect a high-powered offense. Lanny Birch, Joe Via and the Smallwood brothers will toil in the Arlington backfield today.

Trinity last season played under the name of the Georgetown Boys' Club, winning the 135-pound title. The team has been greatly strengthened by the addition of players from St. Stephens, American Beer and Cleveland A. C.

Maryland Deaf School Beats Frederick, 8-4

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Episcopalians Swamp Presbyterians 39-6

Danville, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—Led by their fast-gaited quarterback, John McRae, Virginia Episcopal School breezed through to a 39-6 verdict here today over an outclassed Virginia Presbyterian School eleven.

McRae was the spearhead of the visitors' attack, crossing the goal line on four occasions to score. The visitors used every man in uniform.

Harrisonburg Downs Wilson Eleven, 24-0

Harrisonburg, Va., Oct. 24.—Four touchdown marches, marked by lateral and shovel passes, gave Harrison High Blue Streaks a 24-0 victory over Wilson High of Waynesboro here last night.

Georgia Gives Auburn Scare, Bows, 20-13

Bulldogs Return in Second Half to Score Twice on Invader Crew.

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ga., Oct. 24.—Some magic wrought in the Georgia dressing room at half time turned Auburn's football picnic into a nightmare today and game's end found the rumpled Tigers glad to accept the 20-13 victory that kept their record clean.

Seldom has a team been more completely outclassed offensively than Georgia was in the first half. The Tigers rolled up 13 points while keeping the Bulldogs inside their own 25.

But after the intermission Georgia revived its drooping supporters by taking the kick-off and blasting through to a score in eight plays from the Georgia 26.

Statistics of the first half gave Auburn 10 first downs to none, but the final figures were 15 to 8.

Glenn Johnson came in at halfback for Georgia to start the second half and slashed through tackle for 23, starting from the Georgia 26. Two more runs of 20 and 15 yards by Green and Johnson and a pass, Green to Gillespie, carried to the Auburn 2. Stevens swung wide to score a moment later.

Kilgore Tallies.

Kilgore's smart kicking soon gave the Tigers the ball on the Georgia 49. Kilgore stormed through left tackle, cut back neatly and seemed gone when Stevens dragged him down on the 19.

Then Kilgore bored center for 11 and carried the final 2 yards on a plunge four plays later. Fenton added his second successful placement.

But the Bulldogs refused to let up. A punt exchange delivered the ball on the Auburn 40. Alf Anderson tried to pass, found no receiver, turned completely around and swept his left flanks for 30 yards. One play later he heaved a perfect pass to Flankman Maffett who took it behind the goal. Anderson then added the point.

Roanoke Beats W. & M., 13-0, In Upset

By the Associated Press.

Williamsburg, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—Roanoke College struck twice in the first half here today to achieve its first victory over William and Mary in 13 years, 13-to-0.

Two concerted drives totaling 79 yards brought the Maroons' touchdowns, but the rest of the game they were occupied chiefly in checking William and Mary advances.

Twice in the last period the Indians drove past midfield on desperate aerial offensives, but one ended in an interception and the other time Roanoke held for downs on their own 44.

Flickinger's work in running back punts and Deela Terro's accurate passing featured the Indian threats, while McGowan put up a brilliant battle at center.

Joining with Roanoke's flashy backs in the honors for the Maroons were Brewbaker, right tackle, and the Snidow brothers at end.

Roanoke piled up ten first downs, all in the first half, compared with William and Mary's five, which all came in the last two periods. Roanoke completed five out of 12 passes and intercepted three alien tosses. The Indians tried 15, completed five and intercepted two of Roanoke's.

College football lettermen have been requested to join the club by President John F. McGovern.

Washington State's Field Goal Beats Oregon in Air Battle, 3-0

By the Associated Press.

Eugene, Oreg., Oct. 24.—Washington State aimed one sure shot in an aerial battle today and sent the pigskin flying through the uprights for a 3-0 victory over University of Oregon.

The Cougars cashed in from the 17-yard line via Fullback Roger Dougherty's toe midway of the second period.

It was Oregon's first defeat in eight years on home grounds. A homecoming crowd of more than 10,000 saw the game.

The Cougars crossed the Oregon goal line in the first period, but the play was called back because a Washington State lineman was offside.

The victory was a costly one for the oCugars. Bob Fletcher, crack sophomore halfback, came out of a kicking play with a dislocated knee.

Washington State's scoring opportunity in the second period came after the Cougars smashed from the Oregon 46 to the 13. Littlefield got around end for two and with fourth down and seven to go, Dougherty dropped back and made the field goal.

Fordham Halts St. Mary's Drive to Goal

Pacini Sets Pace in District Bowling League

Reaching the form that carried him to top of the country's bowlers four years ago, Ollie Pacini, of Northeast Temple, is setting the pace in the District League with an exceptional 15-game average of 128-2, the highest mark ever attained in the all-star circuit.

The Washington Brewery team anchorman has spanked the maples for sets of 367, 377, 360, 407 and 411. The two 400's being the only two in a row shot this season.

After holding the league lead for a week, Henry May, the Rose Liquor Store youngster, fell to third place when a low 336 set marred a heretofore sensational streak. His 15-game average is 125-14, still by far the finest rolling witnessed in the league by a newcomer.

Clarke in Second Place.

Astor Clarke is holding to second place among the city's bowling experts. The country's No. 1 shooter, who is to meet Meyer Johnson here in a head-to-head match, is sailing along with a 126-8.

Tony Santini, of Convention Hall, is holding fourth place with an average of 125-5, getting 386 for his last effort. Johnny Anderson, of Rose Liquor Store, hiked his rolling to 123-7 to assume fifth position, five pins in front of Howard Parsons, the flashy Lucky Striker, who has slackened his a trifle, from an early leading pace of 135 to 123-2.

No Favorite in Tomorrow Night's Scott-Rivers Battle at Arena

Hard Hitters To Clash in Feature

Cowboy Was Winner in 2 Previous Contests; Good Prelims.

California Joe Rivers, a heavy-hitting lightweight, and Cowboy Howard Scott, a hard-punching counter-puncher, will make passes at each other in a feature bout scheduled for 10 rounds at Turner's Arena tomorrow night.

The boys who make a habit of wagering on the outcome of sporting events are refusing to establish a favorite in the bout, offering no better than even money no matter which way one's betting desires are directed.

Even money on the bout is somewhat peculiar, since Scott has defeated Rivers in two precious bouts and, on form alone, figures to repeat in this match.

The first time the two tangled, Scott eked out a close decision in a Florida ring. The second time they engaged in warfare, Scott whipped the tights off Rivers in Baltimore.

Thriller in Baltimore.

The Baltimore bout was so filled with action, however, that promoters began angling for a rematch. Scott would have none of it.

"Rivers, stay way from my door," he pleaded whenever the idea of a return with Joe was mentioned. "My goodness gracious, gee-whillikins, or words to that effect, how many times does one have to subdue a rival to be considered his superior?"

Scott is fighting Rivers again only because he needs to rebuild himself following a knockout at the hands of Chino Alvarez a few weeks ago. Like Alvarez, Rivers is a very tough puncher, who packs enough authority in each hand to stop even the most rugged opponent with a single slap.

While Scott has descended, because of the Alvarez knockout, Rivers has been rising in the world. Only a few nights ago he defeated Nick Camaretta, who had just finished holding Champion Pete Sarron to a draw in Richmond.

Perhaps it is the fact that Scott has faltered in his last fight and Rivers seems to be going his best that has induced the gambling gentry to make the bout an even-money betting affair.

Buddy Scott rapidly rising light-heavyweight of Howard Scott, will appear in a six-round semifinal against Jakie Friedman, of Baltimore. Formerly South Atlantic amateur champion, Friedman has defeated Henry Irving and Walter Kirkwood here.

Bobby Dechter, a beverage dispenser in a popular night spot, and Joe Temes, who also dishes out drinks for a livelihood, will meet in another six-rounder which has been dubbed "The Battle of the Bartenders." In the remaining bout scheduled to last half-a-dozen rounds, Ray Ingram will tackle Joe Straiger, of Tampa.

A four-rounder between Sammy Williams and Prince Albert, colored middleweights, will raise the curtain.

Bridgewater Bows To Juniata, 25 to 0

Huntingdon, Pa., Oct. 24.—Juniata College turned in its third victory of the season here today by blanking a scrappy Bridgewater outfit, 25-0.

Cook skirted a Bridgewater flank for Juniata's initial touchdown, and the Indians pushed across two more tallies in the second period, when Jenkins crashed through the Bridgewater line for repeated gains to put the team in scoring position. He also took the ball across both times during the period.

Bridgewater opened up a threatening aerial attack in the last period that carried them to the Juniata 20-yard stripe, but the offensive was checked by a sturdy Indian defense.

Juniata led in first downs, 17 to 3, and gained 372 yards from scrimmage to 33 for the Eagles. In the aerial department, however, the Eagles held a decided edge.

Warrenton Hunt Dens Trio of Foxes

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Warrenton, Va., Oct. 24.—Meeting at Rockhill, home of John Chauncy Williams, in the Casanova hunt territory this morning a large field of the Warrenton hunt members and their guests had a morning of grand sport.

Starting three foxes, the riders enjoyed a fast run of 60 minutes, another of 45 and still a third to den their quarry on each occasion.

The finish was also at Rock Hill where Mr. Williams, joint master of the Warrenton hunt Amory S. Carhart entertained the field at breakfast.

Among those riding were the M F H and Mrs. Amory S. Carhart, J. C. Williams William E. Doeller, William B. Strett, Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Winmill, and Miss Virginia Winmill, Miss Lucie Duer, Mrs. Edward Friendly, Mrs. Paul Abbott, her guests Mr. Allen Lehman and Mr. Whitehead, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond McGrath, W. H. Pool, Mrs. Baldwin Day Spilman, jr., Miss Dorothy Montgomery, and others.

Landon Nips St. James On Pass Interception

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 24.—Landon School of Washington, defeated St. James here today, 13 to 6, pushing over the winning touchdown after a sustained drive in the third quarter. Landon mixed end runs and short passes to bring the ball to the 5-yard line, where Berkeley went through the center for the touchdown.

Landon's first touchdown came on a freak play in the first quarter when Ensey intercepted a forward pass a yard from the passer's hand and ran 30 yards for the touchdown. St. James scored in the second quarter on straight football.

Around the Ring . . .

By Bill McCormick.

Within the last few years it has become the practice for every idle dreamer possessing a few large sheets of blue paper and a bottle of white ink to start drawing up plans for a "massive, stupendous, colossal, imposing" indoor sports arena for Washington.

Armed with no more than the above-mentioned mechanical equipment and a perfectly natural desire to chisel in on some easy money, one after another of these "paper promoters" has swooped down upon the various defenseless sports departments in the city with his impressive blueprints.

One after another of the various defenseless sports departments has devoted valuable space to the chimerical schemes.

To date, no arena has been built here.

Certainly there is some live-wire money man hereabouts who can see just how surely his bankroll can be swelled with a really good indoor sports site.

There must be such a man about, or some way in which the money can be raised.

Cities which evince far less interest in sports than Washington have arenas large enough to hold any kind of indoor event and those arenas make money.

Should Pay Well.

Washington is a natural for such a building.

Consider how many days and nights a week such a site could be filled with just conventions alone. Think of the civic operas that could be held here. Just those things alone should make a large indoor spot here a paying proposition in the Capital.

In sports, it is almost a certainty that we would support ice hockey, ice skating, big league basketball, indoor tennis and what not. Wrestling could add its bit and there is no doubt in the world but that the man far-sighted enough to finance such an enterprise would be making a very good return on his investment.

So much for what other sports would do in an indoor site. Now to get down to our interest in the business—boxing.

With the proper matchmaking, such a site might very well pay its overhead on the income from boxing alone, for the very simple reason that many matches which are denied to us in the summer could be obtained here in the winter—if a large enough site were available.

Could Get Big Boys.

For instance, we cannot hope to book Joe Louis here in the summertime, simply because he can make more money elsewhere. His every appearance in New York brings on an average of $500,000 worth of cash customers through the turnstiles. We can offer no more than a $40,000 gross at the most, so how can we expect to get him during the outdoor season?

The winter months are another matter, however. Joe will have a hard time drawing more than $25,000 in New York or anywhere else, during the current indoor season. To draw that kind of money he will have to fight some pretty tough fights.

If we had the place here, a Joe Louis fight would draw at least $30,000—and the Brown Bomber could fight some stumblebum that didn't figure to even make him draw a long breath.

The same principal applies to all of the top-ranking fighters, and we might safely say that no fighter would be too big to fight here if we had the proper battle grounds.

Now why isn't there a Moses to lead us from the wilderness?

Madison Square Garden is offering $500 extra to Ceferina Garcia or Izzy Janazzo if either scores a clean knockout in their welterweight elimination contest next Friday night . . . which reminds us that Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn, for some reason, has discontinued the practice of giving a $5 or $10 award to the preliminary boy turning in the best fight on each card . . . it used to produce some great action, and didn't cost very much . . . the showing Georges Brescia made against Joe Louis has convinced many that the Brown Bomber's managers knew what they were doing when they shied off the Isadore Gastanaga match in Cuba last winter . . . Isadore is not much of a boxer—and not much of a fighter, either, for that matter—but he hits with a right . . . and Brescia, according to reports, had Louis almost out with a right in their bout . . . not only that, but Gastanaga shoots his right just the way Schmeling does—short and straight to the point . . . Frankie Blair, the welterweight who made the sensational "bribery" charges recently, might help to relieve the box-office anemia being felt hereabouts at the present time . . . many people who pay no attention to fights and know nothing whatsoever about fighting, read Blair's charges . . . and probably would be interested in seeing him in action.

West Va. State Bowls Over Howard

Bisons Smothered, 25-0, by Yellow Jackets at Home-Coming.

The Bisons of Howard University were dealt a 25-0 beating at their home-coming yesterday, by the Yellow Jackets of West Virginia State College.

Off with a rush, Howard drove the ball to the West Virginia 27-yard stripe, but the Charlestonians rallied, a series of rushes by Meadows and Burton putting the oval in position for an attempted place-kick by the former, which closed the first period on the Howard 15.

Luck figured in the Yellow Jackets' first count when, after a series of rushes by Meadows, they gained first down on the Howard 13, and after fumbling and recovering for first down on the Howard 1-yard line, sent Price over for the touchdown.

Plummer's poor punt, to the Bison 20-yard line, good for but four yards, laid the foundation for the second touchdown by the visitors. Burton's rushes, and a penalty against Howard for holding, placed the ball on the Howard 3, enabling Burton to dash off tackle and over the goal line on the next play.

Opening up an aerial attack after the half, the Bisons brought the crowd to its feet time and again with thrusts deep into the West Virginia territory. A pass, Anderson to Armstrong, was recovered by Gordon on the Howard 48. Another, Plummer to Bridges, sunk the oval on the visitors' 35. A third, Plummer to Fenwick, carried it 13 yards, and a fourth, Anderson to Fenwick, placed it on the Yellow Jackets' 7-yard line.

An attempted pass was intercepted by Israel, and run back 20 yards, but the fighting Bisons recovered the oval and carried it again to the West Virginia 2-yard line, lacking the strength to negotiate the additional distance. In the fourth period Purvis Bates speared a beautiful pass by Meadows over the goal line for a touchdown.

The final touchdown, most spectacular of the game, was made by Meadows on a perfectly executed delayed buck, with a swarm of interference coming from the opposite side of the line, and a 15-yard dash around the Bison right end to score.

VirginiaField Trial Body To Hold Show Nov. 9-11

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Petersburg, Va., Oct. 24.—The Virginia Field Trial Amateur Association will hold its annual trials at Camp Lee, now a forest preserve, near this city on November 9, 10 and 11.

Headquarters will be established at Petersburg Hotel, where the business sessions are to be held.

V. P. I. Renews Spider Feud This Week

For First Time Richmond Has Chance to Knock Off Favored Foe.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Blacksburg, Va., Oct. 24.—Virginia Tech's eleven will return to the State football wars this week in a game with University of Richmond in Miles Stadium here. Following in the wake of the hard tilt with Richmond comes battles with Washington and Lee at Lexington, Virginia at home and V. M. I. at Roanoke.

The test with the Spiders will be the tenth meeting between football teams of the two institutions. In the nine past encounters Tech elevens have walloped the Spiders each time by a shut-out score.

Informed of this remarkable record of past years, Henry Redd, Tech head coach, replied feelingly, "Yea, we used to whip Army and Navy in the good old days, but try to do it today! The Richmond teams we walloped weren't as potent—not by a long shot—as the one we face this week."

The two institutions first met on the gridiron November 13, 1897. Tech started with a 36-to-0 win, followed in 1904 with an 18-to-0 triumph, then won by 52-to-0 in 1909 and 13 to 0 in 1916, when Tech had one of the finest teams in its history.

Strong Tech elevens won by 21 to 0 in 1919 and again in 1920. The 1921 game turned out to be one of the most surprising triumphs a Tech eleven ever scored. Several Tech each time by a shut-out score.

Jackets Lose To Delaware In Upset

Randolph-Macon Eleven Fights Losing Battle; Score Is 19 to 6.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Newark, Del., Oct. 24.—Delaware University pulled an upset this afternoon when they defeated Randolph-Macon, 19 to 6. It was their first victory of the season and they had been picked to lose.

In the first quarter, after working the ball down to the Jackets' 20-yard line, L. Carey threw a forward pass that Jack Daly took back of the goal line for the first touchdown. Payne converted the extra point by a placement.

Randolph-Macon fought hard and with Bair and Welch carrying the ball worked it into Delaware territory where the Blue Hens held. The Yellow Jackets blocked a Delaware kick on Delaware's 5-yard line and Paliscak took it over, but the try for the extra point failed.

The winning break came for Delaware in the third period. After driving through their opponent's line for three first downs, Ryan hit the line for the gain that scored the touchdown.

Down the Fairway . .

By Dave Herman.

Down at Pinehurst, N. C., Lindy Fowler, the little Boston golf writer with the Harvard accent who beats the publicity tom-toms for the Carolina resort, is rushing about like mad these days.

The time hath come for Lindy to flood the press with copy anent the National P. G. A. championship, which will claim the spotlight at Pinehurst's world-famous course the week of November 16.

HERMAN.

No better man could have been selected for the publicizing job than Lindy Fowler, for he is considered the dean of America's golf scribes, knows his golf and golfers like his A B C's, and is the perfect host at a tournament.

Lindy was writing golf when you and I were young, Maggie. He tramped the fairways in hot pursuit of Harry Vardon when the great British golfer won his first and only American Open championship way back in 1900—the year tomato cans were being used for cups on most courses.

He was the man to discover Francis Ouimet. He was the man who wrote nice things about the former Brookline caddy on Boston society pages 23 years ago and told the golf world that Francis Ouimet was a man of destiny. And in that year of 1913 Ouimet won the National Open, beating Vardon and his English contemporary, Ted Ray, in a play-off on Brookline's rainsoaked battleground. It is said that Lindy Fowler wrote the first hole-by-hole description ever to appear in an American newspaper, and had the honor of writing it on the sports instead of the society pages.

A most interesting old chap, he once risked his life in one of Orville Wright's cigar-box airplanes in order to get to a golf tournament on time. That was about 25 years ago, I am told.

• • • •

Rest back in your chairs, my golf friends, while Mr. Fowler comments on the forthcoming championship, long considered golfdom's most gruelling test:

"This event is last, but far from least, of the major championships of 1936. Never before has it been held so late in the year, and never before at a recognized Southern course. Its award to Pinehurst by the Professional Golfers Association of America was a nice, and at the same time, well deserved compliment to the North Carolina course. Pinehurst has had the reputation, for many years, of treating the professional golfers with courtesy, consideration and generosity.

"The one factor which hitherto has deterred the P. G. A. from showing its appreciation of such treatment was the perfectly understandable hesitation of playing such an important championship on a course with sand greens. That obstacle was removed when the No. 2 course had grass greens installed last season, along with a few alterations in the layout, which have evoked enthusiastic approval.

"Practically every nationally known professional who will compete in the championship played the No. 2 course, either in the mid-November tournament of last year or in the North and South championship last March. The visiting pros, some of them pretty hard-boiled and outspoken when it comes to giving their opinions of a golf course, were actually lavish in their compliments, summed up neatly by Willie Macfarlane, great student of the game, when he said, 'This course, to me, represents what Babe Ruth meant to batting, Jack Dempsey to fighting and Bill Tilden to tennis.'

"In the face of all these compliments paid by both leading pros and amateurs, Donald Ross has made more changes since last season, with a view to eliminating even the minor weak spots which one season of grass greens disclosed. He found, for one thing, that due to the great amount of play on the course there was need for what he terms 'more cupping space,' more areas on the large greens where the hole could be cut to give the player a space within moderate distance of the cup free of sharp inclines.

"Moreover, he saw that more such comparatively flat spaces were needed in the event of play during a rainstorm, notwithstanding that drainage on the No. 2 greens is as near perfect as human hadiwork could produce. The most important alterations have been to the third, eighth, tenth and thirteenth greens, the last-mentioned being one of the most criticized."

• • • •

That P. G. A. Championship shapes up as the most interesting affair in its 20-year history. Every former champion with the exception of Long Jim Barnes, the first winner, and Jock Hutchison, whose competitive days are over, will be present at Pinehurst. It isn't hard to name them, for there are only seven—Hagen, five-time winner; Sarazen, three-time winner; Diegel, two-time winner; Armour, Runyan, Cravy, and, of course, the defending titleholder, lantern-jawed Johnny Revolta.

The P. G. A. is no National Open. The Open is merely a three-day 72-hole battle, which pales in comparison to this full-week professional championship, which calls for plenty of endurance, stamina, skill and courage. If you haven't got them, you're no champion.

Thirty-six holes of medal play followed by four days of match play, 36 holes a day—that is precisely the ordeal.

Johnny Revolta told me he lost nearly 15 pounds while winning at Oklahoma City last fall. "I was just a wreck when it was over," the Illinois pro said, "and I just couldn't get that ball into the hole too quickly when I ended my match with Armour."

Washington never has had a nationally famous woman golfer, and if it is to have one the answer may be Marion Brown, of Manor.

At 18, Marion has shown far greater promise than any of the better known young golfers who have stepped into local prominence.

Helen Dettweiler, of Congressional, who is doing quite a bit of traveling with Babe Didrikson, is a fine player, but she hasn't done anything as yet to attract national attention. Illness has retarder Ellen Kincaid's progress, and Virginia Pope, now a physical education instructor, plays golf only in her spare time.

Washington's nearest approach to a Patty Berg seems to be Marion Brown. Make no mistake about it—that young Manor miss really can hit the ball. At Elkridge Hunt Club in the Middle Atlantic she missed a tie for the medal by a shot, and last week she tied Mrs. Betty Meckley for the medal in the "field day" at Congressional. A few weeks ago she shot a beautiful 79 to win the medal in the Corby Cup at Columbia. She won the medal in the Manor Club championship, and also captured the title.

In reaching the semifinals, where she lost to Virginia's Lily Harper on the nineteenth, Marion covered herself with glory. This was no small feat for a young girl, just turned 18, who was discovered by this writer playing her first round of golf a little more than two years ago at Rock Creek's course.

Marion hits the ball with the strength of a man. She stays down to those short shots a la Al Treder (her instructor), and doesn't quit on her shots.

The mellow age in golf, the age when your star is in the ascendancy, is between 17 and 21, says Sarazen. Unless a golfer does something outstanding during that time, you can put him or her down as just another good golfer.

Back in 1933 Helen Dettweiler reached the finals of the District women's championship at Kenwood, but lost by a large count. She had another crack at the title this spring, losing to Betty Meckley, who seems to be her nemesis. Betty defeated Helen in the Middle Atlantic finals, and also in the Maryland championship, the latter a title Helen once owned.

Whether Helen will get to the top and be able to beat the Mileys, the Bergs, the Hills, the Crews, depends on how hard she works on her game during her coast-to-coast tour with Babe Didrikson.

This experience, no doubt, is valuable.

But meanwhile Marion Brown is at home, improving steadily, awaiting a trip to Florida for the winter promised her by Pappy Brown.

W.-L.'s Grid Card For '37 Announced

Lexington, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—Washington and Lee University added Richmond, a Southern Conference foe, to its 1937 football schedule and listed Wofford for the opening game here instead of Elon. The Army was dropped.

Otherwise the card remained unchanged from that being played this year. Duke will again be met at Richmond, while the Generals will travel for contests with West Virginia and Kentucky.

The schedule:

September 25, Wofford at Lexington.
October 2, Richmon dat Lexington; 9, West Virginia at Charleston; 16, Kentucky at Lexington, Ky.; 23, V. P. I. at Blacksburg; 30, Duke at Richmond.
November 6, Virginia at Lexington; 13, William and Mary at Williamsburg; 25, Maryland at Baltimore.

Kipke, Solem, Schmidt on Spot As Wolves Howl for Victories

By the United Press.

Chicago, Oct. 24.—The hue and cry of the football mob for winning teams has three Western Conference coaches on the spot. If Harry Kipke at Michigan, Ossie Solem at Iowa and Francis Schmidt at Ohio State don't start delivering soon, they may be sacrificed to the wolves who haunt the trail of a loser.

The situation is serious with Kipke and Solem. It was only a couple of years ago that Kipke was hailed as the outstanding coach in the Midwest and he was being sought by Yale and other institutions whose gridiron fortunes were on the wane.

But Michigan started losing and now the wolves are camping on Kipke's doorstep. Kipke is working overtime to regain his lost prestige. His only kick is against unfair methods being used to get him ousted, such as circulation of a letter calling for a return to the "Yost tradition" at Michigan among the leading newspapers of the Midwest.

One of the leading charges against Solem at Iowa has been brought by merchants in Iowa City, who insist that the Hawkeyes must have a winning team for business reasons.

After two successful seasons, in which he lost only one game each year, Coach Francis Schmidt at Ohio State was hailed as one of the foremost offensive coaches in the country. Now his team has lost two games in succession to Pitt, 6-0, and Northwestern, 14-13, and the "High street coaches" of Columbus are yelling for Schmidt's scalp.

Athletic Director L. W. St. John has had to come to Schmidt's defense, but if Ohio State should be bowled over once or twice more the wolves will move right into Schmidt's parlor.

Only two coaches in the Big Ten are immune from outside pressure. They are Bob Zuppke at Illinois and Clark Shaughnessy at Chicago.

Glenwood 'Chase Set at Middleburg

3-Mile Event to Be Run on Saturday, Nov. 14.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Middleburg, Va., Oct. 24.—The Glenwood Grand National Steeplechase, a 3-mile brush race, which carries a purse of $1,000, will be the feature of the two-day race meet sponsored by the Middleburg Hunt Race Association, which will be held at Glenwood, estate of D. C. Sands, at Middleburg, on November 11 and 14. This race will be run on Saturday, the second day of the meet. The purse will be divided between the first three horses.

Ten events are booked for the two-day meeting, with money and trophies as prizes and with horses of national and international fame expected to compete.

The card for the first day, November 11, includes a hurdle race, 1¼ miles; brush race, 2½ miles; timber race, 3½ miles; brush race, 2 miles, and flat race, 7 furlongs. On November 14 the card will include a hurdle race of 1¾ miles; brush race, 2 miles; timber race, 3 miles; the Glenwood Steeplechase and a flat race, 1½ miles.

Just Dogs

By George Berner.

Every dog owner is at times confronted with problems concerning the care of his pet, but what to feed stands out as chief worry No. 1. A dog will thrive for a time on a certain food and the owner thinks his feeding troubles are over when, blooie, a case of enteritis, skin trouble or some other dietary ailment blows in on him and he starts all over to pick another food.

Selecting a dog food is indeed a problem, not only for the amateur but for the professional breeder. According to the advertisements, every food is complete in itself. The dog needs nothing to supplement the advertised product except a bone occasionally to clean his teeth.

The most extravagant clamis are made and we are sold on the idea that, so-and-so dog food is the real food and consequently put our dog on a steady diet of it, secure in our belief that he is getting everything necessary to his well being. The label on the can states that it is a beef product and contains all the vitamins and minerals necessary, together with wheat, barley, soy beans, charcoal and various other ingredients and we know there is a Federal law which would prohibit such a label if the product lacked them. It must be O. K.

What this label does not say is how much of each of these listed items is contained within the can. True, it probably does contain beef, but in what amount or what part of the beef we have no way of knowing and the same applies to each of the other ingredients. This writer visited a dog-food manufacturing plant and came away wondering why this Government of ours allows advertising not only misleading but absolutely untruthful.

The So-Called Beef.

The food manufactured by this particular plant is, like most of them, supposed to furnish a complete balanced diet for the dog.

The beef used was tankage, which is the term applied to slaughter house waste and can be had for almost nothing. The stench from this was almost unbearable as it slopped into an enormous hopper with the other ingredients mentioned on the label, but in what proportion? Who knows.

But enough of details. The main thing is that the food is not a balanced diet in any sense, contains a great percentage of water, and in our humble opinion, is actually harmful to a dog if fed continuously over a period of time.

It is not the writer's intent to convey the idea that all dog foods or all canned dog food are as the above. There are undoubtedly some very fine foods mixed with the inferior brands, but there are mighty few of them which will keep a dog in good health if fed exclusively, and how is one to know the good from the bad. When buying a dog food the only thing we can suggest is to be guided by the name and reputation of the manufacturer.

Two Good Ones.

There are two local dog food manufacturers. The Canine Catering Co., mentioned in this column some time ago, prepares a meal for the dog containing a choice of chopped meats and vegetables with cottage cheese or other delicacies of which a dog is particularly fond and which are exceedingly nutritious. This meal is delivered to the dog owner daily or as often as desired. Fresh, clean and in a dish, each item of the day's menu separated so one can see just exactly what he is getting.

Then there is procarmin, a coined word taken from protein carbohydrates and minerals. This food is manufactured by a man with 20 years of experience in dog breeding. It contains 19 different ingredients in their proper proportion and is made fresh and delivered daily to dog owners.

Either of these foods contains everything a dog needs and in the proportion he needs them. There is no ballyhoo but both plants are open for inspection and the dog-loving public is earnestly invited to see their dog food in the making, see what goes in it and under what conditions it is manufactured.

This 'N' That.

The Old Dominion Kennel Club held its regular monthly meeting last Tuesday. Saturday's show was voted a success, and everybody was patting everybody else on the back on the way the show was handled, the large entry list, the handling of the various events on schedule and the general smoothness throughout the show.

The club as a whole certainly is to be congratulated on their first licensed show, but there are very few members of the club who had very much to do with it. In dog clubs, like every other organization, there are always those who talk a good fight and don't do anything, and there are the others who do things. If an affair is a success, everybody takes some credit, but let it be a flop and the few who have really done the work are the goats.

Well, this one was a success and for once the goats are to get some credit for their efforts. We don't know them all but from our own observations Miss Lucille Keefe bore the brunt, assisted by Dr. Compton, Mr. and Mrs. Turnbull, Fred Sherry and a few others whom we saw flying around doing things so busily and moving so fast we couldn't get their names.

Few ever consider the multitude of things necessary to a successful dog show. An event of this kind is strictly a one-day affair, born in the morning and dying at night. There are, of course, the entries of the dogs, in this case 450 of them. These must be received, tabulated and catalogued, but this is a more or less minor thing. The benching must be set up and arrangements made for the handling of the dogs. Judges of the various breeds must be selected and invited and arrangements made for their comfort and convenience. Tickets and ribbons must be printed, trophies and other prizes procured, and a million and one other things, every one necessary to a dog show must be done. Most of these things are handled by the superintendent and whoever selected A. Wilson Bow to superintend this show should get a medal. This was Mr. Bow's first show in this part of the country, but we are certain that the quiet efficiency of his organization, the splendid manner in which everything was handled, and the entire satisfaction of all concerned will insure other shows for him throughout the East.

What's In A Name?

Some time ago Mr. and Mrs. Walter M. McLuckie bought a miniature Schnauzer for a pet, a little bitch puppy. Today that pet is a champion, yes twice a champion. Carmel of Marienhoff is her name, and she has taken the miniature Schnauzer honors like Grant took Richmond. When she finished her championship she was already entered in three more shows and before these were over, the little lady had gathered 30 points. What a dog and what a break, buying a dog like that.

Wonder if the name had anything to do with it.

Robinscroft Phelicity, Mrs. Jere B. Mackle's Cairn bitch, had a field day going to winner's bitch and then beating Miss Marion Crenshaw's Peter Pan for best of breed. Phelicity has 13 points now and the remaining two necessary for her championship will be gathered shortly.

Mrs. Richard H. Johnston dominated Dandie Dinmonts, as usual. Her Champion Donalbain of Ruffcote going best of breed but Mrs. Pope, of Philabeg Kennels in Falls Church, sneaked one in and her Philabeg's Vatican Maid won the puppy class and went to reserve.

J. B. Kimes' Wirehaven Kennels produced plenty of competition in the Cocker Spaniel events. There was plenty of color in the form of ribbons hanging where his dogs were benched. Three firsts and three seconds were topped off by Wirehaven's Charm Girl and Wirehaven's Lulu Belle who went winners bitch (solid color) and reserve bitch (parti-color) respectively.

QUERIES.

Q. Is it possible to have a dog inoculated for the prevention of rabies, if so is it effective.

A. Yes, any veterinarian can inoculate your dog and it is considered very effective.

Q. We have recently acquired a dog that is registered with the American Kennel Club. We have his registration number, but not his pedigree. How can we obtain a certified copy of his pedigree?

A. Write the American Kennel Club, giving the dog's number and for a nominal cost they will send the pedigree of your dog.

Q. What is meant by the term, "dropper?"

A. A puppy from the mating of a pointer and a setter is termed a dropper.

Q. Is there any place near Washington where one can take a bird dog to be trained?

A. Yes, the Broad Run Kennels and Game Farm at Manassas, Va., specialize in the training of bird dogs.

Q. There is a dog in the neighborhood that has bitten several people. He is allowed to run at large at all times and everyone in the vicinity is afraid of him. Is there anything that can be done to compel his owners to confine or muzzle him?

A. Of course, call the police station nearest to your home and you will get action.

Q. In your column at various times you have stated that the bitch is to be preferred. Does this mean the bitch of every breed and is this just your opinion?

A. I have stated several times that a bitch is superior to a dog in every respect and regardless of breed. This is not just my opinion, but the opinion of the entire dog world. When one insists on having a male it is a safe bet that that person does not know much about dogs. If you will notice, the dog breeder always selects a bitch for his companion or pet and if a dog is to be trained for some special job, he invariably selects a bitch. Regardless of breed the bitch is the better dog.

A Scratching Dog Suffers Tormen

YOU OWE HIM THIS RELIEF

Just because your dog wags his tail and licks your hand, don't think he is happy and that continual scratching, loose coat, listlessness, loss of appetite or nervous fretful manner are just Dog Nature. His blood is full of impurities unsuccessfully seeking escape. No wonder he is miserable.

And only you can help him.

His skin isn't like yours. It's nonporous. He can't perspire. Blood impurities caused by his domestic life, prepared food, lack of natural exercise gather in his body, and set up an intense irritation under his skin. They nearly drive him wild.

Won't you give him this relief—make him the happy, healthy contented dog he wants to be.

Rex Hunters Tasteless Condition Powders in sanitary capsules—for Dogs of all breeds, any age—provide the natural blood correctives his system needs. Given regularly on Saturday each week they quickly end the condition that causes scratching, loose coat, listlessness, poor appetite, eczema and a host of other ills. They make your pet happy, healthy and contented.

Easy to administer, safe, harmless and inexpensive, Rex Hunters Condition Powders—the famous prescription of a celebrated English Veterinary Surgeon, are for sale at leading Drug Stores and Pet Shops.

If unable to obtain locally send 25c for a package—a full month's supply—direct to makers, J. Hilmes & Co., Dept. 136, Binghampton, N. Y.

Their six-fold action benefits every vital organ in a dog's body. You'll never know how fine your dog can be until you have tried them. Ask for Rex Hunters Condition Powders—Keep Dogs Fit.

Sea Services Will Combine in Huge Demonstration of Fitness at D. C. Yard Tuesday

Events Listed In Navy Day Ceremonies

Program Will Get Under Way at 8 a. m. and Continue to 5:13.

Guard Mounts, Parades and Exhibitions to Attract Throng.

Tuesday is Navy Day. Throngs in many sections of the United States will troop to Navy facilities to inspect their "first line of defense"—to admire and to get a better understanding of what the Navy really is.

Here in Washington, the seat of the Navy, a program has been arranged for the day that invites the attention, not only of the school children, but of their elders. The latter particularly should be interested, because a handsome slice of their tax dollar goes to support the Navy, and today is the time to learn if the country is getting its money's worth.

This year's celebration marks the fifteenth Navy Day, the first having been called on October 27, 1922. The date is a happy one. It is the birthday of the late President Theodore Roosevelt, whose interest in the Navy became a tradition. About this time, too, in 1776, the Marine Committee of the Continental Congress brought out its report that resulted in the founding of a marine force for the infant republic.

The Secretary of the Navy, Claude A. Swanson, issued a statement yesterday calling for the celebration, in which he declared:

"On October 27 the people of the United States will celebrate the fifteenth annual observance of Navy Day under the sponsorship of the Navy League of the United States. It was a happy inspiration to select the birthday of the late Theodore Roosevelt, as the date on which to pay tribute to our first line of defense and to that splendid body of officers and men who constitute its personnel.

Long Service for Navy.

It has been my privilege to serve as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee in both Houses of Congress and I have always entertained a lively interest in the fortunes of our Navy. I have followed its career through many vicissitudes with sympathetic understanding and have rejoiced with it in its many triumphs.

"The Navy is nonpolitical and nonpartisan. The safety and the welfare of one hundred and twenty odd million people are placed in its charge, and the protection it affords to these people is not weighed by considerations of creed or party. Yet, entertaining as I do a warm regard for our naval service, it is a source of deep and abiding gratification to me that our Navy has made so much progress during the present Administration.

"For 14 years, since the inauguration of the first Navy Day and the consummation of the Washington agreement, it has been convenanted in international law that this country of ours shall have a Navy second to none other. I am glad to see that today, after nearly a decade and a half, we are approaching those limits which statesmen of the major parties have considered the minimum naval needs for national defense, and which have been freely recognized as our right by the governments of all the naval powers.

"It is my earnest hope that the newly formed maritime commission can do as much for our merchant marine as recent legislation has done for our combatant Navy. American sea power will not have attained its proper place in the world until the Navy of fighting ships, contemplated by the Vinson-Trammell bill, is augmented by a modest building program of auxiliaries and is supported by a merchant marine policy which is strong and enduring.

"As Secretary of the Navy, I salute the officers and men of the service for their past years of devotion to nationl interest. With my civilian compatriots, I take pleasure in honoring a service nearly as old as the Republic itself, and one whose patriotism, zeal and efficiency have never been questioned or found wanting."

The complete program for Navy Day in and near the District of Columbia, as arranged by Admiral W. S. Pye and Commander R. G. Reinicke, is announced as follows:

Navy Yard.

8 a. m., colors at main gate.

8:05 a. m., drop-forging gun parts, forge shop.

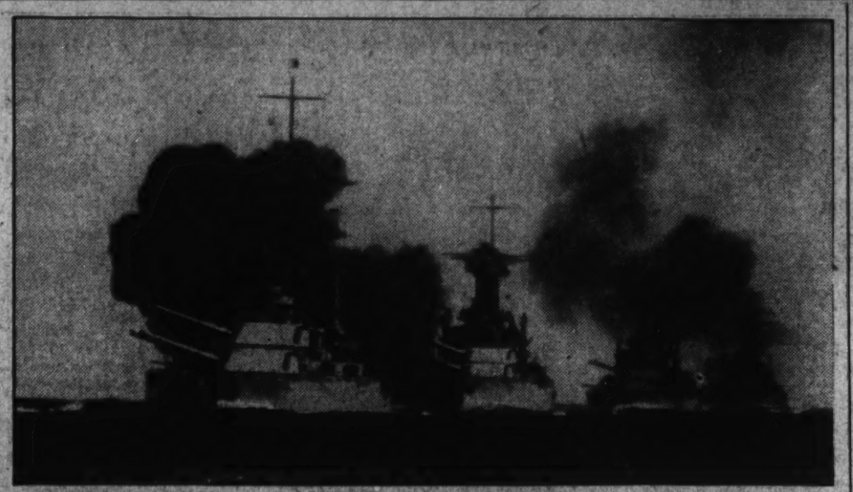
Sham Battle.

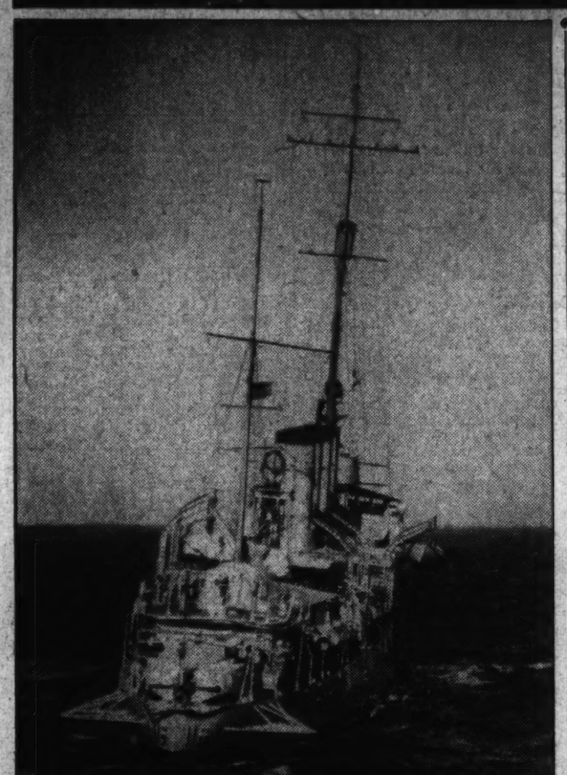
4:30 p. m.—Simulated landing operations against hostile shore by marines from Fleet Marine Force, Quantico, Va. The sham battle will be staged by marines from the Second Battalion, Fifth Marines, Fleet Marine Force, of Quantico, Va., and will be commanded by Maj. Donald Curtis, U. S. M. C., assisted by Capt. James M. McHugh, U. S. M. C.; Capt. Jaimie Sabater, U. S. M. C., and First Lieut. Alpha L. Bowser, U. S. M. C. The landing operation will be assisted by Marine Corps observation airplanes, commanded by Maj. F. O. Rogers, U. S. M. C. The part of the opposing force, or insurrectos, will be taken by sailors from the receiving ship, and will be under the command of Lieut. J. B. Jordan, U. S. N.

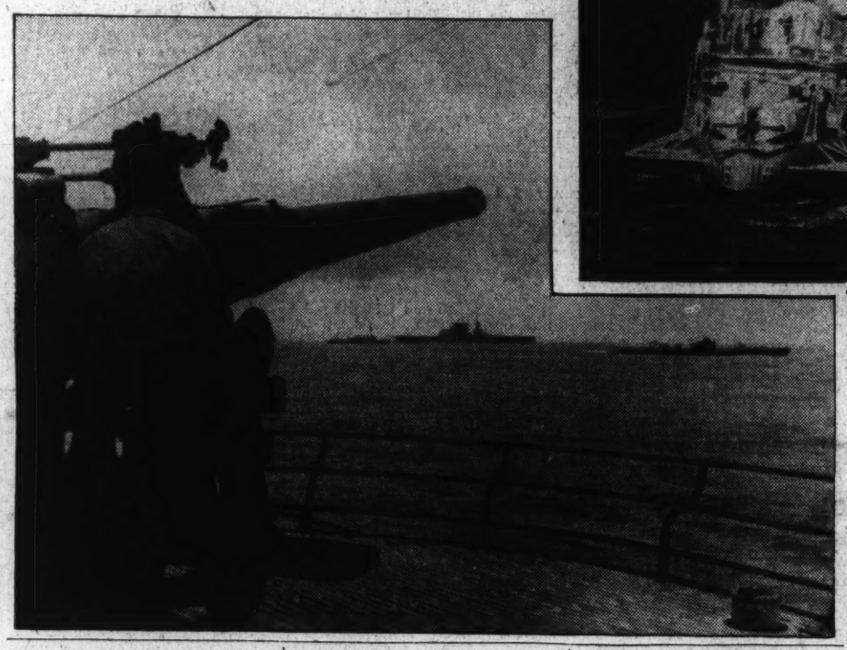
5:13 p. m.—Colors at the main gate.

This will conclude all activities for the day.



The Navy in panorama (above)—the battle line approaches in column formation. The battleship Arizona is in the foreground, followed by the U. S. S. Nevada. A Navy destroyer is maneuvering during tactical exercises (right). The Navy's big gun speaks for itself, and there are many like the one below. The service is rapidly building itself up to treaty strength. Demonstrations like these will be the order of the day for Navy Day celebration.





Fleet Reserves Here Boasting 7 Midshipmen

Fifth Battalion Forms New Class for 1937, With 15 Enrolled.

In this year's plebe class at the Naval Academy are seven midshipmen who, only a few months ago, were enlisted men in the ranks of the Fifth Battalion, Fleet Marine Corps Reserve.

They are Midshipmen Michael J. Hanley, Charles Abert, John A. Heagy, Raymond J. Koshliek, John T. Straker, Alfred B. Hebeisen and John C. Smith.

These seven midshipmen made the grade out of a class of twelve candidates from the Fifth.

One of the attractive features of the Marine Corps Reserve is this chance for an appointment to the Academy.

Only 25 such appointments are allowed from the entire Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve.

In every fourth class since 1930, the local reserve unit has been represented and three of its members have also gone to the Coast Guard Academy at New London.

This year the Fifth Battalion has a class of 15 candidates who will try for the Naval Academy in 1937.

They are Robert C. Armstead, Lucius Beebe, Kenneth A. Brighton, Lloyd M. Cheatham, Habersham Colquitt, Frank G. Edwards, Frank L. Espey, Clifford L. Hahn, Josiah T. Henneberger, John A. Jacques, Robert D. Johnson, Denbigh S. Matthews, Frank B. Parr, jr., Richard L. Schmidt, Roland Rieve.

1st Battalion Review Set As Feature

Admiral Rowcliff Will Inspect U. S. Naval Reserve Force.

Event Is Scheduled for 8 p. m. in Armory at Navy Yard.

Participation of the First Battalion, United States Naval Reserve, in the Navy Day program here Tuesday will be featured by a special review and inspection of the battalion, at which Rear Admiral G. J. Rowcliff, U. S. N., judge advocate general of the Navy, will be the ranking officer and guest of honor. The review will be held at the Naval Reserve Armory at the Navy Yard at 8 Tuesday evening.

Admiral Rowcliff is a graduate of the class of 1902, Naval Academy, and holds service medals for the Spanish campaign, Mexican campaign and the World War, and was awarded the Navy Cross after the World War. His assignments have included details as aid at the White House with President Theodore Roosevelt and President Taft, the Naval War College at Newport, member of the war plans division of the Office of Naval Operations, assistant budget officer of the Navy Department, head of the Department of Engineering and Aeronautics at the Naval Academy, commanding officer, United States Naval Training Station at Newport, and director of naval communications under the chief of naval operations.

At the outbreak of the World War Admiral Rowcliff was gunnery officer on the staff of Vice Admiral D. W. Coffman, commanding the battleship force. During the war he served as gunnery officer on the staff of Rear Admiral Hugh Rodman, commanding the Sixth Battle Squadron of the British Grand Fleet, and later as executive officer of the U. S. S. New York, the flagship of the Sixth Battle Squadron. He was present at the surrender of the German High Seas Fleet to the Grand fleet off the Firth of Forth.

Admiral Rowcliff has been judge advocate general of the Navy since June of this year.

On Tuesday evening Admiral Rowcliff will be "piped over the side" at the armory with full honors due an officer of flag rank. The battalion will then be presented for a personnel inspection. Following the inspection and review which will include drills in the manual of arms and infantry, the three divisions of the battalion will each stage a demonstration. The First Division will give a knotting and splicing exhibition; the Second Division, a fleet battle problem, and the Third Division, an abandon ship drill. The armory will then be darkened for three Navy movies: "Down in Dalmatia," "High Speed" and "Fleet Ho."

After the movies the enlisted men will hold a dance for their invited guests. A Navy orchestra will furnish the music.

The arrangements for the dance are being conducted by a committee of enlisted personnel with representatives from each of the fleet divisions. Chief Boatswain's Mate H. B. Berryhill, of the First Division, is chairman of the committee, which includes the following members: W. G. Perry, machinist mate, first class, of the First Division; W. H. Williams, quartermaster, first class, of the Second Division; A. T. Campbell, machinist mate, second class, of the Second Division; E. W. Garrett, chief boatswain's mate; L. M. Sanders, storekeeper, first class, and C. D. MacGregor, quartermaster, first class, all of the Third Division. Chief Boatswain's Mate Joseph Slattery, U. S. N. R., now on active duty at the armory, is assisting the committee for general arrangements.

Charles Swan Weber Tuesday night was promoted from the rank of ensign to lieutenant (junior grade). Lieut. Weber received his commission from Lieut. James E. Sullivan, battalion commander, before the battalion. Lieut. Weber is detailed to the Second Fleet Division as engineering officer.

The competition now being carried on to determine which division will be awarded the honor of carrying the battalion colors next year has reached a high pitch of excitement among the officers and enlisted men. One of the factors in the competition will be the appearance of the divisions in the review of the battalion on Navy Day and the carrying out of detail in the special drills at this affair.

Admiral Sellers Answers Criticism of Annapolis

Says Comparison of Naval Academy With College Unfair.

Defends Annapolis System of Small Classes, and Faculty.

Is the Naval Academy "an institution run like a boys' preparatory school with strongest emphasis on the prison-like features?"

Is it true that "the ignorance of Naval Academy graduates on * * * most cultural subjects indicates the lack of education at this supposedly educational institution?"

Is the Navy man "still a boy" compared with the college graduate? Is the midshipman "but the product of the stronghold of mediocrity?"

These, and similar criticisms, often raised against the Naval Academy, arose again last week. The latest charge against the Naval Academy emenates from one of its recent graduates. Writing in the current "Forum," James Oliver Brown, Annapolis '33, maintains there are "three great shortcomings in the academy training: the failure to develop the thought process, the failure to provide a broad education, and the failure to develop character, initiative and individuality."

Charges Assailed.

All their charges, according to Rear Admiral D. F. Sellers, superintendent of the Academy, are misdirected and entirely without foundation. Admiral Sellers points out that any comparison between Annapolis and an ordinary college is unfair.

"We don't pretend to be an ordinary university," he said, describing the Naval Academy as a technical institution and not one devoted to the liberal arts.

As he pointed out to the recent board of visitors, which included five university presidents, there is "no common ground" for comparing the academy with their own universities. The superintendent regards such a comparison as unjustified as one between a law school and a medical school.

The Naval Academy head differentiated further between the two types of institutions. "Every man who enters the Naval Academy gates comes here for a very definite purpose—to fight in and command the United States fleet." Association with the Academy involves a very definite "obligation," the admiral declared, as distinguished from a liberal arts college which provides only an "opportunity"—an opportunity to utilize the results of four years' work. But the Navy man is not merely expected to use his four years of training—he is definitely obligated to use them in the service of the United States fleet.

Defends System.

Answering Brown's charges that the instruction was deficient, the Admiral defended the Annapolis system of no lectures, small classes and daily recitations. Pointing out that the average class at the Academy is limited to a maximum of 15 midshipmen, Admiral Sellers said this system provided more individual attention and more thorough knowledge.

Similarly the superintendent rushed to the defense of the Academy's faculty—the faculty belittled by Brown and "black-listed" by the American Association of University Professors in 1933. Sellers explained the "black-listing" as retaliation against carrying the economy act into effect, necessitating the removal of 21 professors.

According to law, the Naval Academy may award the degree of bachelor of science so long as it is approved by the American Association of Universities. "And," the admiral emphasized, "our standing with that organization has never been impaired."

The personnel of the Academy's faculty is about 23 per cent civilians to 77 per cent officers—68 of the 293 men attached to the Academy are not in the Navy. This means a ratio of roughly 1 man to every 13 midshipmen, a much lower ratio than that at many State universities.

Carefully Selected.

Civilians are used chiefly in the departments of mathematics, languages, physics and engineering. In referring to the Navy men on the faculty, the admiral said, "all the officers are carefully selected for scholastic records and performance in the fleet; no one is ever ordered here that the superintendent does not want."

As a final refutation of the "not educated" charge, the superintendent pointed to the experience of two years ago. At that time there was a small number of vacancies in the Navy, and only half the class could be given commissions immediately. Every one of the non-commissioned graduates, he said, was placed in business; they were at a premium among the large corporations. And Navy men continue to be in demand for private positions. Though few midshipmen resign, the admiral explained that every year several of them may fail to pass the rigorous physical examination; most of the failures being due to poor eyesight.

Admiral Sellers was particularly emphatic in denying the charge that four years at Annapolis fail to build character.

"In addition to what the boys learn out of books," he said," there is an intangible something—the spirit of the Navy—never say die—pride in the service—that characterizes every Navy man."

From the first day they enter the Academy as plebes—when they are shown the "Don't give up the ship!" flag used by Commodore Perry at the Battle of Lake Erie—midshipmen are exposed to the spirit of the fleet. The admiral pointed out that this quality might easily be lost or diminished if entrance requirements were adjusted to permit only college graduates to attend. The plebe is only 18 years old; the college graduate may be anywhere up to 24 and impervious to the spirit of the Navy.

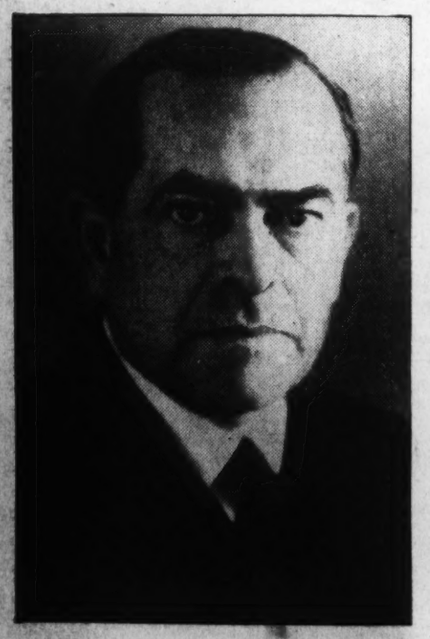
There is no question in the admiral's mind about the necessity of discipline. Brown and others have characterized it as puerile, but according to the superintendent it is essential.

"You have got to have organization," he said. "You can't run any large organization—like a ship or the Navy—without system and organization." And he attributes the efficiency of the Navy to the system and organization used in handling the Naval Academy's 2,312 undergraduates.

Reiterating that there was "no common ground" for comparing the Academy with a university, the admiral objected to criticism leveled at it by its own graduates. "Times have changed," he said, "since they were here. The midshipman is better educated nowadays; he is better prepared; he has gone farther."

"But," he continued, "there is one thing that never changes—the spirit of the Navy. The spirit of "Don't give up the ship" is just as prevalent today as it was when Perry flew his flag at the Battle of Lake Erie."

Chairman of Day



Rear Admiral W. S. Pye, Assistant Chief of Naval Operations, is in charge of the Navy Day celebration throughout the country on Tuesday.

Arranges Program

Commander F. G. Reinicke, U. S. N., is vice chairman of the fifteenth Navy Day observance. He arranged the program of celebration.

WASHINGTON SUNDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1936 B

Poll Shows F.D.R. Far in Front as Final Campaign Week Begins

Veterans 52% for FDR; Drop of 14% Since '32

President Has Lost More Veteran Support in South Than in Any Other Area; Organized Labor Votes 3 to 1 for Roosevelt, Poll Shows.

By Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, Oct. 24.—President Roosevelt will carry a majority of the votes of American World War veterans at the polls, November 3, but his strength with these voters will be sharply below what it was in 1932.

On the other hand, the President will poll a majority of almost 3 to 1 with members of organized labor.

Both probabilities are revealed today in special tabulations of the current Nation-wide Presidential poll being conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion. On approximately 100,000 ballots the Institute listed Presidential choices and then asked, "Are you a World War veteran?" On another 100,000 it asked, "Are you a member of a labor union?" Ballots were distributed by mail and personal interviewers to a cross-section of the electorate in each State.

Returns from veterans are 52 per cent for Roosevelt, 48 per cent for Landon on a two-party basis.

There have been various estimates of how the soldier will vote, including former American Legion Commander Hanford MacNider's estimate that Landon will receive 80 per cent against 20 per cent for Roosevelt, but today's poll is the first objective evidence on a Nation-wide scale.

MacNider and other Republican campaign chiefs expect a heavy veterans' vote for Landon in rebuke to the President for vetoing two bonus bills and for slashing veterans' pension benefits.

Off 14 Points.

Institute ballots show that such objections do weigh with the veterans but that these voters still give Roosevelt a nip-and-tuck majority. In 1932, their ballots indicate, they were 66 per cent for Roosevelt. Now they are 52 per cent for him—a dropping off of 14 points. This loss for Roosevelt compares with his five-point loss (from 59 per cent in 1932 to 54 per cent today) among all classes of voters.

Relatively, he has lost more veteran support in the South than anywhere else. The following table shows Roosevelt's vote by sections in today's poll, with the same voters' choices four years ago:

	% Veterans for F.D.R. Today	1932	Change
New Eng.	41%	52%	—11
Mid. Atl.	47	61	—14
East Cent.	48	61	—13
West Cent.	50	62	—12
South	63	89	—26
Mt. States	60	71	—11
Pacific	57	65	— 8

* * * *

Age shifts toward the Republican side, the vote of World War Veterans compares rather closely today with the vote of all citizens within the same age limits—whether veterans or not.

A majority of the men who went to war in 1917 and 1918 are now between the ages of 35 and 55. Throughout the country, voters in this group average 55 per cent for Roosevelt.

Following is the national vote at principal age levels, as revealed in the current Institute poll:

Age	% Favoring F. D. R.	Landon
21-24	60%	40%
25-34	63	37
35-44	58	42
45-54	52	48
55, over	43	57

* * * *

Labor The first report of labor's political sentiments based on a Nation-wide poll was published August 16 in The Washington Post. At that time the Institute found members of unions 73 per cent for Roosevelt, 27 per cent for Landon.

October balloting finds this ratio now 72 per cent for Roosevelt, 28 per cent for Landon, or a Democratic loss of one point.

AIPO Estimate Close to Final Digest Figures

Institute Predicted Rival's Result Accurately in July.

New York, Oct. 24.—Although election day is still nine days off, one prediction made by the American Institute of Public Opinion has already approached bull's-eye accuracy.

On July 12—more than three months ago—the institute estimated in The Washington Post what a poll conducted by Literary Digest methods would show. Forecasting that the two principal Presidential polls would be several degrees apart this year, the institute said:

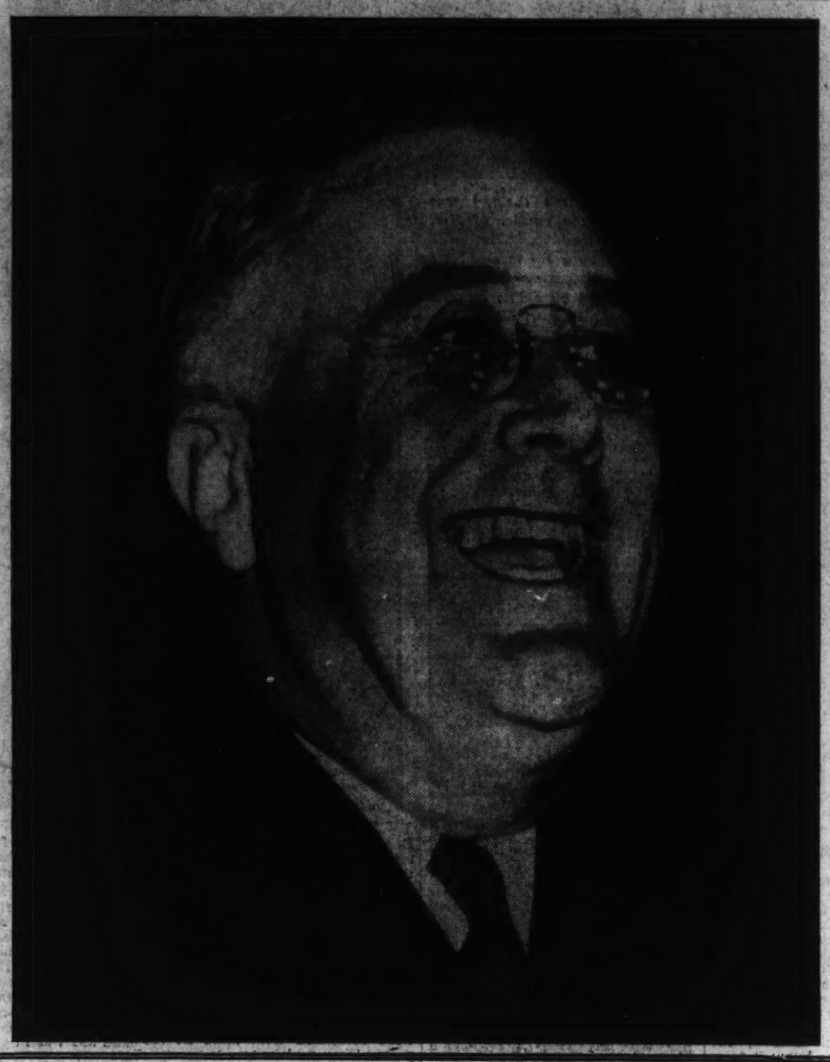
"If the Literary Digest were conducting a poll at the present time, following its usual procedure, Landon would be shown in the lead. The actual figure would be in the neighborhood of 44 per cent for Roosevelt, 56 per cent for Landon."

This prediction was possible because the institute sends a quota of its ballots to the classes of voters the Digest reaches by means of telephone directory lists and other standard lists. The institute supplements these ballots, however, by employing personal interviewers to canvass classes of voters not reached in such lists.

Late Digest figures report 1,182,307 straws for Landon, 878,526 for Roosevelt. This is a major party average of 43 per cent for Roosevelt, 57 per cent for Landon.

Inclusion of further big-city ballots in the Digest's final report may bring this figure even nearer the institute estimate of 44 to 56.

But though the institute's Digest prediction seems to be correct, the problem of forecasting the election winner and his actual majority is much more difficult. Here, the problem is not merely to sample standard lists. Other factors in predicting an election are the last-minute activities of political machines and the weather on election day—not to mention the flaws inherent in different methods of polling.



President Roosevelt flashes his famous smile as he looks forward confidently to victory on November 3.

If the present trend continues, the President will be re-elected by a large majority, the Institute poll shows.

Republicans Need 125 More Electoral Votes

Landon Must Overhaul President in Mid-West, New York and New Jersey to Win; Campaign 'Break' May Have Occurred in Mid-Summer.

By George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, Oct. 24.—As America prepares to name its next President one week from Tuesday, Franklin D. Roosevelt is running ahead of Alfred M. Landon in the Institute of Public Opinion poll.

Ballots returned from every State in the Union during the first two weeks of October show Roosevelt leading Landon by a margin of 54 to 46 out of every 100 votes. That fact, which was reported October 18 in the Washington Post, does not paint the complete election picture, however. Since the early October poll, the Institute of Public Opinion has distributed approximately 300,000 additional ballots to a complete new cross-section of the electorate. Ballots are still coming back. The result will be ready next Sunday. It will show whether Gov. Landon, in his latest campaigning, has succeeded in bridging the gap between himself and the President.

This result is based on a new and experimental approach to political forecasting—that of sampling a small scientifically-picked cross section in order to learn the election preferences of 44,000,000 voters. The method has proved trustworthy in business research. The November election will prove whether it has yet become a more precise instrument for political research than the familiar "straw vote," many of which are now showing Gov. Landon ahead.

Political tradition holds that anything can happen in the last month. Candidates save their ace cards for those last exchanges. Alfred E. Smith has said that no speech is any good before October. But the tradition may be wrong, and Smith may be mistaken. Unless Gov. Landon overtakes President Roosevelt in the Institute poll of next Sunday, it will appear that the real break in the campaign occurred last June at the time of the national conventions. The month-by-month Presidential polls of the Institute of Public Opinion give an objective picture, for the first time, of what was happening:

Did "Break" Occur in June?

On June 7 the Institute of Public Opinion reported in The Washington Post the results of its twenty-ninth Presidential poll. The poll showed Roosevelt with 56 per cent of the popular vote for the two major parties and 407 electoral votes.

Then came the political conventions. The Republicans met in Cleveland and nominated Gov. Landon on the first ballot. The Democrats met in Philadelphia and renominated President Roosevelt. Each convention caused enormous public excitement and created wide public impressions by means of the newspapers, screen and radio.

Then, on July 12, came the Institute's thirtieth Presidential poll. It showed that Roosevelt's popular majority had tumbled four points, to 51.8 per cent, and that Gov. Landon was holding an electoral vote majority with 272 votes to 259 for the President. This was the sharpest break in Roosevelt's strength in 26 months (see chart below). It meant that the country had swung to Landon during the last of June.

But the Republicans did not immediately follow up. Tradition dictated a month's delay between the nomination and the official notification to the candidate. Gov. Landon's campaign did not commence until his acceptance speech in Topeka, July 23.

In the next institute poll—August 9—Gov. Landon maintained his electoral vote lead, but President Roosevelt gained in popular votes. In other words, the Republican offensive had bogged down. Since August 9, that offensive has never been so close to its goal again.

History may record the last of June and the first weeks of July—not October—as the decisive days of the 1936 campaign.

Can Roosevelt Stay Ahead?

Nevertheless, the record shows that Landon has once whittled the President's majority down four points, and it is not impossible for him to do it again. Since Landon could win without an outright majority of the popular vote, he probably could do it this time with a two-point gain instead of a four-point gain.

Even two-point gains for him in each of the six States—Indiana, Michigan, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York and Ohio—would take 129 electoral votes away from the President and give Gov. Landon a narrow majority.

This fact etches clearly the problem that each candidate faces: Gov. Landon must overhaul the President in two or three States west of the Alleghenies and in New York and New Jersey; President Roosevelt must stay ahead.

October campaign itineraries of the major candidates are recognitions of this. Both candidates have scoured the Great Lakes States. Both are centering last-minute drives on the East and Midwest. Both will make wind-up addresses in New York City next week.

F. D. R. Gains With Reliefers

Figures reported for the first time today show that President Roosevelt has increased his strength with reliefers, farmers and women since the poll published October 4. He has maintained his majority with young voters during the same period.

These four important groups will be among the objectives of both candidates in the nine days that remain. The following table shows Roosevelt's gains in these groups since the beginning of October and indicates where the Republicans are lagging:

	% for Roosevelt OCT. 4	TODAY	Change Since Oct. 4
Women	52%	53%	+1
Farmers	53	55	+2
Reliefers	83	85	+2

The vote of young persons must receive attention in any scientific analysis of the Presidential race, because about 8,500,000 of them have come of voting age since 1932. Even though not all of these will vote, their tendency to favor President Roosevelt is a tremendous Democratic advantage.

Young voters only partially offset the Republican leanings of elder voters, however. As shown in a unique institute poll September 27, there is a clear-cut increase in Republicanism as age increases. In the current institute poll, voters of 55 and over favor Landon by a margin of 57 per cent to 43 per cent.

F. D. R. Victory Will Not Mean Approval of All His Policies

Many Roosevelt Voters Are Opposed to Heavy Government Spending, an Unbalanced Budget, AAA Crop Control Policies, Politics in Relief.

By Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, Oct. 24.—If Roosevelt is re-elected on November 3, the Nation's vote will not mean a "blanket" endorsement of his Administration and all his works. Nor would the election of Gov. Landon indicate disapproval of everything the President has done.

Week by week, since October, 1935, polls of the Institute of Public Opinion have indicated which policies the country approves and which it disapproves.

Some specific tendencies of the Roosevelt Administration which the people have opposed are:

1. Crop control as practiced under AAA.
2. Heavy government spending.
3. The unbalanced Federal budget.
4. Politics in relief.

Other tendencies which the voters have approved are:

1. Social security legislation.
2. Wages and hours standards.
3. Increased national defense.
4. Concentration of government responsibility in the Federal government.

Public opinion may follow these currents for some time, no matter who sits in the White House next January.

The need to separate the issues of the day from the personalities of the candidates will remain after the campaign itself is history, however.

If Gov. Landon is elected public opinion will be focused on a new administrative program and a new President's solutions for unemployment relief, social security, finance, farm problems and foreign relations.

If Roosevelt is re-elected, should he attempt to rebuild structures toppled by the Supreme Court last year, such as the NRA and the AAA? Should he seek a constitutional amendment centralizing greater powers in the Federal Government? Should he revive projects like Passamaquoddy and the Florida Ship Canal?

For entry blank in The Post's 1936 $1,000 Presidential Poll Contest, see page 9.

Today's Institute Poll

With eight days of campaign ahead, President Roosevelt is leading Gov. Landon by a margin of 54 to 46 in the Nation-wide popular vote.

The President likewise has a sizeable majority of electoral votes, yet small changes in half a dozen States would throw the election to the Republicans.

President Roosevelt has gained or maintained his lead since early October, with women, farmers, young persons and reliefers. He is the narrow choice of World War veterans, who give him 52 per cent of their vote in a special Institute survey, and a 3-to-1 choice with members of labor unions.

Sunday's Institute Poll

Next Sunday the American Institute of Public Opinion will report the thirty-seventh Nation-wide Presidential poll it has conducted since February, 1934.

It will forecast the winner of the election the following Tuesday and indicate the size of his popular majority throughout the United States. In addition, the Institute poll will attempt to forecast the winner's majority in the individual States with greater precision than has ever been achieved before.

The report will be published exclusively in The Washington Post and in the 77 other newspapers which have combined to make these polls possible.

Mrs. Goodwin Killer Caught By Fingernail

Case Notable Example of Effective Work of Microscope.

Titterton Murder in N.Y. Brilliant Triumph of Modern Methods.

By Edward T. Folliard.

There used to be a saying at Police Headquarters that ran something like this: The best detective is the one who has the best stool pigeons; i.e., informers. To the cub reporter, fresh on the headquarters run, this was a disillusioning discovery, particularly if the young man had been gorging himself on romantic mystery yarns. And yet he could not deny the seeming truth in the saying. In crime after crime that was solved, he saw the same thing happen: Just when a case seemed to have run into a dead-end street, a mysterious "tip" would come into headquarters, to be followed by an arrest, a confession, a solution.

It may still apply, that adage about the detective and his stool pigeons. But you don't hear so much about it as you once did. Not even the old-timer who used to scoff at the "scientific boys," and point to his blackjack as the best "lie detector"—not even he is so insistent on that point any more. He has seen too much happen in the last few years, what with lookouts being barked through the air, radio scout cars cruising the streets, criminals being trapped by the dirt under their fingernails, and other triumphs of the criminologist.

The beau ideal among the headquarters men now would be a fellow like Lieut. John H. Fowler. A veteran of the A. E. F., John looks like the pictures of O'Malley, that indomitable sleuth whose exploits appear in a popular weekly magazine. Fowler joined the force here in 1919, after his discharge from the Army. Starting out as a pavement pounder, he soon won promotion to detective sergeant.

Today Lieut. Fowler represents a nice fusion of what might be called the practical and the scientific in a detective. He was a good detective even in the early days, thanks partly to his brains, partly to his legs and partly to his stool pigeons.

Studied Scientific Crime at Northwestern.

He still has the brains, the legs and the stool pigeons, but he also has something else. In 1930, or thereabouts, Fowler took a course at the Scientific Crime Detecting Laboratory, affiliated with Northwestern University. This school was established by Col. Calvin H. Goddard, the country's best-known ballistics expert, after the shocking St. Valentine's Day massacre, in which seven Chicago gangsters were lined up in a garage and mowed down by machine guns in the hands of other gangsters.

Fowler took the course at Northwestern, acquired a knowledge of ballistics and ideas in finger printing, toxicology, photography, microscopic examination of fabrics and dust, and came back to Washington a far better detective. How much better may be judged by a brilliant record—a record which includes solution of the celebrated "mistaken identity" murder of Allen Wilson, newspaper route agent, in 1934.

Fowler's most recent case was the Goodwin murder, a notable example of how the scientific laboratory can help in the solution of a crime.

Mrs. Florence Goodwin, aged 43, worked in the Treasury Department as a typist, and also managed a rooming house at 1102 Sixteenth street northwest. Her room was on the second floor.

On the morning of September 18, Mrs. Goodwin failed to make her appearance at the usual hour. Alarmed, Mrs. Alphonso Billings, a roomer, decided to investigate. What she saw she will not soon forget. Mrs. Goodwin lay sprawled across a blood-spattered bed, her face so battered as to be unrecognizable.

In the course of their investigation, Lieut. Fowler, Detective Sergt. George Darnell and the others found what they believed was the murder weapon. It was a furnace shaker. One end of it was smeared with blood and strands of Mrs. Goodwin's hair clung to it. The shaker, 2 feet in length, had been taken from the furnace in the cellar, wielded on the woman, and then returned. To the detectives that indicated the murderer knew his way around the house.

They questioned Carl D. Chase, the 25-year-old colored janitor.

"You have the wrong man," protested Chase. "Take my fingerprints . . . do anything you like . . . I am telling the truth."

The detectives soon were convinced that he was innocent. But they still believed the murderer was somebody familiar with the house, somebody who knew it from the cellar up.

Science Proved Robinson's Guilt.

At this point, perhaps, they got a "tip." They arrested Norman Wesley Robinson, 27, colored, a former janitor in the Goodwin rooming house. He had worked there for a couple of weeks while Chase was sick.

It looked bad for Robinson. His shirt was stained with blood, and so were his trousers. These stains were submitted to chemical tests, an then it looked worse for him. The blood was of the same type as that of Mrs. Goodwin.

But a good lawyer wouldn't have worried so much about that. After all, he could have told the jury, there are four types of blood, and millions of other people had the same type as Mrs. Goodwin.

Thanks to Lieut. Fowler, however, there was another bit of evidence that wouldn't be so easy to explain away. When Robinson was arrested, Fowler saw to it that the particles were scraped from beneath his finger nails—an idea he had picked up in his scientific course at Chicago.

This finger nail debris was turned over to Coroner A. Magruder McDonald, Dr. Richard Rosenberg, his assistant, and Dr. Oscar I. Hunter, the pathologist.

Under their microscopes, the particles from beneath Robinson's fingernails took form. Here, what was this? Tiny silken threads, roughly broken off from something.

Whence had they come?

Mrs. Goodwin was murdered in her sleep. At that time, she had on a silk night gown. The bits of silken fiber taken from Robinson's nails were compared with those in the gown. They matched.

Confronted with this damning evidence, Robinson confessed. He told of going into the rooming house with a key he had kept since he worked there, of picking up the furnace shaker in the cellar, of hitting Mrs. Goodwin over the head with it several times, and of choking her with a quilt when she started to moan. He rifled her pocketbook, he said, found nothing, and fled.

Robinson now is awaiting trial for murder.

The story of the silken threads trussing up and strangling Mrs. Titterton, had cut a lengthy piece of twine from her wrists, carried most of it away, but had overlooked this one piece.

It was turned over to the technical research laboratory of the New York Police Department.

Meantime, the detectives quest was published all over the country, and criminologists listed it as another triumph for science, one of the most interesting since the Titterton "twine murder."

Mrs. Nancy Evans Titterton, a New York writer, was murdered in the forenoon of April 10—Good Friday. Her husband, Lewis H. Titterton, a well-known book reviewer and official of National Broadcasting Co., left their four-room apartment in Beekman place at 8:30 a. m. that day. He telephoned her about a trivial matter less than an hour later, and she was in good spirits.

Sensation Caused By Titterton Case.

At 11:30 p. m., Wiley Straughn, a tailor's delivery boy bringing a dress, rang the bell to the Titterton apartment. There was no reply and he went back to the store. Mrs. Titterton was already dead.

About 4:15 p. m., a truck drove up to the building, and two men unloaded a love seat. They were Theodore Kruger, an upholsterer, and John Fiorenza, his 24-year-old assistant.

Actually they were suspicious of Fiorenza from the outset.

There was no reply to their ring, but finding the door to the Titterton apartment open, they went in with the love seat, which had been taken away the day before.

It was Kruger who spied Mrs. Titterton's body. It lay in the bath tub. She had been horribly strangled.

Kruger cried out the alarm, and Fiorenza came running. Fiorenza took one look and then went to the telephone and called the police.

The crime created a tremendous sensation, and no less than 65 detectives were put to work on it. They ran into disappointment at the outset. There were plenty of fingerprints in the apartment, but they had all been blurred.

However, there was one bit of evidence that intrigued the scientifically-minded among the investigators. This was a bit of twine about 13 inches long, which had been found under Mrs. Titterton's body. Apparently, the killer after knew he had a police record, and that he was regarded as "peculiar." But they had nothing which would justify direct action.

Members of the police force questioned everybody who had any connection with the case, including, of course, Kruger and Fiorenza. But these two had arrived at the apartment together and had discovered the crime. The detectives—seemingly—were satisfied as to them.

In time, the experts in the research laboratory established that the piece of twine was to the type used by upholsterers. That strengthened the suspicion against Fiorenza, but still it wasn't enough.

An arduous piece of police work followed. Detectives were sent into three States to interview no less than 25 cordage manufacturers. Finally, the search was successful; the twine found under Mrs. Titterton's body was traced directly to Kruger's upholstery shop.

In this 10-day period, the detectives had never lost sight of Fiorenza. He had enthusiastically volunteered to help them find the "murderer," and this made it easy for them to be around him. If he gave them an idea, they pretended to run it out. Otherwise, they chatted with him about the prospects of the Yankees or the Giants.

Now, with their certainty about the piece of twine, they hauled Fiorenza down to headquarters. He couldn't believe that they could change so, these men who had been his friends. He denied the murder, of course.

Then they showed him the twine, and told him what they had learned about it. That "broke" him; he thought he had taken all the twine away with him, and so had committed the "perfect crime." He confessed, telling the whole horrible story, and then re-enacted the murder in the Titterton apartment.

Fiorenza Re-enacts "Perfect Crime."

He had been at the Titterton apartment the day before the murder to get the love seat, and he conceived the idea then of attacking the novelist. The next day, after visiting a couple of friends so as to have an alibi, he went back to the apartment, pretending to call about the love seat.

While he and Mrs. Titterton, who was still in pajamas and negligee walked about the apartment discussing a place to put the love seat, he whirled on her. Snatching a garment she was carrying, he gagged her; then he dragged her into the bedroom, where he stripped off her clothes. Next he took a long piece of twine from his pocket and tied her wrists. That done he used the jacket of her pajama suit as a noose to strange her.

He dragged her to the bathroom and placed her in the tub, face down. By this time, his plan to attack her had been forgotten in his frenzy to kill.

He slashed off the twine in two or three pieces, and stuffed the pieces into his pocket. He did not know that one piece, 13 inches long, was still under her body.

Of course, maybe a lot of the detective work in that case seemed unnecessary. Maybe the old-fashioned detective's "lie detector"—a blackjack, a piece of hose or a well-directed fist—would have brought the same result.

The 12 jurors who sentenced Fiorenza to die in the electric chair, however, felt better because it was done in the scientific way.

Lieut. John H. Fowler (below) is typical of the new kind of police detective who solves crimes, not by the "third degree" method or even by timely tips from gangdom, but by cold, hard science and laboratory study.

Laboratory tests showed the piece of twine string (left) found under the body of Mrs. Nancy Evans Titterton was of the type used by upholsterers and a search through three States linked John Fiorenza (below) with the crime.

Norman Robinson (below) was arrested for the murder of Mrs. Florence Goodwin. He was brought in by a tip received by the Police Department, but he was convicted by debris scraped from under his fingernails and examined by Lieut. Fowler, who proved it to be identical with particles of silk from the gown worn by Mrs. Goodwin at the time of her death.

Jusserand Memorial Recalls Many Stories of His Distinguished Service Here

Biggest Little Man in Capital Won Deep Respect of Citizens

By Vylla Poe Wilson.

When President Roosevelt on November 7 dedicates the granite bench placed by the United States Government in Rock Creek Park in memory of M. Jules Jean Adrien Antoine Jusserand, for more than 20 years ambassador of France to the United States, tribute will be paid to one who was, in many senses of the word, a citizen of Washington as well as of France. The Jusserand Memorial is the first ever erected to a foreigner on land donated by the United States Government.

Mme. Jusserand has returned to her homeland—for she was an American woman before her marriage to the brilliant Frenchman—in order to witness this unique ceremony. For Mme. Jusserand, during her years as doyenne of the Diplomatic Corps in Washington, demonstrated what international friendship between the women of many nations could accomplish.

In the long line of distinguished men and gracious ladies who have presided at embassies and legations of other nations in Washington few have reached such heights of acceptance to the people to whom they were accredited as did Jules and Elise Jusserand. They were known not only to those who came into contact with them either socially or officially but to the people of Washington generally, the man on the street, the student, the man of arts or letters or members of some civic or patriotic society.

Often when they appeared in public in Washington before the war, walking through Rock Creek Park or along the outskirts of the city as was their wont, Washingtonians would greet them with "Vive la France." As the war clouds gathered in Europe the French Ambassador was the beneficiary of the growing sentiment for the Allies in the Capital. Now and then the greeting was in the form of "Vive la Ambassador," and then the Ambassador would bow gravely in the direction of the cheerers.

After doughboys and sailors came to the Capital upon America's entry into the war they soon picked up the habit and would shout "Vive la France" as they passed the ambassadorial car. Then Ambassador Jusserand would bow even deeper and answer in his broken yet correctly phrased English, "Long live the United States!"

British Ambassador His Closest Friend.

It was his close friend, the Ambassador of Great Britain to the United States, Sir Cecil Spring Rice, who once called him "the biggest little man in Washington." Sir Cecil Spring Rice, as well as Ambassador Jusserand, were members of the small cotorie of friends which included Theodore Roosevelt, Henry Adams and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge.

Owen Wister, the author, once described Jusserand as follows:

"Shaped by centuries of European civilization, a face modeled by lucid, exact traditions; animate with keen and constant observation; critical and focused. He wears a beard; in his shrewd and very kindly glance, there is something at once quizzical and analytic. A face of much training. Possibly a scholar of some sort? Certainly a person of rapid tact, and accustomed to clear thinking; a man of both intellectual and worldly experience."

It is not too much to add that Jusserand also had a great share of that elusive quality known as "spirituel." His thoughts of others were guided by an inner light and he was a passionate devotee of liberty and all her ways. Indeed, in this he rivaled that other countryman of his, Lafayette, who brought his life, youth and fortune to lay them before the altars of freedom that had been lighted in the American Colonies.

Great Friend of Theodore Roosevelt.

Ambassador Jusserand always maintained that dignity which won respect for him and for his nation. He might dress informally for walking, playing tennis or when busy about non-diplomatic duties. But when he went to the Department of State or appeared at public functions and gatherings, no matter what the hour, he justly earned the title of the "Beau Brummell of the Diplomatic Corps." For his attire was correct to the very last button on his morning coat.

When accosted by newspaper men in the State, War, and Navy Building on official visits, M. Jusserand would bow and smile most politely and, in the most charming manner, tell them absolutely nothing.

The men of the Fourth Estate loved him whether they got a story from him or not, and they very seldom got a story.

As he appeared as speaker before patriotic organizations, always correctly attired according to ceremonial usage for ambassadors, he gave the deep impression in speech and manner of his real reverence and respect for and knowledge of the institutions of this country. Therefore he was most popular as a public speaker and his interpretations of the American scene and the history of this country often put his fellow orators—of American birth—to lively shame as they realized their own ignorance of the American background.

It was this literary soundness that appealed greatly to President Theodore Roosevelt. There grew up between him and the Frenchman the close friendship of two who loved to argue over every inch of an intellectual battleground, play tennis vigorously, and then scramble over cliffs and rocks in Rock Creek Park. It is said that the agile Jusserand could even outlast the strenuous T. R. in the matter of climbing and walking. He had splendid training in the Scottish highlands, where he took his holidays when he was consul of France at London, his first diplomatic post.

In his "School for Ambassadors," one of his most delightful books, M. Jusserand tells of this early training for companionship with Theodore Roosevelt in the following words:

"I should have been very much surprised if I may quote a personal example, had anyone told me, when in boyhood days I was swimming rivers, climbing rocks and playing a variety of games that these 'accomplishments' would be of service later when an ambassador in far-off America. In order to keep company with the chief of state, President Roosevelt, I swam the Potomac and climbed quarries south of the stream. The same with contemplation many may have experienced, as I often have, the good done by a solitary walk, in inspiring resolutions and rectifying judgments."

Respectful and admiring attention was paid by fellow guests at a dinner for the "Tennis Cabinet" when someone said that M. Jusserand had just presented President Roosevelt a pamphlet he had written, proving that the "King's Quhair" rightfully could be attributed to James I of England, son of Mary Queen of Scots. Roosevelt was pleased with the Jusserand effort and wrote to Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, "It is the kind of antiquarian and literary small study in which my soul delights."

And Lodge wrote back: "The Jusserands are delightful people, and I shall read the pamphlet, for I love such enquiries as much as you."

Many spirited discussions took place, too, among the "Kitchen Cabinet" on the Baconian theory about the works of Shakespeare. Ambassador Jusserand had done much original research work on Shapespeare and his book on "Shakespeare in France" is a classic of its kind.

Sir Cecil Spring Rice, at the sister embassy, had been a friend of the Frenchman since their early manhood and Sir Cecil's correspondence teems with mentions of the Jusserands.

Worried by Losses In World War.

Sir Cecil Spring Rice once told of a trip from Europe on a second grade boat for lack of other accommodations. Among other passengers were M. Jusserand and his wife. Mme. Jusserand had to occupy a cabin with three other ladies, the temperature of the room hovering most of the time around the 105 degree mark. This was during the World War and Mme. Jusserand declared she did not mind the discomforts when she thought of all the suffering in France.

Some of the gaiety left Ambassador Jusserand's face when the World War grew in fury, and his light burned later and later in his study and his sharp little beard grew grayer and grayer. When America came in, the Jusserands' sympathy for America's losses was frequently expressed and his devotion to this country deepened.

In contrast to the diplomats of some other countries, Ambassador Jusserand kept his embassy within the bounds of diplomatic propriety during these exciting war days. Somehow every one, even the representatives of enemy countries, believed that the "Big Little Frenchman" was playing the game according to the highest standard of diplomatic ethics.

Those who knew him well can recall how he often exhibited and read in his picturesque English a clipping from a New York paper praising the diplomatic behavior of Sir Cecil Spring Rice and himself.

"Neither of these diplomats," Ambassador Jusserand would read aloud to chosen friends, "has ever thought it desirable to go outside of the legitimate diplomatic channels and attempt to intrigue among sections of the people. That is a fundamental principle of successful diplomacy in the United States."

The editorial began: "Sir Cecil Spring Rice and M. Jusserand may look at the fruits of their work and pronounce it good."

Book Ideal Guide For Diplomats.

M. Jusserand's ideals for an ambassador are set forth vividly in his book "School for Ambassadors." Any diplomat of any country can hardly do better than follow the path pointed out by the brilliant Frenchman. On this list he puts paramount merit, punctuality and a well-harnessed tongue. An ambassador, he says, should be neither too old nor too young, temperate in living, versed in several languages. He sums it all up in these words:

The good ambassador will watch over his words, never deride the country he is in, nor disparage the prince to whom he is accredited; thought representing a monarch, he must not blame the "form of a popular government," much less will he venture any obloquy to the detriment of his own people: "Our country is our mother . . . we must be as jealous of her honor as of our own."

Mme. Jusserand, tall and with a queenly carriage, was as careful, in her own province as chatelaine of the embassy, in the exercise of tact as her husband. She dressed in the height of good taste, although she did not adopt every passing fad of fashion. She never changed her mode of dressing her hair from the time she arrived in this country until her husband's retirement more than 20 years later.

As the dean and doyenne of the diplomatic corps, M. and Mme. Jusserand led the long line of diplomats at the White House state receptions, the New Year's morning receptions and the diplomatic breakfasts of the Secretary of State following White House receptions on New Year's mornings. They

The News of the Week Passes in Brief Review

National Affairs

Candidates

On the Last Lap

With the election nine days away, both Presidential candidates are claiming everything, conceding nothing. President Roosevelt and Gov. Landon each invaded hostile territory last week, the Democratic nominee touring rock-ribbed Republican New England and the G. O. P. standard-bearer stumping in what is considered safe Democratic territory, California.

After a short breathing spell, both candidates will be off again—this time campaigning in the same area, making a bid for the most important electoral votes of all—Pennsylvania and New York. Gov. Landon will deliver his climactic address Thursday night at New York's Madison Square Garden, and then streak back across the country for some last-minute barnstorming in Missouri and Kansas before making his final plea to the voters from his home on election eve.

President Roosevelt will deliver two major addresses next week, one at a Democratic rally in Brooklyn Friday and the other at Madison Square Garden Saturday night. His night-before-election appeal will come from Hyde Park next Monday evening.

Landon

Outlines Foreign Policy

One of the most frequently repeated Democratic charges against Gov. Landon that he has no foreign policy. Last night at Indianapolis the Republican nominee met that charge and outlined his program in regard to foreign affairs.

To "avert war throughout the world" he would:

Sponsor a policy of mediation and arbitration; restore "international confidence in the good faith of the American Government," which the "contradictions" of the present Administration has shattered; co-operate in the reduction of armaments; aid in "lowering world-wide trade barriers and re-establishing healthy economic conditions."

If war should come, Gov. Landon would keep America out through a well-developed neutrality policy and through legislation "taking the profits out of war."

The nominee attacked President Roosevelt's neutrality policy as dangerous, saying:

"Only last year . . . he attempted to put the United States in the forefron tof the sanctionist powers against Italy. His action made it probable that if war should come we would have been involved."

Roosevelt

Tumult and Shouting

New England, in all straw votes and in the opinion of neutral observers, is definitely pro-Landon, but President Roosevelt was hailed by the greatest crowds in New England history when he stumped that area last week.

More than a million persons got a glimpse of the Democratic nominee as his motorcade roared through Rhode Island, Connecticut and Massachusetts on a two-day "personal appearance" tour Wednesday and Thursday. In every small New England town factories were closed and school children were out on holiday to see the President of the United States.

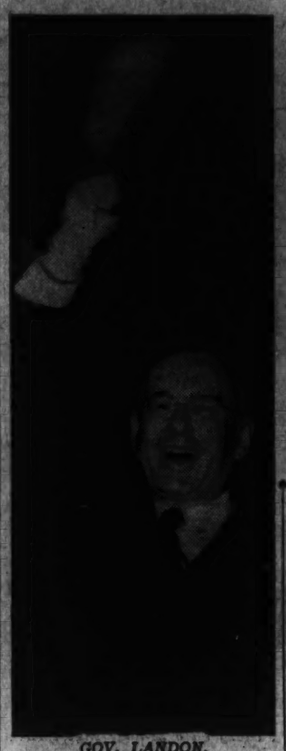
Whether such tremendous throngs mean anything besides a curiosity to see the Chief Executive only Election Day will tell. The New York Times reminded Mr. Roosevelt that William Jennings Bryan and Al Smith had large and hysterical crowds, too, but their enthusiasm was not reflected in the figures on Election Day.

Many in the masses which surged toward the President's car at every stop wore sunflowers, although they joined in the wild Roosevelt demonstrations. There were boos for the President at only one place along his several-hundred-mile drive—his alma mater. As the campaign caravan passed Harvard University students leaned out of the windows and jeered, shouting: "We want Landon!"

In his talks President Roosevelt tried to convince hard-headed, thrifty, conservative New England that the cost of the New Deal is not "extravagant," and that the Administration tax policy is aiding the "average American."

Before 125,000 persons jammed on Boston Common, Mr. Roosevelt boasted that New Deal policies had "begun the first real offensive in our history against that concentrated wealth and monopolistic power which almost destroyed the small businesses and industries of New England."

Lining himself up on the side of John Adams and Daniel Webster, the President said he was carrying out "the spirit of New England" in destroying what Adams called the "insolent domination of a few opulent, monopolizing families" and promoting "a more equal liberty."



GOV. LANDON.

Pointing out to New England that its economic destiny is interwoven with that of the West and South, the President declared the New Deal had helped Yankee manufacturers by raising living standards in other areas, thus making it easier for New England factories to compete with their rivals, and also increasing the purchasing power of New England's customers.

The United States today, as it did in 1776, must choose between "democracy in taxation and special privilege in taxation," the President told a tumultuous crowd at Worcester in a speech broadcast to a nation-wide audience. He defended the New Deal tax program as promoting economic democracy, saying:

"Taxes are higher for those who can afford to pay high taxes. They are lower for those who can afford to pay less. That is getting back to the American principle—taxation according to ability to pay."

No new taxes will be enacted, the President promised the frugal Yankees, and, with the increased Federal revenues and decreased emergency expenditures attendant on recovery, the budget will soon be balanced.

The President made another reassuring speech to business Friday night in the vein of his recent Chicago address. Speaking by radio from the White House to 62 dinner meetings of businessmen throughout the country, he soothed:

"No one in the United States believes more firmly than I in the system of private business, private property and private profit."

He reiterated his contention that the Administration had saved business and private enterprise in the United States through its policies during the 1933 crisis. He differentiated again between the "overwhelming majority of independent business men" and the small monopolistic group which he claims controlled government policy before 1933.

We must never return to the philosophy of the boom era, he said, when financial and industrial production and distribution were concentrated in the hands of a few individuals, and government was "ever ready to purr against the legs of high finance."

California

Landon Woos It

While President Roosevelt was telling New England that his Administration was preserving democracy in the United States, Gov. Landon was insisting, from California to Kansas, that the re-election of the Democratic candidate will mean the end of the "free American system" and the substitution of a planned society and governmental regimentation. The G. O. P. standard-bearer repeated the same message to crowds at almost every stop:

"If we are to preserve our American form of government, this Administration must be defeated."

Before a cheering crowd of 65,000 at the Los Angeles Coliseum Tuesday night, the Republican nominee attacked the Roosevelt tendency toward governmental centralization, charging that the Administration refused to give up its emergency powers after the crisis was over in 1933. He shouted:

"The Administration seems obsessed with the idea that it had a mandate to direct and control American business, American agriculture and American life."

In his drive to turn California voters away from the New Deal and pull the State's 22 electoral votes into the Landon column, the Republican nominee made friendly gestures toward two of California's leading citizens—William Randolph Hearst and Dr. Francis E. Townsend.

Assailing Congressional investigations as violations of the bill of rights, Gov. Landon said of the Black lobby inquiry, one of Publisher Hearst's most violent hates:

"One Congressional investigation, characterized as a fishing expedition, openly and flagrantly violated the Constitutional restriction against unreasonable search and seizure. Great masses of private correspondence were taken."

When the Lemke ticket was ruled off the ballot recently in California, Dr. Townsend announced he would vote for Landon and urged his 500,000 followers to do likewise. The Republican nominee said nothing about that support or about the old-age pension plan, but such words as these must have warmed the heart of the doctor, who stalked out of a Congressional inquiry last spring:

"And recently a Congressional investigation has been carried on for what seems to be purely political ends. In this case, the thinly veiled purpose apparently was to discredit a political movement which the controlling party wished to crush."

Some Congressional investigations are useful, Gov. Landon agreed, but said the Administration's trouble was that it could not distinguish between "a committee that is out to get crooks and a committee that is out to get the critics."

Gov. Landon called upon the President, in several sharply worded statements last week, to "be candid" with the American people. Attacking Mr. Roosevelt's Worcester speech, he said "truth in government" was just as important as "truth in securities" and he demanded that the President let the people know exactly how much they are paying for the New Deal.

En route to California the Republican nominee attacked James Roosevelt's recent disputed NRA remark, in which he was quoted as saying his father would revive the act if re-elected. Gov. Landon demanded that the President clarify his son's declaration and tell the country frankly whether or not he intends "to perpetuate the NRA willy-nilly."

At Tulsa, Okla., Friday Gov. Landon denied the "malicious charge" that "458 schools have been closed in Kansas, depriving 8,557 boys and girls of common school education." James Roosevelt had made such a statement in Massachusetts Monday night.

"When utterly untrue charges are openly made by a member of my opponent's family . . . indignation knows no bounds," Gov. Landon declared. He defended the Kansas school system, declaring that "the closing of these 458 schools represents a real step forward in the improvement of educational facilities in my State." Many rural districts, he said, had closed schools for less than ten children and furnished transportation for the pupils and paid their tuition in a larger town.

The Governor was bitter about the charge leveled at his school system and he spared no words in attacking James Roosevelt for it. He said:

"I resent the deliberate falsification of the facts that has been made about the educational system of Kansas . . . I am incensed at the slurring attack that has been made upon my State as an incident to this campaign . . . I state deliberately that anyone who makes that charge is guilty of peddling a lie."

Dissenters

Stand Up and Speak!

"The present Administration has endangered American institutions. It has deserted the principles for which the Democratic Party has always stood. And real Democrats, I know, will fight shoulder to shoulder with us in this battle to save our American form of government and our country."

These words of the Republican nominee at Oklahoma City were echoed by several old-line Democratic leaders last week.

John W. Davis, the 1924 Democratic Presidential nominee, followed the 1928 standard-bearer out of the New Deal camp. In a Nation-wide radio address he indicted the Administration for "the most callous disregard of party principles, platform promises and personal pledges in all the history of American politics." The New Deal is not Democratic, he said, and therefore has no just claim on the loyalty of party members. The only course open to regular Democrats on Election Day, he declared, is to "stand up, speak up and take his judgment and his conscience with him into the polling place and make his protest good."

Al Smith continued his attacks on the Roosevelt Administration in Chicago Thursday night and Pittsburgh last night. "Jeffersonian Democrats," he said, "are out on a limb today, holding the bag, driven out of the party, because some new bunch that nobody ever heard of in their life before came in and took charge of things and started planning everything." Smith said he confidently expects millions of Democrats like himself to vote on November 3 for a "sane, orderly, sensible, comprehensive administration under Gov. Landon."

Lewis W. Douglas, former director of the budget, also deserted the New Deal candidate, announcing from his home at Tilly Foster, N. Y., where he is convalescing from an operation:

"I will go to the polls to express my opposition to the New Deal by voting for Mr. Landon."

To offset these defections, two prodigal sons returned to the New Deal. James P. Warburg, author of "Hell Bent for Election" and "Still Hell Bent," two scathing indictments of President Roosevelt and the New Deal, announced that he would vote for the President on November 3. Warburg warmly praised the Administration's moves leading to stabilization of currencies and the revival of world trade in a letter to Secretary Hull, and said he considered these policies the basic issue of the campaign. Of Gov. Landon he said:

"It is impossible for me to support an opposition which either will not or cannot recognize that economic nationalism lies at the root of our great difficulties—an opposition which, clinging to outworn partisan tradition, offers only to repeat the mistakes of the past as a cure for the mistakes of the present."

Dean Acheson, former Undersecretary of the Treasury, who split with the Administration in 1933, also returned to the fold. In a letter to the Baltimore Sun he said he had agreed with the paper's stand on September 11 that it could not support Roosevelt, but since then Gov. Landon's speeches and John Hamilton's communistic "red hunt" have changed his mind. Therefore he will vote for the President on November 3.

A New England Crowd Hailing the President

This is part of the throng of 125,000 which jammed Boston Common last week to hear President Roosevelt. Both candidates smiled at seas of faces like this last week, and both will continue to do so right up to election eve.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

Spain

Fascist Tide Stemmed

With the cry of "Death to Reaction—Madrid is the sworn tomb of Fascism," stout-hearted militia of the democratic Spanish government poured out of the capital last week and struck back, with what even rebel commanders admitted was "invincible courage," at their hated Fascist foes.

The fall of Navalcarnero, the "Verdun of Madrid," had thrown the capital into confusion. When the news came, thousands of women marched through the streets in a frenzied demonstration. "Every able-bodied man to the front," they shouted. The response was electrifying. Clerks, pens still in hands; printers stained with ink; factory workers in overalls, poured into the streets. Feverishly, hands clutched alien rifles that were thrust at them, and, chanting the Internationale, a ragged army 100,000 strong, untrained and undisciplined, set their faces bravely to the south where ugly Fascist guns boomed in terrifying crescendo.

Behind a new and more famous "Hindenburg Line" the Loyalists now fight with a courage that is deathless. Heavy guns imported from their Fascist allies have been used by the rebels to pound away incessantly at the last barriers to Madrid. This week-end the defenses still hold back the tide and in the Guadarrama Mountain section the Madrid forces have launched a counter-attack.

In the north, despite earlier reports to the contrary, dynamite-toting miners repulsed a rebel relief column converging on Oviedo. On the Saragossa front Catalans, under Col. Villalba, formerly commander of Moorish troops in Spanish Morocco, shelled Huesca for two days, and, driving the rebels before them, consolidated their positions in new advances.

That Madrid's fall will not mean an end to the Spanish civil war was revealed in the report that the government will move its seat to Barcelona, where President Azana now is with five members of his cabinet. The president arrived Monday in the Catalan capital. Even the rebels admit openly that conquest of Catalonia would be a long, possibly impossible, task to accomplish.

Neutrality

'A Torn Scrap of Paper'

The menace of crystallized Fascist-Communist hostility loomed last week into larger focus.

The momentous question in Europe was: "What are Russia's plans with respect to the Spanish crisis?"

Some weeks ago Germany launched its anti-Communist crusade and Herr Hitler looked enviously to the Urals. Russia met that Nazi propaganda head-on with a direct accusation that the Fascist nations were supplying arms and ammunition to the Spanish rebels. She forced a meeting of the non-intervention committee to be held in London. At that conference the Portuguese delegate stalked angrily from the room after Russia again hurled her accusation. The committee, led by Lord Plymouth, sidestepped the Soviet plunge and sent Russia's note in a formal manner to the three Fascist nations involved.

Last week, therefore, the Soviets, cloaking their plans in dramatic secrecy, hurled a defy at their Fascist foes. "We dare our enemies to attack us" was the tenure of their tone, and openly they spoke of arms and planes for the Spanish government.

In a tense atmosphere the non-intervention committee met in London Friday. Denouncing the neutrality pact as a "torn scrap of paper," Russia hurled a new bombshell into the council hall.

"The Soviet government cannot consider itself bound by the non-intervention agreement," her delegate declared, "to any greater extent than the remaining participants in this pact."

But the Soviet delegate did not withdraw from the committee. Neither did he furnish any adequate explanation of exactly what his declaration meant.

Crisis followed crisis—"not in single spies but in battalions." Shortly after the adjournment of the committee word reached London from Lisbon that the Portuguese Fascist government had severed diplomatic relations with Madrid. The report added that Italy and Germany would follow suit. In the event Madrid falls, all three, it was intimated, will recognize the Spanish rebels.

Fascists

Hands-Across-the-Alps

The Fascist bloc emerged from the nebula of thickly flying rumor-clouds last week as a strongly galvanized Central European front was effected against communism.

In something more impressive than a polite exhibition of diplomatic back-scratching, an Italian diplomatic mission, headed by Italian Foreign Minister Count Ciano, reached an accord with Germany's Foreign Minister von Neurath and other Nazi leaders.

The meeting took place in Berlin. Both ministers were empowered to effect an accord and they did. The agreement, it was said, related to the following subjects: Locarno, the League, the Austrian and Danubian areas, economic relations between the two countries, a campaign against bolshevism, refusal to recognize any radical government elsewhere in Spain in the event Madrid falls to the rebels.

Italy and Germany, therefore, will present a "united front" in European affairs. As Ciano emphasized, however, the accord constituted neither a pact nor an alliance; it is, rather, an understanding for joint action.

Thus a troubled Europe saw last week new designs woven in continental policies. What these mean in the hopes of France and Britain for a new Locarno pact, to guarantee peace in western Europe, was the subject of jittery speculation.

There was no knowledge of whether the Reich and Italy, in view of their united front against Russia, would agree to a pact with France so long as France adheres to its military alliance with the Soviets.

Another stumbling block to Franco-German-Italio accord is the "Popular Front" government in France—an alliance between the Socialists, the Radical Socialists and the Communists.

Last week, however, there arose differences within the congress of Radical Socialists, gathered at Biarritz, with one faction assailing Communist political tactics in France and openly threatening to split wide open the "Popular Front."

The Radical Socialists are the petty bourgeoise, the political heirs to the Jacobins of the French Revolution. The most radical thing about them is their name—the most radical thing they ever did was probably aligning with the Left in the present Popular Front.

The Right Wing of the party is now beginning to repent of that action. Most observers believe that a break will be averted, but that a stiff compromise will be effected, at the expense of the Blum government.

Elsewhere—especially in the Balkans—the Fascist anti-Soviet bloc drive was renewed. At Belgrade on Wednesday, Nazi-inclined Roumanian Premier George Tatarescu, successor to the Francophile Titulescu, conferred privately with Yugoslavia's Premier Milan Stoyadinovich. Since Yugoslavia is the economic vassal of the Third Reich, students of Balkan politics see a thinly veiled Fascist scheme to have Yugoslavia join with Roumania in an anti-Soviet front. Should this succeed, it would mean that Roumania would break off her present connections with Russia and France and seek a new alliance promptly with Yugoslavia and Bulgaria within the German orbit.

League

Desecrated Though Dead

A square-toed German boot drew back this week-end to give another vicious Nazi kick to the moribund body of League sanctions.

On the heels of a "concrete and definite" Italo-German accord reached in Berlin last week and made public yesterday the Third Reich granted full diplomatic and political recognition to the Roman fait accompli in Ethiopia.

The action took the full effect of international law, in contrast to virtual recognition July 25, when a German consulate was established in Addis Ababa.

Goering

Reich Economic Dictator

While the rest of the world hailed the currency agreement between the three great democratic nations—Great Britain, France and the United States—as the first step toward a freer exchange of goods and a leveling of suicidal tariff barriers, Hitler's Germany withdrew further within its own economic house.

Last week fat, paunchy Col. Gen. Hermann Goering was appointed economic dictator over the Nazis' second "four-year plan" and immediately the self-sufficiency flag of the Reich was nailed more firmly to the mast.

The masses—now inured to the grim tightening of belts—paid and are still paying for Der Fuehrer's first "four-year plan." Payment was made in terms of a lowered standard of living. That inevitably aroused discontent. Thus, the appointment of Goering is a sop to the "left-wing" National Socialists. The cost of the second "four-year plan" will therefore be defrayed by the classes.

"The avowed object of our program," the Nazis declare, "is to make Germany absolutely independent within four years of foreign raw materials which can be supplied by German chemical engineering and mining industries."

Gen. Goering, next to former housepainter Adolf, is now easily the outstanding figure in the Third Reich, and the sun of Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, conservative Reichsbank president and minister of economics, seems in total eclipse.

Far East

Sino-Japanese Impasse

A few weeks ago Japan presented the Chinese Central Government with a secret list of demands. Closely resembling the infamous Twenty-One Demands, they were reported to give the Nanking authorities the choice of "war or vassalage."

To Japan's utter astonishment and dismay, Nanking countered with an ultimatum that said in effect: Stop your imperialistic depredations and clear out of our conquered provinces.

This stiffening of Chinese resistence was due in great measure to the ever growing demand within the middle kingdom for war on Japan. Added to this was the fact that within the past few months rebellious provinces have submitted to the Nanking authority, thus solidifying Dictator Chiang's regime.

Japan therefore had to step warily. Last week she sought to gain her ends diplomatically instead of with bullets.

At Nanking, Japanese Ambassador to China Shigeru Kawagoe sat down at this new diplomatic chess game with the central regime's Foreign Minister Chang Chun.

The parley reached an impasse after a three-hour discussion, China refusing, it is rumored, to make common military cause with Japan against Chinese Communists. Such joint action, Nanking foresaw, would force China into a formal alliance against Soviet Russia, with whom she is at present on friendly terms.

Of the five major issues, the only one on which virtual understanding has been reached is tariff revision. China consented in principle on the condition that the revision be "purely unilateral and voluntary" and not governed by a treaty or agreement impairing China's tariff autonomy.

Complete breakdown of the Sino-Japanese negotiations would undoubtedly lead to a renewal of Japanese military activity, it is generally believed.

Philippines

Attempted Coup Crushed

For 47 years—from 1898 until last year—the Philippine Islands were ruled over by a Governor General appointed by the United States.

Despite a growing nationalist movement there, successive Administrations in Washington turned a deaf ear to independence pleas by patriotic islanders. Possession of the Philippines, militarists here argued, was vital to counterbalance the "yellow peril" in the East.

Economic factors forced a reorientation of policy however. When Philippine sugar competed with the home product to the latter's disadvantage a commonwealth bill was passed by Congress. Signed by the President last year, it set up a Commonwealth Government in the islands and stipulated Philippine independence after a trial period of ten years.

The new regime of President Manuel Quezon has not been all patriotic Philippines would desire. It has pushed through no agrarian reforms. It has done nothing to wipe out decades of abuse.

Like Spain, there are two Philippines—rich landowners, privileged clergy on the one hand; starving workers, landless peons on the other. Recently the Bureau of Lands reported that in one province where agitators are active, 85 per cent of the land is owned by 5 per cent of the population.

Since political freedom did not mean economic freedom disorders continued. Active opponents of the new regime were the Sakdalistas. In May, 1935, they staged an uprising. Since then many test cases have been pending in courts to determine whether the Sakdal Party is truly seditious, since its constitution does not advocate violence. Last week's attempted coup may now decide that point.

On Tuesday secret service agents arrested five party members, and, according to advices from Manila, nipped a plot for a revolution. Only the bungling of the plotters prevented serious fires in the capital, which were planned as a prelude to assassination of high officials, including the United States High Commissioner, and seizure of the government, confessions obtained from the ringleaders revealed.

The confessions, while implicating the legal Sakdal Party, reveal that the fugitive, Benigno Ramos, was the "brains" behind the attempted coup. Ramos is at present in Japan and extradition is unlikely since he fled there to take advantage of the rights of political asylum.

Ethiopia

'The White Man's Burden'

Emperor Haile Selassie may be an exile without an empire but the Lion of Judah which he symbolizes still roars.

Without benefit of censor's blue pencil the Associated Press reported a fierce battle in the jungle near Lake Margherita last week between a Blackshirt division penetrating the lake country and Ethiopian tribesmen under Dedjaz Araga.

Attacking the Italian front flank and rear simultaneously the bare-legged blacks engaged their foes in bitter hand-to-hand fighting in which bayonets and hand grenades were brought into play.

The Roman legions, their artillery rendered useless by the jungle, fought stubbornly, held off the attack and then launched a counter thrust. After a five-hour battle the Ethiopian warriors gave way. Later, Italian bombing planes machine-gunned them in their mountain fastnesses giving much-needed breathing space to the colonizers to scale the 3,000-foot high Ethiopian stronghold of Mount Gibassere.

Italy at last is beginning to discover what all colonizers have discovered—the initial conquest is only the beginning.

Austria

Hapsburg Hopes Stirred

Two weeks ago, scholarly, one-time seminary student Chancellor von Schuschnigg proclaimed Austria's determination to revolve in its own orbit.

"Austria will permit no outside power to impose restrictions on its sovereignty," he then declared.

To accomplish this end, the Heimwehr, Austria's Fascst private army, was decreed dissolved; aristocratic Prince Ernst Von Starhemberg was removed from power; Schuschnigg proclaimed himself sole dictator. It was a bloodless coup d'etat and a rebuff to Il Duce, who is a stout supporter of the ousted Prince.

With these preparatory steps taken along the road to sovereignty inviolate, Chancellor Schuschnigg told a monster rally last week to what ends that dictatorship will be used.

Shouting a blast of defiance at the Little Entente, the bespectacled dictator ringingly declared:

"No outsider, but only Austrians, will decide whether the monarchy will be restored!"

Thus the question of the Hapsburg restoration pops up once more—a restoration that Germany and the Little Entente give every indication to strenuously oppose.

Poland

Pilsudski's Pinch-Hitter

Gen. Edward Rydz-Smigly, army chief and Poland's strong man, was reliably reported last week to be slated for the marshalship November 11.

The general, whose name is Rydz meaning "mushroom," earned the soubriquet "Smigly," Polish for "swift," in the 1920 war with the Soviets. The nickname stuck so well that no one in Poland today would think of calling the army's inspector general anything but Rydz Smigly.

If the report proves correct the general will inherit the silver baton relinquished at the death of Poland's first marshal dictator, doughty Joseph Pilsudski.

Every alteration in Europe's governmental officialdom causes jittery chancelleries to look for implications. Some saw in it a reorientation of Poland toward France away from the German orbit under the prospective marshal who recently returned after conferences on military matters with the French. If this be true a Poland friendly to Russia would be a powerful bulwark against Nazi aggression to the East.

Wings Over Madrid

At the first hum of distant motors a government militiaman scans the sky. Friend or foe, he wonders. Then a burst of machine-gun fire shatters the silence.

Madrid had its first baptism under rebel airplane fire last week as Loyalist defenders on the outskirts formed the last desperate "Hindenburg Line" to stem the oncoming Fascist tide.

Couzens

New Deal Champion Dead

James Couzens, 64, Michigan's senior United States Senator, died in a Detroit hospital Thursday after an emergency operation.

A Canadian by birth, Couzens began business life in America as a "news butcher" on the old Erie and Huron Railroad, graduating into a position as an extra hand in a coal yard whose owner knew Henry Ford when the latter's plant was in its infancy. When Couzens' employer guaranteed Ford's bills to the extent of $7,000 Couzens was put into the Ford office to guard his employer's interests. There the future Senator became interested in the business and acquired faith in it. Then he decided to invest.

When hard days fell on Dearborn, Couzens stuck to the Ford Motor Co. and his stock. He became general manager. The company grew and success was assured.

In 1915 Couzens broke with the automobile magnet. "I was willing to work with Henry Ford," he was quoted to have said then, "but I refuse to work for him."

Friends interpret this to mean that Couzens severed connections because the Ford industry had become a giant. They say he never was a "regular millionaire" and point out that during his public activity he had many fights, and that many of them were at the expense of the vested interests.

That Couzens acquired a new social philosophy during his term as Ford executive there is no doubt. He had been an economic royalist in his manhood, but he changed his attitude.

"There was a time," he said, "when I was not so keen about the rights and the interests of the working man. I recall a winter day in 1914 when, with a stroke of the pen, I ordered the discharge of several thousand workers of the Ford Motor Co.

"I stood in the office window and saw the men milling about, outside the gates. It was bitterly cold and I saw the hose turned on them.

"I got converted right there."

Couzens ran for Mayor of Detroit and was elected in 1919, carrying the city through the unemployment crisis of 1921. Before the completion of his last term as Mayor he was appointed by the Governor to fill an unexpired term in the United States Senate. That was on November 29, 1922.

A warm supporter of President Roosevelt, Couzens was known as an independent Republican. He was a candidate for renomination in the recent Michigan primary, and, defiant of defeat, he declared:

"Believing as I do that the most important matter confronting the Nation is the re-election of President Roosevelt, I intend to support him." That was his only statement before the electorate. He was defeated.

Navy Day Visitors Will Find Gun Factory Geared to Record Output

Shops Offer Many Sights Of Interest

Public Will Be Admitted for Tour of the Yard on Tuesday.

Authorities Expecting 200,000 Civilians on Anniversary.

By Gerald G. Gross.

Life is beginning at 50 for the naval gun factory.

On Tuesday some 200,000 persons will take themselves to the Washington Navy Yard to celebrate Navy Day, Theodore Roosevelt's seventy-eighth birthday and the golden anniversary of the ordnance factory which, begging your pardon, is going great guns.

The huge plant on Anacostia River, now in the midst of its busiest year in peacetime history, will place itself at the disposal of thousands of men, women and children eager for an opportunity to see one of the world's greatest cannon cradles in actual operation.

With international skies dotted by ever-shifting war clouds, this year's observance of Navy Day assumes added significance. And the fact that the occasion marks the fiftieth year since Secretary of the Navy Whitney ordered the Capital's own navy yard, established in 1799, devoted exclusively to the production of guns and equipment, focuses attention on Washington's No. 1 industrial beehive.

The year 1886 was anything but dull in these parts. One Albert Davis was arrested on a charge of attempting to steal Chain Bridge. Gen. Wilfield Scott Hancock paid his last visit to the Capital (he died two weeks afterward in New York), Mrs. James Brown Potter shocked local society by reciting Ostler at Mrs. Whitney's musicale and George F. Hearst, father of William Randolph, was appointed to the United States Senate from California.

Industry Paralyzed But Navy Yard Goes Ahead.

A Knights of Labor strike paralyzed Washington industry, former President Chester A. Arthur passed away and Prince Sadanaru Fushimi of Japan paid this city a visit. President Grover Cleveland married Miss Frances Folsom in the White House and the Capital was shaken by four earthquake shocks. The Boston Symphony gave its first concert here and the snowfall on February 3 (12 inches) was the heaviest since 1877.

But for the purposes of this story the year's most important event was Secretary Whitney's order directing that all work except that having to do with ordnance be discontinued at the Navy Yard. In April, 1883—three and one-half years earlier—a gun factory board appointed by President Arthur had recommended the establishment of separate gun factories for the Army and the Navy, the latter to be located in the Capital. Thus the Washington Navy Yard, which had been steadily declining in importance as a shipbuilding and repairing center, was granted a rebirth from which it has blossomed into a role of staggering proportions.

As early as 1892 the gun factory was conceded to be one of the finest in the world. The average number of employes that year was 900, compared to today's pay roll of 8,300 names. Like the bustle, the horsehair sofa and the hansom, the Southeast plant was, in its own way, a symbol of the effulgence of the nineties; but whereas the others were mowed down by time, the resuscitated Navy Yard has kept up with the march of progress by constantly adopting improved methods of operation and administration.

During the past fiscal year it filled 20,000 separate orders. A total of 270 guns was produced, ranging in size from 1 to 8 inches. Another 120 was repaired, some of them of the huge 16-inch type. The factory manufactured 1,300 submarine telescopes and 3,000 telescope parts, chiefly lenses.

Its highly skilled mechanics made the complete ordnance equipment for 24 destroyers and 6 destroyer leaders, turned out 150,000 cartridge cases, cast 5,500,000 pounds of steel and 8,250,000 pounds of brass and aluminum; manufactured hundreds of brushes for swabbing cannon innards, plated and polished over 4,000,000 articles, drafted 400,000 blueprints, made 425,000 physical tests and 104,000 chemical analyses.

The employes in this efficient industrial city received $16,500,000 in wages—and this figure does not include Navy and Marine personnel, either officers or enlisted men—and $17,000,000 was expended for materials. The mechanics, laborers and other per diem workers, who constitute the majority, averaged $55,000 a day, while white collar employes' salaries amounted to $1,800,000.

At the present time the Navy has under construction by commercial contractors three aircraft carriers, two heavy cruisers, nine light cruisers, a dozen submarines, 54 destroyers, two gunboats and six Coast Guard cutters. Guns for all will be designed and built at this mammoth plant on the banks of the Anacostia River.

Treat for Public In Viewing Factory.

The thousands upon thousands of visitors who will seize the opportunity offered by Navy Day to look in upon the origin of ship's cannon—a rare treat, indeed, since most people have met the guns only in newsreels and movie thrillers—are in for an experience they will not soon forget.

Drop forging of gun parts, manufacture of cartridge cases and pouring of white-hot liquid steel, along with such spectacular features as airplane stunting, sham battles, deep-sea diving exhibitions and scores more attractions, will be presented in the 1936 edition of this annual show.

A few words about the yard's various shops, not all of which will be open to the public Tuesday:

There are two main gun shops, No. 1 being almost twice as long as Washington Monument. This is the one equipped with electric cranes, the largest weighing 110 tons. Machining, rifling and assembling are accomplished in No. 2.

From the erecting shop come gas expelling devices for all types of guns, gun mounts for both broadside and anti-aircraft firing and miscellaneous equipment.

Another shop is devoted exclusively to plating with chromium, cadmium, nickel, cyanide and acid copper, lead, tin, gold and silver. Protection against corrosion and resistance to wear, rather than decoration or ornamentation, is the main reason for this step in the creation of a "loud speaker."

Minute accuracy is the watchword of the general machine shops, whose five separate and distinct divisions are housed in the same building. Torpedo tubes, range-finder mounts and larger details for gun mounts are born on the first floor. Immediately above is the miscellaneous shop, where gun directors, concentration dials, radio apparatus and electrical gun-firing equipment are made.

Jigs, fixtures, punches, dies and other precision tools are made on the third floor; the fourth specializes in gun and torpedo tube sights and the assembly and fuse shop occupies the fifth floor.

Enormous Power Plant Supplies Energy to Factory.

Steam, electricity and compressed air are generated in the $1,000,000 power plant, which consumes about 200 tons of coal daily. In the steel foundry may be seen the cutting of cold steel by oxygen flames, a 50-ton open hearth furnace in operation and awe-inspiring iron cupolas.

Five hundred pound bombs, power hoists, turrets and other accoutrements of a modern man o' war are among the contributions of the boilermaker shop. The pattern shop, one of the best equipped in the country, produces the patterns for all metal castings. A half million of these designs are stored in the great loft.

The up-to-date brass foundry handles orders by the Postoffice, Agriculture and other executive departments, as well as the Navy. Each part for every wireless set used on military vessels is tested in the radio laboratory. A 2,000-ton hydraulic forging press dominates the forge shop. Breech mechanisms are produced in another shop, cartridge cases in another.

One of the most interesting places on the 107-acre lot is the physical testing and metallurgical laboratory, where ordnance materials of steel, iron, bronze and brass are pulled, bent, twisted and broken.

Not directly connected with gun manufacture, but none the less thrilling to the visitor, are the yard's deep-sea diving school and its experimental model basin. The former, established in 1928, gives a six-month course in diving, care and repair of apparatus and the technique of undersea rescue work. The model basin is used to test models of ships for the Navy and the merchant marine. It is 470 feet long, 43 feet wide and 15 feet deep and has been in commission 36 years.

The Navy Yard has a medical dispensary, its own fire department and, as a special concession to the public's increasing interest in the American Navy, past and present, a new museum containing famous old flags, guns, uniforms and other trophies. Here may be seen a 12-pounder boat howitzer, vintage of 1864, which is the oldest gun in existence of Washington Navy Yard manufacture.

Still fresh in the memories of veteran employes of the naval gun factory are the days when ox teams hauled cannon from one shop to another and the volume of production was almost negligible compared to the enormous quantities of ordnance and equipment now being disgorged as world powers continue their armaments race.

If the visitor would gain an idea of the changes which the years have wrought in ship's guns, their design, appearance and performance, let him compare the 1936 product with some of the antiquated "iron barkers" distributed over the Navy Yard grounds.

Souvenirs of Past Battles Kept at Navy Yard.

Let him examine one of the guns captured by Admiral George Dewey at the Battle of Manila Bay, the trophy taken by Commodore Stephen Decatur from the Bey of Algiers in 1815 or even the Russian 3-pounder captured at Vladivostok in 1918.

Other souvenir guns include one surrendered on October 19, 1781, at Yorktown; another captured from the English in the War of 1812, a gun taken from the Mexicans at Vera Cruz in 1845, and "Long Tom," which years ago spoke its lethal pieces from the decks of the American privateer "General Armstrong."

The coming celebration of Navy Day, when the Washington Navy Yard expects to be host to the largest crowds since the observance was set aside in 1922, has evoked the following statement from Secretary of the Navy Claude A. Swanson:

"On October 27 the people of the United States will celebrate the fifteenth annual observance of Navy Day under the sponsorship of the Navy League of the United States. It as a happy inspiration to select the birthday of the late Theodore Roosevelt as the date on which to pay tribute to our first line of defense and to that splendid body of officers and men who constitute its personnel.

"It has been my privilege to serve as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee in both houses of Congress and I have always entertained a lively interest in the fortunes of our Navy. I have followed its career through many vicissitudes with sympathetic understanding and have rejoiced with it in its many triumphs.

"The Navy is non-political and non-partisan. The safety and the welfare of 120,000,000-odd people are placed in its charge, and the protection it affords to these people is not weighed by considerations of creed or party. Yet, entertaining as I do a warm regard for our naval service, it is a source of deep and abiding gratification to me that our Navy has made much progress during the present Administration.

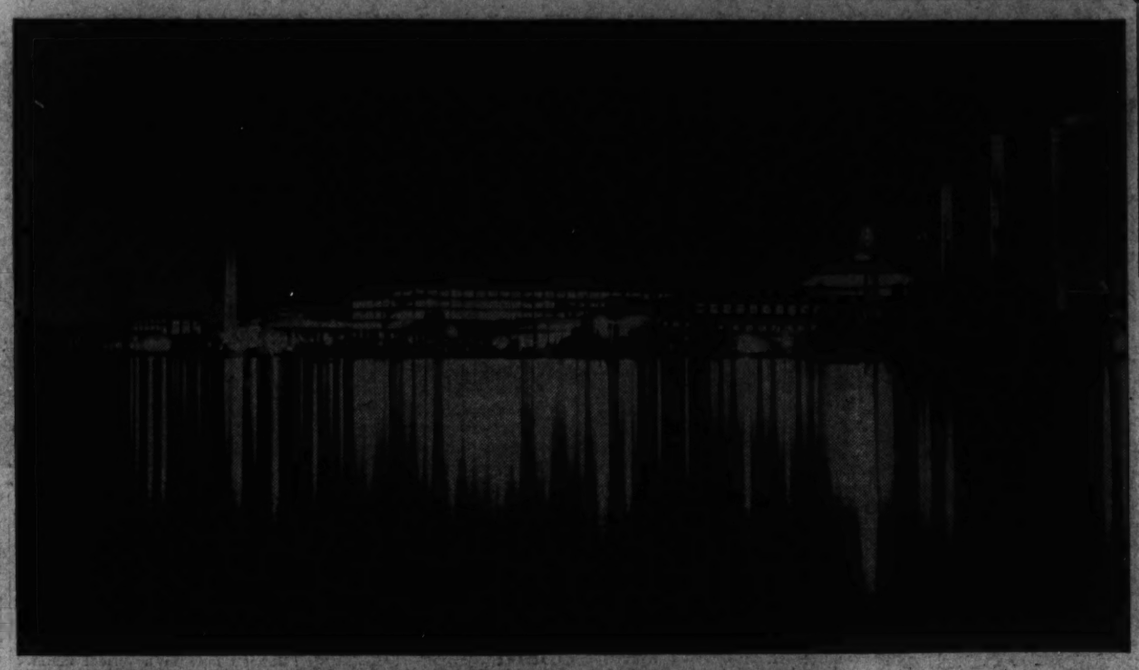
Second to None Navy Yard is Capitol's Pride.

"For 14 years, since the inauguration of the first Navy Day and the consummation of the Washington Agreement, it has been covenanted in international law that this country of ours shall have a Navy second to none other. I am glad to see that today, after nearly a decade and a half, we are approaching those limits which statesmen of the major parties have considered the minimum naval needs for national defense, and which have been freely recognized as our right by the governments of all the naval powers.

"It is my earnest hope that the newly formed Maritime Commission can do as much for our merchant marine as recent legislation has done for our combatant Navy. American sea power will not have attained its proper place in the world until the Navy of fighting ships, contemplated by the Vinson-Trammell bill, is augmented by a modest building program of auxiliaries and is supported by a merchant marine policy which is strong and enduring.

"As Secretary of the Navy, I salute the officers and men of the service for their past years of devotion to national interests. With my civilian compatriots, I take pleasure in honoring a service nearly as old as the Republic itself and one whose patriotism, zeal and efficiency have never been questioned nor found wanting."

Making sure that the United States will not be left at the post in the event of another war, the Naval Gun Factory a the Washington Navy Yard operates at top speed manufacturing weapons. Lights from the factory are reflected (right) in the Eastern Branch as the night shift works. Riveters (below) work on torpedo tubes for the new submarines included in the ship building program now under way.



The best mechanics in the country are at work at the Naval Gun Factory on a 24-hour shift turning out the new guns in the shipbuilding program now in full sway. A welder (below) is at work on the new armament.

Surrounded by the dull gleam of his finished product, the mechanic at the right is turning out cartridge cases for the big guns. Large caliber guns to be rifled (below) wait in yard.

Bromley Tragedy Forces Elimination of 'Death Curve'

Aroused Fallston, Pa., Citizens Win Fight for New Road.

By Frederic B. Tuttle.

Because of the determination and spunk of the townsfolk of Fallston, Pa., three members of a prominent Colmar, Md., family—mother, father and son—who perished in the blazing wreckage of their automobile not far from Beaver Falls, Pa., shall not have died in vain.

For the mile-long, corkscrew curve, a death trap through the years, on which the Burt M. Bromleys were smashed and burned into eternity, soon will be nothing but a hateful memory.

Already a new piece of road, with a lesser grade, almost imperceptible, is nearing completion. Within a short while it will be open to the traffic that found Fallston Hill a haunted place, where trouble and risk of life and limb lurked.

Fallston Hill, or "Death Curve," scene of many a motoring tragedy, is on route 31, about 25 miles from Pittsburgh, in Beaver County.

Huge Trucks Were Menace On Winding Hill.

Day and night, in sunshine, rain and snow, the huge trucks between Pittsburgh and Cleveland rumbled and roared over the hazardous grade.

Long before the Bromleys were killed in what the townspeople described as the most "heart-breaking" tragedy of the highway's existence, citizens were after the State to eliminate the grade.

There had been other disasters.

Trucks had run wild down the grade and crashed into front lawns. Once the chief of police had been sitting with his grandson at the window of his house when a two-ton monster of the road, loaded with iron, hurtled beyond control.

It struck the house and demolished the front room. Only the window and the walls immediately around it stood. Folks thought the escape was miraculous. They thanked God, and the officer moved to another residence. The fight to rid Fallston of the menace of Fallston Hill was on.

Numerous Tragedies On Same Curves.

Then there was the tragedy of the young school teacher, on her way home to celebrate her twenty-eighth birthday. She gayly left her classroom, the merry shouts of the children in her ears. She climbed into her light coupe and started up the hill. Then she went to pass a truck, loaded with heavy steel sheets. One of these was jostled from place and rolled back on the coupe, smashing it to bits and killing the teacher instantly.

The Fallston authorities and officials of Beaver County took the matter to the Pennsylvania State road commission. There was no action. Meanwhile there persisted the crash and bang of heavy traffic over Fallston Hill, summit of the doomed and shame and anxiety of the little town at its base.

Outraged, the people stationed guards on the road, but these were withdrawn at the order of the commission.

The townspeople threatened vigilante action. Drivers must be warned, they said, that the grim reaper lurged behind those bends through the rolling country, and that their peaceful little village, sleeping at the base, might be turned at any moment into a temporary morgue for the luckless drivers.

While the people of Fallston and Beaver County were bickering with the road commission, there occurred the Bromley tragedy.

For the Bromleys died at the height of what was to have been a gay family vacation.

The crash which will bring about the elimination of the curve occurred on August 7.

Burt M. Bromley, a clerk in the Interstate Commerce Commission and a former Mayor of Colmar Manor, had had his light sedan cleaned and tested for the trip.

The brakes were in excellent working order, the engine was properly oiled, the tires were in perfect shape. He took his car from the garage and started West with his family.

With him rode his wife, Henrietta, prominent in club and church work in Colmar Manor. In the back were his son, Bertram, 12, and his daughter, Bonita, 16.

Before the family left home, Mrs. Bromley is said to have had a premonition that some disaster awaited the holiday adventure. She made certain arrangements about their insurance policies and their bank accounts and their personal properties.

Bromleys Overrode Premonition And Started Trip.

"You never can tell these days," she was quoted as saying to her husband.

So, having done what seemed most logical, the Bromleys dismissed gloomy thoughts from their minds.

All went well until they approached Beaver Falls. There were stops along the highway for food, the laughter and the merriment of vacation time.

Death seemed much farther away than the smooth expanse of Death Curve, on the highway ahead.

Bromley stepped on his starter after the last stop and his sedan leaped forward.

The hot summer wind whipped through the open windows and life was good. Bromley watched the highway intently, for he had the reputation of being an experienced and careful driver.

But at Death Curve something went wrong.

Perhaps it was the bend in the highway, the steep elevation. Perhaps it was the surprise of seeing a big truck roaring down from the opposite direction, listing slightly, according to reports, with the grade of the road.

There was a wild shriek of brakes, then the grinding of locking wheels. Then came the smash of the truck toppling over on the Bromley sedan, and the rumble of an explosion as the Bromley gasoline tank ignited.

The Bromley car burst into flames. The flames licked and crackled toward Mrs. Bromley. She screamed several times before they silenced her.

Her son died beside her.

Bromley, unconscious, badly burned and otherwise injured, was pulled from the wreckage.

Bonita, the only member of the family to survive, pried open a door and was helped to safety.

Next day Bromley died without regaining consciousness in Beaver Valley Hospital at New Brighton, Pa. Bonita slowly recovered and

Ghosts Roam Halls of Ancient Capital Homes as Hallowe'en Nears

Octagon House Spirits Mingle in Weird Cries

Specters of Four Persons, Victims of Its Tragedies, Said to Wander Around Its Irregular Rooms at Midnight.

By Eugene Warner.

Ghost stories are fun.

Scoffers busy themselves happily explaining supernatural phenomena with logic. How dull! But it's their privilege in a debunkracy. They like it.

Believers in ghosts, charming souls, let their imaginations waft them into a spectral sphere, enjoying an orgy of exciting image-making. They like it.

Then there are the undecided. They admit they know nothing about these matters, but are willing to listen. They like it.

For all types of ghost addicts there are more weird tales about Washington's footloose phantoms than you can shake a broomstick at. Pull up your chairs, one and all, and harken!

Aha!

And a few groans . . .

Boo!

All set? Is your mind now sufficiently visionary to see yourself entering with soundless foot-falls the old ghost-ridden house at New York avenue and Eighteenth street, the famous Octagon House, infested with secret doors, hidden passageways, and the deathless spirits of two beautiful colonial women?

It is next Saturday night, Hallowe'en. The ancient grandfather's clock in the hall begins to toll the evil hour when morning meets day. Midnight thickens about you. Hm. Tick . . . tock. Tick . . tock—Bong! —First stroke of the hour when "churchyards yawn and graves give up their dead."

You glance about you at the reassuring commonplaceness of the furnishings belonging to the present tenants, the National Institute Architects, and then you glance up the queer, spiral staircase winding its symbolic course from earth to roof, up and up into the black.

From somewhere near the top of this peculiar staircase there comes a faint knocking. Knock . . . knock . . .

"Who's there?"

"Octagon."

"Octagon who?"

"Octagon somewhere else tonight."

This is no time for levity, my dear. Tick . . . tock . . . Bong!

Suddenly as if by diabolic magic a night of 200 years ago flares into a ghastly reality before you.

Col. John Tayloe, resplendent in purple velvet breeches and lace collar, his white wig lying on a Chippendale table, is pounding his fist on his mahogany desk. His beautiful daughter, her Dresden china cheeks wet with tears, turns slowly away, grasping in her pale hand a brass candlestick.

The old colonel, a dear friend of George Washington tells her, for the last time:

"Damned if you'll marry a Britisher. I care not a whit if he be a captain or a general or an orderly. No daughter of mine——"

But the girl was gone. With breaking heart she trudged, step by step, up the circling stair. Tick . . . tock. Tick . . . tock.—Bong!

Despair such as only lovers may know clutched her heart. The flickering candle in her hand, caught by a gust of wind, blew out. In the crushing darkness an irresistible force took possession of her soul and carried her faltering body to the encircling rail.

It was done. Down and down she fell; a scream, perhaps of terror, perhaps of release, parted her pretty lips as she plunged though the rushing darkness. The colonel hastened to the side of his broken child . . . Tick . . . Tock—Bong!

Some years later, and a similar scene is seen in the diffused light. The same colonel, but a different daughter, takes form as the clock tick-tocks and bongs again.

"But, father, I can't marry that old scrooge! I don't care how much money he has!"

"I appreciate your reluctance, my child, but there is the consideration of my wishes——" A pause. Tick . . . tock . . . Bong!

A Thousand Times "No," Dear Father.

"Ah, I know how badly we need it. And if it weren't for something else, I would do it for your sake."

"Else? What else?"

"Father, I am in love with Charles. I can't give him up."

"That penniless lawyer! I thought —— No! You shan't marry him! You will marry the man I say!"

Tick . . . tock . . . Bong!

As you stand transfixed you behold another girl mounting those fatal stairs, sorrowing for love. You see the memories of her sister's act floating in her mind, and horror-struck, you watch her move like a person in sleep, toward the railing. Tick . . . tock . . . Bong!

Down, down, she falls, another shriek splitting the night.

Tick . . . tock . . . tick . . . Bong!

The vision fades and another fuses up to replace it. A descendant of the colonel, a young gallant who loved an octaroon slave, searches the house for her. She has vanished. He does not know that she has been murdered, and that her dead body even as he searches, is hidden in a secret cupboard in the old house.

Tick . . . tock The clock strikes again. He recalls that an Army officer also loved her. The night passes and many more. He is convinced his rival has killed her. Through the old town he searches on, nearing madness. Tick-tock, bong! The body slumps in its cupboard.

Shattered by his endless quest certain that his beloved is dead, he begins the fatal climb up the long, winding pathway to death. Step after step he climbs, his head bent in grief.

For the third time you behold one of the Tayloes about to kill himself for love. You try to reach out to stop him, but you know he is a specter and that no hand of yours may stay the departed in their unearthly pantomimes. One leg is over the railing as the clock strikes 12. Bong!

Like a fallen heart, he plummets downward, and as he cries out the shrieks of his cousins splinter the curdling air, the eight strange walls commence a witches' dance, the octaroon vanishes from her cupboard, the spiral staircase screws into the sky to vanish over a cloud, and you?—Where are you? Right here on a page of The Sunday Post.

That's just one of countless ghost stories about old Washington houses. The Supreme Court Building, for all its severity and high-powered ratiocinations, has (or at least ought to have) its ghost. The Capitol is by no means free from ghosts, either.

Where, Oh Where, Can My Conscience Be!

On the site of the Supreme Court the notorious Capt. Wirz, commandant of Andersonville Prison, was hanged at night, and his ghost may be seen wandering the corridors of the marble palace of justice, looking for his flown conscience, according to unconfirmed rumor. Servants in the Woman's Party Building, nearby, have heard strange noises and clankings of chains, accompanied by groans. A purple-robed woman, believed to be the earthly manifestation of Belle Boyd, famous Confederate spy, kept in the prison where the court now stands, has been seen on moonless nights wandering about the vicinity carrying a lighted taper, 'tis said.

The Capitol itself is not ghostless by any means. Several people claim to have seen the apparition of John Quincy Adams wandering about Statuary Hall. He died in a little room adjoining the hall, and his ghost only appears in the dead of night.

Another well-known Capitol ghost is that of a soldier who was killed during the occupation of the old Capitol by the British during the war of 1814. Four generations have seen him, a specter of martial bearing, who marches with military stride through the haunting shadows of the ancient building.

On gloomy nights the former bridge over Rock Creek at M street had a stage-driver coach and two horse ghosts which proceeded over the vanished bridge which used to stand there. In Colonial days a wooden bridge there collapsed, drowning the driver and his steeds.

The Headless Man of the K Street Bridge is a mystery which once enchanted neighbors of the vicinity. He was seen several times before the turn of the century, but apparently regained his missing dome and returned to the quietude of his grave.

In the Thomas Law house, which once stood beside the New House Office Building, resided one of the best-known ghosts in Washington, the ectoplasmic remains of Beau Hickman, a great gambler and bon vivant, who was born in Virginia of well-to-do parents in 1813.

Beau Hick, as he was known, lived by the facility of his wits, and did very well at it, adorning himself with the most elegant of clothes and sparkling jewelry. He was a familiar figure around the Capitol with his beaver, gold-headed cane, and suave manners. He spent most of his time in a gambling hall nearby

Ghosts Go Round And Round.

He died a pauper in Providence Hospital in 1873. His body was taken to Potter's Field, but, upon hearing of that, some of his old cronies took up a purse to give him a respectable burial. Upon arriving at Potter's Field, they found his body disinterred, and lying on the edge of its grave. He was hastily reburied in a new cemetery, but his spirit, probably enraged at life's final indignity, moved into the Thomas Law house, where it proved to be a great nuisance for years.

A dim picture of a woman's head has been observed by many people to appear on the walls of an old house near the old Pension Office on F street. Close examination in full daylight shows a bare wall, but at night the woman's face is clear and glowing. So many spectators came to see it the house owner finally refused admittance to all.

The Drummer Boy of Little Falls plays his drums in a ghostly rattle dark nights, ever since he was drowned crossing the river to the Virginia side during the Revolutionary War. He has been heard numerous times by more or less veracious witnesses.

Beyond Arlington a gruesome horseman rides the farmlands of Bernard Jones with the fiendish haste of an Ichabod Crane. Judge Wade Ellis, of Rippon Lodge, has a friendly ghost about the place, according to old tales in the town of Arlington, and the Joaquim Miller cabin in Rock Creek Park is believed by many to be haunted by its former occupant.

The Hickey Mansion, in Ivy City, is reputed to have an assortment of performing spooks, but the most scarey place in that community is the old Patterson vault, hidden in deep trees, which have overgrown and enshrouded an ancient vault with a caved-in roof.

Hugh Miller, picture editor of The Washington Post, tells of the night he was photographing the vault. Past it winds a pathway traversed by colored folk of the neighborhood, most of whom prefer to use the shortcut in daylight hours. One, braver than the rest, was whistling as he hurried by the vault this night, when Miller touched off his powder flashlight. A screech rent the foliage, there was a tremendous stamping of the feet of a colored man in a great hurry, and thus was founded proof positive that ghosts inhabit the old vault, a belief which is unshakable in the vicinity to this day.

Country, Tired of Wilson Dream in '20, Voted for Harding and 'Normalcy'

Cox, FDR, Went Down to Defeat On League Issue

Wilson Predicted Isolation Policy Would Mean Loss of Business.

This is the sixteenth in a series of stories on past Presidential campaigns.

By W. B. Ragsdale.

Associated Press Staff Writer.

When the 1920 party conventions met, the World War was over, although it was 1921 before Congress admitted it in a formal resolution declaring the war at an end.

Wilson had been to Paris. He had taken to the country his fight against the Senate irreconcilables for the League of Nations. His treaty had been rejected. He had refused compromise. His ples for a Democratic Congress had been voted down. He had fallen ill at Pueblo, Colo., in the midst of his battle for the League. The shades of his train compartment were close drawn on the trip back to Washington. Few saw him during his weeks of illness. Bars had been put on some of the White House windows years before to keep Roosevelt's children from breaking the glass. Now the curious pointed to the bars and whispered there was a madman in the White House.

Senators asked whether the President was able to perform the duties of his office—if the Vice President should not take over. Dr. Cary Grayson, the President's physician, refused to certify to the Executive's disability. The Senate sent a committee to find out how ill the President was. Senator Fall, of New Mexico, leading the investigators, insisted that they must go into the sick room. On leaving he said:

Wilson Quits on His Sick Bed.

"I want you to know, Mr. President, that I am praying for you."

The group left. Wilson turned to Joseph Tumulty, his secretary, sighed, and said:

"You heard what Fall said? Well, I have been wondering what I have done that he should be allowed to queer me with the Almighty."

Roosevelt might have been the Republican candidate in 1920 had he lived. He died in 1919. His old friend, Gen. Wood, was a contender for the nomination. So were Gov. Lowden, of Illinois, and Senator Johnson, of California. But out in Ohio, Harry Micajah Daugherty and Warren Gamaliel Harding were in a fight to keep control of the State machine. A rival group was backing Wood for President. Daugherty figured that he could rally the State back of an Ohioan. He proposed Senator Harding as that Ohioan. Harding's renomination to the Senate was at stake.

So Harding ran for President to stay in the Senate. He made a few speeches. Daugherty set up headquarters in a dingy Washington hotel, predicted that the convention would wind up in a deadlock of the Lowden-Wood forces, that the party leaders would get together "about 2:11 in the morning" and agree on Harding. The Harding prospect was strengthened by disclosures of heavy campaign expenditures for Wood and Lowden. Harding was disinclined to stake all on the chance of winning the Presidency. Daugherty had to call upon Mrs. Harding to help talk her husband into the White House. He put it this way:

"The two of us backed him against the wall and made him stick."

In Chicago, when the delegates assembled, the Lowden and Wood men lacked ballots, neither able to win. Wood got 314½ on the fourth. Lowden went about the same peak. Johnson's highest was 148 on the third.

Thereupon, the party leaders began casting about for a compromise candidate. Senator Curtis, of Kansas; Brandegee, of Connecticut, and Lodge, of Massachusetts, and George Harvey, the New York editor who had been for Wilson for President back in 1906, dined together and talked the matter over. Several candidates were discussed. Other leaders drifted in and out during the evening. About 2 a. m.—not far from the 2:11 of Daugherty—Harvey sent for Harding to ask whether there was anything "that might disqualify you or make you inexpedient either as candidate or President." Harding went into another room alone. Ten minutes later, he emerged and said there was not.

Harding Draws a "Full House."

His nomination went over on the tenth ballot of the convention, late the next afternoon. Reporters swarmed about him.

"We drew to a pair of deuces and filled," he said.

The leaders made a quick decision that Senator Lenroot, of Wisconsin, should be the Vice Presidential candidate. But a delegate sprang up and proposed Gov. Calvin Coolidge, of Massachusetts. A wave of cheering swept the nomination through.

In San Francisco, the Democrats, holding the first convention of a major party on the Pacific Coast, were having troubles, too. President Wilson had declined to lay his hand on the back of any candidate, even that of his son-in-law, William Gibbs McAdoo. He told the national committee that the League of Nations should be the paramount issue of the Democratic campaign.

Sixteen candidates were voted on before the convention on the fortieth ballot choose James M. Cox, who twice had been Governor of Ohio. Among those high in the running had been McAdoo, John W. Davis, of West Virginia; Alfred E. Smith, of New York, and A. Mitchell Palmer, of Pennsylvania.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, a friend of Wilson, was picked for Vice President by acclamation.

Cox and Roosevelt came to Washington and conferred with the shattered war leader at the White House. Wilson talked about the League. They left deeply moved and went out to battle for Wilson's dream. They traveled far, spoke often. Cox was on the move for 29 days on one trip through 18 Western States—out of which he gleaned not an electoral vote.

Against the Wilson League, Harding proposed "an association of nations, co-operating in sublime accord, to attain and preserve peace through justice rather than force, determined to add to security through international law."

Both Harding and Coolidge conducted front porch campaigns, moving away from their home bases only to make important speeches at strategic points. In the midst of the campaign, scurrilous circulars appeared, aimed at Harding. President Wilson ordered them barred from the mails.

November brought: Harding 16,152,200, Cox 9,147,353, Watkins 189,408, Debs 919,799, Christensen 265,411. The electoral vote gave Harding 404, Cox 127.

At the White House, Wilson was telling Tumulty:

"The isolation which America covets will mean a loss of prestige which always in the end means a loss of business."

Three years later Warren G. Harding was dead. An Associated Press reporter was flashing the story. A dozen other reporters were hurrying back to the Palace Hotel, filling the cool August evening with imprecations at the seeming slowness with which their taxicabs two-wheeled around the dizzy twists of San Francisco streets.

In far-away Vermont, other reporters took one glance at the incoming news and went streaking through the mountains toward the farm home of John Coolidge. For the fifth time in history a Vice President was going to take over at 1600 Pennsylvania avenue. While the reporters waited in the little farmhouse, watching curiously under the yellow glow of a kerosene lamp, Calvin Coolidge received the news. They heard the click of a typewriter as he dictated a message in the next room.

"It will be my purpose to carry out the policies which he has begun for the service of the American people," it said.

John Coolidge shaved and put on a black suit. He administered the oath of office to his son at 2:30 a. m., August 3, 1923. Then Calvin Coolidge went back to bed. That same day he started back to Washington. A few weeks later the oath was administered again, this time by Justice A. A. Hoehling of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. It had been found that only judges of a certain rank could administer the oath to the President.

Administration Scandals Headline News.

Already the doings of the Harding Administration were pumping black type into newspaper headlines. Democrats were chuckling. A scramble was starting for the 1924 Democratic nomination. Out of the various investigations came evidence that put Albert S. Fall, Harding's Secretary of Interior, in jail for accepting a bribe; sent Charles R. Forbes, head of the Veterans Bureau, to jail for defrauding the Government; put Thomas W. Miller, alien property custodian in jail for accepting money to influence an official act. Harding's close friend, Harry M. Daugherty, was accused, but not convicted, of being faithless in his duties as Attorney General. Jess Smith, an intimate of Daugherty, committed suicide.

As the investigators plowed ahead, however, the name of a Democrat emerged. Nor was he just a down-in-the-ranks Democrat with plain sleeves and shoulder straps. He was one of their chief contenders for the Presidential nomination. Edward L. Doheny, the California oil magnate of the Fall affair, testified that he had employed William Gibbs McAdoo as his attorney after the latter left the Wilson Cabinet, paying him a yearly retainer fee of $50,000. McAdoo demanded an immediate hearing before the Senate Committee. He testified that he had in no way served Doheny in connection with the questionable leases and that as soon as suspicion turned toward them, he had returned his fee for the year and quit as Doheny's attorney.

That was in January, 1924. Already McAdoo was far out in front in the race to round up convention delegates. He was running as a dry, a foe of "reaction" and "special privilege." In some States, he was drawing Ku Klux Klan support.

After the Doheny testimony, McAdoo called his forces together to decide what he should do. They urged him to continue in the race. He did.

On the other side of the fence, the country was learning about Coolidge. Before he went into the White House, Washington hostesses knew him as a quiet man who dined out frequently because a Vice President had to eat somewhere. Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth heard at her doctor's office that he looked "as if he had been weaned on a pickle."

In the Senate there had been some discussion of whether he should succeed himself as Vice President. Many of the politicians were doubtful. But his first message to Congress ended that. He made it a statement of the issues, outlining the position of the party in such a way that he stamped his renomination as a certainty.

When the Republicans met at Cleveland the only uncertainty was who would be the Vice Presidential candidate. Coolidge was named on the first ballot.

The nominations and the Republican platform failed to satisfy all. The Progressives met in Cleveland and named Senator Robert M. La Follette, sr., for President and Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, a Democrat, for Vice President. Their platform called for a constitutional amendment to give Congress power to overrule—by a two-thirds vote—decisions of the Supreme Court which might call a law unconstitutional. The Socialists indorsed the La Follette-Wheeler ticket.

Battle With Klan Mob Intensifies Feeling.

On April 5, two had been killed and thirteen hurt in a battle between the residents of Lilly, Pa., and a mob of 500 in Ku Klux Klan regalia. The occurrence played no part in the Democratic convention. But it provides a definite clue to the feelings that pulsed through the meeting. The forces that were rallying around Alfred E. Smith, the Governor of New York, wanted to denounce the Klan by name. The McAdoo supporters did not. The platform committee worried over the problem for three days. After an all night session the committee put William Jennings Bryan upon his knees to pray for guidance. One observer, however, remarked that the convention was past praying for.

The issue was taken to the convention floor. A resolution denouncing the Klan by name was balloting straight into a tie vote when Miss Marian Colley, of Washington, Ga., got up in the shouting, fist-shaking tumult and changed her half vote from "Aye" to "No." The decision was 542 3-20 to 541 3-20 against speaking out against the Klan.

The Madison Square Garden galleries were filled with booing and cheering partisans, with a lavish representation from Tammany. On both sides, men were fighting mad. Extra police were brought in. A close guard was put around Bryan when he went to the platform to speak against the Klan denunciation.

McAdoo swung into the lead at the outset of the balloting. Smith was next. High up among the other 17 candidates on the first ballot were Senator Underwood, of Alabama; Samuel T. Ralston, of Indiana; Albert C. Ritchie, of Maryland; James M. Cox, of Ohio; Senator Harrison, of Mississippi. John W. Davis, of West Virginia, got 31 votes.

After 50 ballots, some conservatives hinted at a deadlock. Eighty ballots brought representatives of all candidates together to see if they could agree on some one. The Smith men said they would retire if McAdoo would. The suggestion was refused. Finally, the delegates were released from the instructions given by their States. The lines began to shift. McAdoo withdrew after 100 ballots. John W. Davis was named on the 103d.

Davis sought to get Senator Walsh, of Montana; Newton D. Baker, of Ohio, or Edward T. Meredith, of Iowa, for Vice Presidential candidate. Neither wanted it. Finally, a conference of the leaders picked Charles W. Bryan, of Nebraska, brother of William J. He was quickly nominated.

Radio Becomes a Campaign Factor.

Davis and both the major Vice Presidential candidates went on the stump during the campaign. Coolidge remained in the White House. LaFollette was in poor health handicapping the Progressive campaign. For the first time, the radio was beginning to be used. But not to the extent to which it dominated later campaigns. In 1920, the first limited broadcast of election returns had been made.

November brought: Coolidge, 15,725,016; Davis, 8,385,586; LaFollette, 4,822,856; Faris, 57,551; Nations, 23,867; Johns, 38,958; Foster, 33,361. The electoral vote gave Coolidge, 382; Davis, 136; LaFollette, 13.

Four years to the day from the August morning on which his father had administered to him the oath of office, Calvin Coolidge dictated an even dozen words to his secretary in the summer executive offices that had been set up in a schoolhouse in the Black Hills of South Dakota. He took shears out of his desk and trimmed the typed pages into slips. At noon the reporters filed past him, each receiving a slip. He stood in silence.

"Isn't there something else to be said about this, Mr. President?" asked one.

"No. That's all the news in this office this morning," clipped the President.

And he let it stand at: "I do not choose to run for President in 1928."

His decision threw the field open. Into it came talk of Lowden, Dawes, and Senators Goff, of West Virginia; Curtis, of Kansas; Watson, of Indiana, and Willis, of Ohio. Willis died before convention time. Herbert Hoover, whose name had been before the country day in and day out for 11 years, got away to a good start. He had been talked of by the Democrats in 1920. They had given him up when he told them he was a Republican. He had gone into Harding's Cabinet and stayed with Coolidge.

But the draft Coolidge talk was still going when the Republicans got to Kansas City. Coolidge later wrote in his autobiography: "I therefore sent the secretary to the President, Everett Sanders, a man of great ability and discretion, to Kansas City with instructions to notify several of the leaders of State delegations not to vote for me. Had I not done so, I am told, I should have been nominated."

The other candidates sought to consolidate against Hoover. Then William S. Vare, the Philadelphia boss, declared for Hoover, answering the riddle of what the Key State delegations would do. The

Down in the Old North State, where everybody supposed the Roosevelt vote was wrapped up and ready to deliver, a lot of dust is being kicked up on the hustings.

Never in the recent history of the State has the campaigning been so intense.

Representative Robert L. Doughton, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, is stumping for Roosevelt in every district of North Carolina. And every time Doughton makes a speech, Senator Robert L. Reynolds makes one.

What puzzles Tarheel voters is—why all the shouting? Most of them plan to go to the polls and vote for re-election of the President, in fact, there hasn't been any question of North Carolina bolting the Solid South.

For a while, the politicos were puzzled, too. And then a dim, glimmering of light broke over Carolina's purple mountains. Why, this wasn't a Presidential campaign, at all, at all, it was a Senatorial campaign, just two years in advance of the showdown.

Senator Reynolds' term in the Senate expires in 1939. It has long been an open secret that Representative Doughton, grown heavy with honors in his long years of House service, would like to top off his career with a term in the Senate. So there you are, for what it's worth.

Friends say that the rugged Doughton is not daunted at all by the fact that he is now 71, and would probably be 74 before he could hope to become a Senate freshman. He is more hale and vigorous than many of his colleagues who are half his age, and proved it in a recent campaign when he punched the nose of a quarrelsome political adversary who was much younger. And down Carolina way there is a saying that "the Doughtons never die."

Two years ago Doughton had his eyes on the North Carolina Governorship. He was practically ready to announce for the office when the President got wind of it.

The Ways and Means Committee, of which Doughton is chairman, carries the torch in Government fiscal legislation, and it occurred to the President that the Administration, which had fiscal troubles galore, could ill afford to lose the services of a stalwart of Doughton's caliber.

Net result was that Doughton was summoned to Washington by Mr. Roosevelt and persuaded to change his mind. The President was rewarded last session when Doughton went down the line all the way on the Administration's controversial undistributed earnings tax, and the bill became law.

The gossip runs now that Mr. Doughton thinks his obligations, if he had any, will be fully discharged in another two years, and anyway he can discharge them just as well in the Senate as he can in the House. Talk is that if he decides to run for the Senate in 1938, North Carolina's entire House delegation will support him.

But Senator Reynolds is no sleepy campaigner, himself. He keeps his ears to the ground, and, of course, he has heard the Doughton gossip.

While Mr. Doughton was stumping the State for Roosevelt, and incidentally projecting his name outside his own district, Senator Reynolds decided two could play the same game. After all, it was his seat that was at stake in 1938. Now both are at it hammer and tongs, and from the smoke they are raising one would think, without taking a second look, that North Carolina's Presidential vote is in doubt.

Both "Bobs" are rough and tumble, rip-snorting campaigners, and by the time things really get going two years hence the Tarheels will perk up their ears.

Meanwhile, Reynolds is said to be fighting fire with fire. His friends here have organized a North Carolina Democratic Club to support Mr. Roosevelt's election. Of course nothing at present is being said about supporting Reynolds for re-election in 1936.

Harry Parker's famous quotation may have put the Senatorial bug in Chairman Doughton's ear. Harry, aged messenger for the Ways and Means Committee, likes to sit back and philosophize on the old days, when "dey just took de cream of de Ways and Means Committee and made Senators out of dem."

Senator Warren Austin, Vermont Republican, dealt geographic textbooks a jolt the other day, when he announced to startled reporters that Vermont is really a larger State than Texas—or would be if all of its mountains and valleys were leveled off.

Patronage-harried members of Congress lost no time in locking up their offices and getting out of town last July. For six long months they had fought the battle of jobs in every Federal department, an army of job-seekers on their flank. They wanted quick relief. Most of them got it.

But pity the plight of Senator Augustine Lonergan (Democrat), of Connecticut. As chairman of the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee, he couldn't leave town. Worse luck, Mr. Farley hadn't been allowing him much patronage anyway. But the job seekers didn't know that.

Harassed beyond endurance, Senator Lonergan finally posted the following, in bold back and red lettering:

Employment Notice.

"Other duties make it necessary to limit employment help to giving endorsements.

"If you are calling for the first time you should have your State endorsements and some position in prospect. Ask for application blanks and instructions in this room.

"If your file is established ask for instructions. Letters of endorsement will be mailed the day following your request.

"Because of increasing pressure, it is virtually impossible to make telephone calls in employment cases."

The Political Kickback.

The letter sent to members of the faculty and other employes of the University of Maryland by the Democratic campaign committee is aptly described by an irate professor as a "strategical blunder" that will lose votes instead of bringing in money. As an example of crass stupidity the document certainly deserves to rank high among communications of its kind. In effect, the committee implies that the Democratic Party is entitled to a "cut" in the handout of Federal funds to the University of Maryland. These subsidies are treated as if they were gifts from the Roosevelt Administration for which the employes of the university should show proper gratitude by helping to re-elect the President.

Irate professors—Democrats and Republicans alike—may cast their letters into wastebaskets. But their disgust over policies that encourage such outrageous methods of solicitation will not be so easily cast aside. For it must now be evident to them that the average political spoilsman has little regard for the principle of academic freedom. He sees no more reason to keep politics out of education than out of any other branch of the public service from which he can exact tribute.

The Maryland campaign committee has merely expressed, very crudely and tactlessly, a long-established and widely held belief that those who subsist off public money should contribute to the campaign chest of the party in control of the public purse strings. By this action it has justified the apprehensions of those leaders in the academic world who have viewed with great misgiving the entry of the Federal Government into educational fields formerly reserved to the States or to privately endowed institutions.

But the assumption that Federal subsidies are gifts of the party in power did not originate in the fertile brains of Maryland's Democratic committeemen. It has been implied in innumerable speeches and addresses delivered by President Roosevelt and other spokesmen for the Administration who claim credit for the spending of public funds on behalf of this and that group or special interest. Such claims have been made the basis of campaign appeals to voters on relief as well as farmers in receipt of benefit payments. What could be more natural and inevitable than the extension of such demands to professors whose jobs and salaries may have been saved by Federal contributions to depleted university treasuries?

These inexcusable attempts to make "political" capital out of lavish public spending constitute a great and growing social danger, quite apart from their effect upon the public credit. Campaign managers are simply bringing these evils to light by their unscrupulous appeals to the fear and the cupidity of voters. The primary responsibility is not theirs. It belongs to the New Deal chieftains who brazenly pretend that the distribution of funds exacted from taxpayers is a special favor which entitles them to a kickback.

The Fascist Bloc.

Germany's action in formally recognizing Ethiopia as an Italian colony is far more important for its European implications than for the bearing it is likely to have on Italy's position in East Africa.

No doubt Germany's action is pleasing to Italian pride. But it will provide the Italian kingdom with none of the funds needed to exploit Ethiopia. For the Third Reich as well as Italy is in a desperate situation financially. Nor will the German move of itself break the League's united front on the Ethiopian problem. The recent revolt of the small powers at Geneva shows that there continues to be within the League very real opposition to any abandonment of the nonrecognition stand.

Nonetheless, Germany's gesture of friendship for Italy is not without real importance. It indicates that, whatever differences may have divided the two leading Fascist nations in the past or whatever differences may arise between them in the future, they are at the moment in a mood to co-operate. The agreement just reached at Berlin means the creation of a diplomatic bloc extending from the Baltic to the Mediterranean. It means, in particular, concerted action on the Spanish question, probably taking the form of recognition of a Spanish Fascist government the moment Gen. Franco's troops capture Madrid and a concerted stand regarding the European security problem.

The two powers, it is reported, will present to Great Britain and France a plan for a nonaggression pact binding Germany, Italy, France and Great Britain to take no warlike action against each other. It is clearly recognized in Berlin and Rome that such a plan has no attraction for France. Its acceptance by that nation would mean the destruction of its alliance not only with Russia but also with Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Yugoslavia. But those capitals are hopeful that Great Britain will regard it as an opportunity to insure itself, as well as France and Belgium, against attack, and will resent France's refusal to consider it.

From the Russian viewpoint nothing could be more dangerous to its security than such an agreement. More now than ever are the Russians convinced that, in Maxim Litvinoff's phrase, "peace is indivisible." It is not surprising, therefore, that the turn of events in Spain, where there may soon come into being another Fascist state greatly indebted both to Germany and Italy, has aroused such widespread alarm in the Soviet Union.

Thus the division between communism and fascism in Europe steadily moves from the field of theoretical controversy into the arena of world politics. As long as the democratic nations of Europe, in particular France and Great Britain, act together as a buffer the danger of this conflict of rival ideologies will be minimized. But should they move at cross purposes, the outlook for European peace will become ominous indeed.

Finding A Fiscal Formula.

One reason for the long-standing dilemma over fiscal relations between the Federal and District governments has emerged very clearly from the hearings on this subject before the President's special advisory council. The task of working out a formula that will permit proper development of the Capital City and equitable division of the expenses is extremely complicated. The chief hope for a solution lies in the fact that every relevant consideration is being carefully weighed by experts.

Fortunately, members of the advisory committee on fiscal relations are conducting their study free from preconceived opinions. They have also evinced a commendable desire to obtain suggestions from any source. If they are to develop a comprehensive fiscal formula for the District that policy will be especially helpful because of the vast number of factors that should be considered.

Jesse Sutter, of the citizens joint committee on fiscal relations, effectively proved the weakness of any plan to measure the Government's responsibility to the District by the services rendered to Federal institutions. It must be remembered that the District also obtains valuable aid from Federal agencies. This interchange of service is only one aspect of an intricate problem.

One other important factor is the exemption of 41 per cent of Washington's property from taxation. The shrinkage of taxable area becomes more acute with the extension of Government buildings, parks and tax-exempt institutions of private ownership. At the same time a large number of the families who use District schools, streets, playgrounds, parks, etc., are making their homes in Maryland and Virginia, thus depriving the District of their taxes. As this process continues the Government will have to pay more and not less of the cost of supporting its Capital City.

It does not follow, of course, that the Government should pay taxes to the District on its property here. That would raise the very complicated issue of intergovernmental taxation without fully solving the local problem. The list of tax-exempt properties owned by private institutions might well be scrutinized, however, with the object of eliminating any unwarranted privileges.

Separation of capital improvements from maintenance and operation expenses in the budget has been suggested as one means of segregating Federal and local obligations. Attempts would be made, under this plan, to decide in the case of each improvement what part the Government should pay because of the high standards maintained in the Capital City. Aside from being a very complicated procedure that would probably break down under the pressure to which appropriation bills are applied in Congress, this plan seems to ignore some extraordinary maintenance and operation costs. For example, Congress insists upon admitting certain non-resident children to the local schools and maintaining a very elaborate park system here. Obviously, such expenses should not fall entirely upon District taxpayers.

All distinctly national expenses, such as the appropriation for the Federal Court of Appeals located here, should be completely eliminated from the local budget. It is to be hoped that the advisory council will be able to work out a formula to determine what share of the remaining expenses, properly attributed to development and maintenance of the Capital City, should be borne by the Nation as a whole. If that formula is to serve its purpose, however, it will have to be both definite and relatively simple. If it is so complicated that a permanent commission would be necessary to apply it each year, Congress may be tempted to sweep it aside as it has done the 60-40 ratio which is still the legal basis for division of the District's expenses.

On the other hand, it must be recognized that any formula is likely to become obsolete within a few years because of changing conditions. Instead of establishing a permanent commission to render a simple administrative function once a year, would it not be more practical to arrange for periodical re-examination of the formula, say once every five years? In any event, the chief task of the council will be to bring forth a plan that will be easily understood and readily applied as well as being scrupulously fair to both the Federal and local governments.

Mr. Morgenthau's Omissions.

In addressing the Good Neighbor League Secretary Morgenthau boldly attributed all the business gains of the past three and one-half years to the Administration's financial policies, specifically mentioning as contributory causes, devaluation of the dollar and relief spending. Then for good measure and as assurance that the people have nothing to fear for the future, he promised an early balancing of the budget and a rapid reduction in the debt with the aid of a revised tax system based upon the "democratic principle of ability to pay."

Similar statements have been made repeatedly by President Roosevelt during his campaign tours. In fact critics are still at work exposing the fallacies and misrepresentations that underlie such soothing assurances. They have presented abundant evidence showing that recovery in the United States has lagged behind that experienced in many other countries. They have revealed the budgetary tricks by which the Administration has sought to minimize the burden of rapidly growing deficits and debts. They have convincingly disproved claims that tax burdens have been readjusted with greater regard for ability to pay.

To all this array of evidence Secretary Morgenthau has replied with a dogmatic declaration of faith rather than a reasoned defense of the Government's fiscal policies. His belief in the soundness of the Government's credit and the safety of the dollar stems from the high prices ruling for Government securities and the increased participation of foreigners in American investment markets. Bankers, business men and investors, he says, "are proving their confidence in the only way in which confidence can really be proved: By laying down their money on the barrel head."

In jumping to this conclusion, Mr. Morgenthau leaves out of account quite a number of factors that cast grave doubt upon his optimistic theories. He does not so much as hint that the methods of financing huge governmental deficits have given an artificial ease to the money markets which renders them an unfair test of the Government's financial strength. There is not even a remote suggestion that the pressure of idle funds upon a limited number of investment outlets, resulting in low interest rates for certain classes of private obligations, may indicate a lack of confidence in the future. Certainly it is evidence of reluctance to embark upon new types of enterprise involving long-term capital commitments.

Finally Mr. Morgenthau's complacent assumption that foreigners send their money here because they believe in the dollar serenely ignores the fact that foreign money is in flight from countries agitated by fears of war and upset by internal conflicts. To many foreigners, indeed, the situation presents itself as a choice of evils, with the balance in favor of that country where the immediate outlook seems least disturbed.

It is impossible to judge the wisdom of a country's fiscal policies by the actions of investors who are confronted by conditions over which they have no control. And in any case, investment judgment is fallible; the tests of fiscal soundness are not supplied by what people think but by what the Government does.

Isolating The Germ Of War.

Popular music has been showing symptoms of going highbrow for some time. When Arthur Spalding's violin and Bob Burns' bazooka are heard on the same radio program, when Gershwin builds an opera on the tunes of Catfish Row, and when swing music is defined by highbrow critics as "improvised syncopated polyphony," there is reason to fear that jazz is taking on airs.

It is a matter of even greater concern when popular musicians take to political controversy. Aesop wrote a fable holding the trumpeter responsible for the battle. The world today is more materialistic. It is inclined to damn the munitions salesman and the international banker rather than the military band. Sir Basil Zaharoff has it all over Mr. Sousa as a sinister and mysterious international force. But Richard Himber, who directs the dance orchestra at the Hotel Ritz-Carlton in New York, has a less drab point of view. Co-operating with the National Council for Prevention of War, he asks fellow orchestra leaders to avoid martial music and thereby prevent future conflicts.

Senator Nye should ponder Mr. Himber's inclination to blame "savage rhythm" rather than cannon salesmen for world conflicts. It is easy to attach too much importance to commercial motives for human actions. Grocery stores are not solely responsible for the average citizen's habit of eating. But, on the other hand, neither is the orchestra in the Ritz-Carlton's dining room.

Music with dinner may encourage digestion, and music may hasten a column into battle. But in either case it is a luxury and not a necessity. On this agreement could be secured both from those Americans who eat supper in their kitchens and from those Spaniards who are dying in the barricades around Madrid.

Put And Take.

An Actress At Home

Jay Dancey had never seen the room before but she knew, even while the bell boy fumbled at the keyhole, exactly how it would look. She stood there in the dark hall behind the boy and deliberately projected herself across the sill. Her mind's eye noted and approved the familiar furniture, the slightly worn rugs, the curtain too tired and dirt-laden to flutter except with the strongest breezes. The wall paper would be a shade lighter than that which she was actually looking at in the dreary corridor. There! The key fitted at last. Now she was really entering Room 21 which the clerk assured her was "quiet but kinder expensive." He rolled the price around on his tongue—$3 a night, European plan.

"That's without meals, you know," he explained to her.

"I understand, thank you." She looked at him curiously. Whose son was he, grown up? Had she bought papers from him somewhere in the long ago? Picking up the silver fox slung carelessly on the counter, she followed the hotel's lone bell boy into the rickety elevator.

• • • •

Even with the silver and crystal dresser set spread out and her gay, crazy dresses on the bed, the place remained unimpressed with her presence. The ugly bed, proudly carrying the hotel's crest on its counterpane, was a stolid frame of respectability. A lumpy pillow lost all character in a case that was too big for it even as a child's figure does under blankets at night.

She moved a chair nearer the window and where it had stood were four deep indentations.

"Perhaps I'm the first person who ever lifted this chair," she thought, "I feel like a woman explorer in a changeless temple."

Standing by the window with her arms crossed, Jay Dancey surveyed the room slowly. Sensitive to setting, she felt that in a moment someone would give her a cue and she would hear herself speaking a line. Everything was typical. This was the sort of scenery the smoothies in New York designed for a country hotel. It always went over big with audiences. Not a man, nor a woman for that matter, who had not at some time or other spent a miserable night tossing on this bed, gazing at this wallpaper, wondering at the ineffectuality of that desk. Jay crossed over and flipped up the top of the ink well. Dry! Of course. The frayed blotter had been scribbled on while a former occupant talked on the telephone. Not an ink stain honored it. Every detail was quite perfect. It was a hotel room to conjure nostalgia in any First Nighter.

Jay Dancey knew what the town was saying about her staying at the hotel: ignoring Mrs. Neale's invitation to spend the night with her; missing the chance to stay once more under the kindly roof that had sheltered her childhood. Why was everybody so anxious to push her back into the past? Did they expect her to look under the holly tree in the side yard and find little Jay Dancey there, sticking out her fingers to touch the prickles? Were they hoping that her presence back in the homeplace would summon up the forbidding ghost of Mr. Dancey so they could again listen delightedly to his tirades against her playacting in sleazy cheesecloth? Or was it simply their desire to see a familiar character in a familiar part?

Jay Dancey, the actress, studied her reflection in the egg-shaped glass. Over her shoulder the gray paper on the opposite wall formed a nondescript background. How did it happen to have been selected? Did a contractor simply go in a store and ask the clerk for hotel wallpaper that looked like hotel wallpaper? Were there special shops which carried nothing but the ghastly neutral-colored stuff? Did furniture dealers specialize in aggressive looking beds and patient desks for the exclusive trade of hostelers?

Jay Dancey, at 17, had been awed by the book pushed toward her for registration. She had wanted to sign another name, fearful that her father would pursue her through all the hotel registers in the world until he found her. But "Jay Dancey" was pretty and even sounded like a stage name. Since that time, a thousand hotel registers had held her flourishing signature. Maybe one day when she grew old and audiences no longer clamored for her, she would go on a pilgrimage and revisit all the temporary homes that had housed her for a night or a week. Some, she knew, had burned down or simply gone to seed. Others had given way to more sumptuous buildings. But the majority were probably still standing while men and women from every part of the earth trekked in and out them, strangers to each other, indifferent.

Jay Dancey, at 35, was grateful for the passivity, the unobtrusiveness of Room 21. Nothing in it demanded her attention, or was sullen because she refused it. She could leave tomorrow without a wrench, attached to nothing in it, looking back at it with complete detachment as her bags were carried out. Next year if she chose to drop in again she would not feel guilty at having forgotten its possessions. The furniture had no period and no personality—it was stage furniture set to give the appearance of a home.

• • • •

It was almost time for the performance but the leading lady had not stirred for the past hour. The auditorium was only across the street and she could lie still for another 15 minutes. Everybody would be there to see her, of course. She had long since stopped playing hick towns, but the humor of appearing once more on Carterville's dusty stage appealed to her.

Mrs. Neale would be there. Mrs. Neale had bought the old Dancey place and no one but she knew how great was her disappointment at finding it unhabitated by the interesting spirits of the Danceys. It had been the most exciting place in town with Jay and her father at sword's points all the time. But Mrs. Neale had not been there a week before it looked as respectable as she had been afraid it would.

Now Jay Dancey lay on a hotel bed—darling of the American stage—and saw how lovingly the shadows touched the room. The desk might have been a Sheraton; the two chairs huddled together as friendly as a Hepplewhite and Chippendale. The dresser was a dark blur except when the light from a passing automobile set its mirror afire. Surely this was the same pillow which had held her head in Chicago, in San Francisco, in Paris, in London.

Ridiculous for Mrs. Neale to invite her to spend the night in her old home. Why, she was at home . . .

FOOTBALL, the great fall sport in the United States, is beginning to catch on in Mexico. Backed by a fund contributed by American oil companies, the National University has been the guest of, and host to, many colleges and universities. As a general rule, the players are rather small, but fast, and aggressive. Slowly but surely, devotees of the American sport are being won over from rugby, a game that draws Saturday and Sunday crowds of 7,000 to 10,000. In another five years, Mexican promoters may be able to lure American professionals down for a series of games. Just now form, color and good teamwork are lacking here and that hurts the sport.

• • • •

A great deal of credit for Mexican interest in football should go to Jose and Cristobal Martinez-Zorrilla. It is only a few years since these young men were burning up Eastern gridirons as end and tackle for one of Gil Dobie's most successful Cornell teams. Today they are in business with a third brother. Cristobal keeps his hand in at football by coaching the American High School team, officiating at games, and by doing all he can to further the sport. On the side, he has taken to raising young bulls for fighting purposes. Some of his old classmates ought to get a kick out of that!

Some day the full history of the Monte Alban jewels will be written. As some Americans may know, there has been a great deal of discussion as to whether the jewels are pre-Cortesian or whether they came into being after the Conquest. According to one expert, three things can be charged against their pre-Cortesian origin. First, there are rings in the collection; rings are a post-Conquest development in Mexico. Second, one of the breastplates is welded together. So far as is known, no native tribe ever was able to generate heat sufficient for a welding process. Third, it is admitted that some iron is mixed in with the pure gold of the ornaments. Again, it takes great heat to melt iron and it does not seem that the Indians could do it. The expert in question believes the collection is authentically Indian, but believes also in their post-Conquest origin.

MEXICAN MOMENTS—A recent visitor to Mexico was Prof. Arthur Whitaker, who was accompanied by his wife . . . Formerly a teacher at Cornell, the professor will give the first courses in Hispanic American history ever offered at the Univeristy of Pennsylvania . . . He is fully capable of directing such work, having resided in Spain for several years, contributed to historical journals, etc. . . . A corn shortage is threatened here . . . A disastrous thing in a country which depends on corn for so many things . . . A shakeup in the Department of Education resulted in the resignation of the sub-secretary and another prominent official . . . The big silver peso is back again, shinier but not as heavy as of yore . . . If Franco wins, Mexico may have cause to regret aid to the Spanish government . . . What if the general should ban the importation of chickpeas, a big source of revenue for Mexican growers? . . . To say nothing of further restrictions on bull-fighters!

'Round Robin' Hood's Barn

NICE place. Lots of oyster bars in Washington, aren't there? I like them. If they happen to be combination oyster bars and grills, like this one, I like them even more. They delight the eyes, ears and nostrils; men busy at the bars, steaks sizzling in the kitchens, odors wafted in the breeze. Touch and taste come later.

Curious thing about the oyster opener. He uses much the same tool that his great-great-granddaddy did before him. In that respect he's much the same as a loon. Ever see a loon shuck an oyster? Quite interesting. There's a bird that can stay under water longer than any other bird I know; can swim a long distance under water; travels a whole lot on the bottom of the stream. It has to go to the bottom to catch its oyster. I don't pretend to know it positively, but it may well be that it was the loon that taught the oyster to keep its mouth shut. Try to interview an oyster and it shuts up like a clam. But it has to open up to eat and it is then the loon inserts its bill, grabs the part of the oyster the oyster knife has to cut, rises to the surface, shakes its head and shucks that oyster as neatly as anything you want to see.

What would happen if the oyster happened to be stronger than the loon? Ask a duck. A duck is some oyster shucker, too, but shucking is not a steady habit with the duck, for the job is a dangerous one. Once in a while the oyster shuts tight on the duck's bill, the duck rises and tries to beat it off, fails, falls into the water again, and is eventually drowned. I saw that once. What happened afterward, I don't know. The duck went down with the oyster and I hadn't marked the spot.

• • • •

SIMPLE little tool the oyster opener uses, isn't it? The oyster is one of the most unprogressive things imaginable and it seems to insist upon being treated in a decently unprogressive manner. You can't throw a bushel of oysters in their shells into a hopper and have them come out at the other end of the machine as stews, fries or cocktails. I'm not saying that some day it won't be done, but all the chances are that by the time perfection is in sight either all the oysters will have died or desire for them will have passed.

Isn't that what always happens? The world, for instance, began to know sweetness as well as light when the first candle was invented, a crude affair, the tallow dip. Then some bright man invented a mold for candles and another began to make them of wax; but long before the perfect candle was manufactured the paraffin oil lamp arrived, and that began to move on toward perfection, getting better and better; and then came gas, which by and by began to reach perfection with mantles—and then electricity! First the arc light, then the incandescent lamp, and what will come next I can't tell you. Perhaps a giant lightning bug—light without heat. And that's only one thing. You can't speak of a buggy nowadays without getting a horse laugh. And look at what the radio did to the phonograph business! Always something new bobbing up before perfection has been reached in the thing it displaces.

Not, of course, that perfection would ever really be reached, however much one concentrated. On the contrary, what happens is that man eventually makes a rut for a thing to run in, and there it sticks.

• • • •

TAKE a typewriter. It has known ever so many improvements, will doubtless will know many more; but there is one thing I can promise you will know no change—the keyboard. And right here you may disabuse your mind of the idea that the best always survives. Mind you, I'm not saying that the arrangement of letters on a typewriter keyboard is not the best possible. What I'm saying is that even if it is not the best possible, it will not be changed.

Shortly after typewriters had come into general use there was manufactured one that had a different keyboard, one that was said to be much more scientific and lent itself to much more rapid manipulation when once it was mastered. But because Christopher Morley's chickens had by this time learned to pick corn on a "standard" keyboard, the new and allegedly better keyboard was promptly thrown into the discard, and the manufacturers of the new typewriter turned to the old and standard keyboard. Do you happen to remember the old Caligraph?

Tools or philosophies, it is all one; luck, in their perfecting, is as potent as logic. Men assume a thing to be so, even if it isn't so, in order to make it so, or approximately so; as when the framers of the Declaration of Independence spoke of our inalienable rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness; and with that courageous, though faulty, premise built the nearest approach to liberty the world has ever known. And how much plain bull luck was there in the framing of the Constitution, which now bulwarks us against infringement of that liberty! The world as it is today was then undreamed of.

Oh, well, as I was about to remark, the only perfect tools in the world today are the oyster knife and the skewer. They alone defy improvement. They are and will continue to be as the oyster and the beef desire. They continue strong and unchangeable, while man is only consistent in his inconsistencies.

Eh? Oh! Let me see - - - er - - - You may bring me, please, a combination ham and cheese sandwich and a glass of beer.

Modern Industrialism Has Not Yet Smudged Over Life Nor Distorted It, Writes Correspondent From State.

By Theodore Hall.
Special Correspondent of The Post.

Columbus, Ohio.

PERCHED on the forward right-hand seat of the bus from Pittsburgh to Columbus was a youngish lady of a faintly pretty persuasion. Apparently she was around 28, an age when the female of sound and retired upbringing, if still single, will edge forward with a half-desperate pleasantry in addressing the handsome male. And the driver, his cap jaunty, his grin at one with the world, his wave of the hand to all approaching truck-drivers marked by complete geniality, was indeed handsome.

She had boarded the bus soon after the crossing of the Ohio, and within a mile the two had fallen into conversation with an ease to astonish anyone bred east of the Alleghanies. If it was conducted in a style to gall the nerves of the willy-nilly listener, there seemed nothing other than natural to them in shouting, above the rattle and roar of the bus, each separate small remark once over again in answer to the other's invariable, high-pitched "what?" This repetitiousness was all smiles, anyway. They enjoyed it. They were human beings without stiffness and without pose.

It came out that she was from a very small town and on her way to Chicago; that she had read a great deal about gangsters and shooting forays and bystanders lying wounded in the street, and that she was scared stiff of cities. "I've got to stop over tonight in Columbus—I've never been there—will it be anything like that?"

"What?" bellowed the driver. She repeated herself, more loudly.

"Lady," he shouted, "you're coming to a real civilized place! It's a white man's town, the best I ever saw!"

* * * *

NOW to examine Columbus with an eye out for that civilization is to be struck with an anterior and central fact. Columbus is but the true revelatory city, and capital likewise for perhaps no better reason, of the most essentially American State in the Union.

Let doubters run the other States off on their fingers. All the rest are distinctively something else before they are genus Americanus. They possess an off-flavor first, an aura of peculiar locale and separate tradition. They are metropolitan or industrial, Yankee, Southern, South Western, Far Western. Not even is Ohio typically Middle Western; far better do Indiana or Iowa provide that essence. No, the median America, the center of gravity, the distillate of that original type of life we have built up on this continent, this is held by Ohio alone. It has no other tradition.

The beginning of understanding comes soon after the bus crosses the Ohio River. Left behind are Pittsburgh, that incredibly dis-spiriting chancre of industrialism; the sorry Western Pennsylvania hills, scraggy and soiled; the great drab river itself, its banks scarred and clotted with massive steel plants and human poverty. No one in his senses, save an engineer or a stockholder, could feel amiable toward such a blight upon the earth as Weirton.

But on the Ohio side, when the highway signs take on the escutcheon shape of the State, the good concrete climbs quickly away from all that onto a low plateau of rolling woods and rich farm land, of small, clean farms, and of small, clean, comfortable, unadulterated towns. Cleanliness and stability—it is rare to come upon these qualities again in our time. New England once possessed them; some of New England still does, praise be! But from the remainder—its streams rank with dyes and acids, its village greens drying up to the mutter of Lithuanian—the American wind has gone West to blow upon these Ohio lands. It is still here for all to feel.

Suddenly entering a little town strung along the highway, you perceive that even the poor are self-respecting, at home here. But there are not many poor, and there are no rich; this is the stronghold of the American lower middle class, the blood which makes and marks this country.

* * * *

"HOW are ya, boy!" calls the driver as he swings the bus to the curb. "Say, Dave," replies the young man who puts his head in the opened door. "My aunt's going up to Zanesville. Let her off at Haynes' Drug Store, will ya?" And into the bus steps the veritable American aunt—cold and wary eye, sour mouth, prim back, dressed all in black in this summer heat, and carrying a genuine reticule. She is not used to this new-fangled travel; firm in the seat, looking neither to right nor left, she holds herself as if ready for the worst. Her nephew and the driver exchange winks.

Bubbling with talk, chuckling toward any lifted face, in climbs a woman all rolls of fat and expanse of cheap flowered dress and broad, good-humored red face. "My stars, boy!" she addresses the driver. "Can't you give me a cake of ice to sit on?" She hoots through the window to the chap in shirt sleeves who has put her handbag and voluminous parcel aboard, and who has returned to the store front: "Here, son, get yourself a couple of beers! Come on, now, they'll do you good! I wish I had one myself!" He is really reluctant, coming forward. She hands him a tip which would please a Savoy-Plaza bellhop. Then she takes in the passengers with a slow revolution and grin, and settles herself comfortably down—the Wife of Bath transmigrated to Ohio.

Certainly it would be naive to assert that there is no hardship and misery and economic callousness in the State. We all know of the Ohio miners, the onion pickers in Hardin County, and the factory workers in Toledo. The millenium would surprise no one more than a Buckeye man.

Beautiful Ohio.

But I conceive it as highly probable that the complexity and turmoil of modern industrial life is best leavened here in these small towns at the heart of Ohio. To be sure there are factories, but they are small, comparatively well-mannered and acclimated; you see their brick walls behind a row of poplars; they can be lived with. Farming holds to the older, more stable pattern; there is no specialization of crops; the farmer's wife can serve an old-fashioned Thanksgiving Day dinner directly off the place. And you can hardly tell where farm leaves off and town begins. In front of the M. E. Church there are still placards: "Chicken and dumpling supper Saturday night, 25 cents." The hotel signs—tell-tale mark of the true small town—hold out bold the word "Hotel," and put the particular name of the hostelry in much smaller letters or omit it altogether.

* * * *

EVEN at the center of town will be a small field with a white horse. Moppets are playing with him; moppets are running alongside the bus; they have fine heads, fine faces. Here before you—and you rub your eyes—is the "Boyville" of William Allen White; here might be the precincts of "Penrod;" here are Judge Shutes' incomparable kids 60 years after they flourished in Rockingham County, New Hampshire. In the back of your mind, with no gladness, you remember what an undigested industrialism has done to other children in America.

And the true small town has an important sub-species. Until you re-visit Ohio you will have forgot the existence of the college town, pure and simple.

From these little lighthouses of education have come very many of the men and women who edit our national newspapers and write our magazines and teach in our great and honored universities. And you in the East have never so much as heard of one in 20 of these colleges.

Quiet and unchanged, with a tradition of conservatism which defies both the promoters in Wall Street and the best social planners, the small-town genus Americanus still survives in Ohio. It is not even ready for the museum.

Among The Magazines

"We can remember the time when a sportsman made no bones about killing game," writes Robert Page Lincoln in the current Nature Magazine. "He killed it by the wagon full, and had pictures taken of himself completely surrounded by slaughtered game or leering out from behind a number of suspended deer, with others of his comrades aiming their guns at the dead game, once in a while one of the members of the group was shown with his knife thrust in the throat of a deer for variety.

"So it was that when I innocently stated that the sportsman was interested in killing game, not in preserving it, I received many letters in opposition. In some of these letters it was pointed out that this or that group during the past inclement weather, had actually gone out and had fed some pheasants; and one man got stalled in a snowdrift with a toboggan full of corn that he had intended for the pheasant, but almost froze to death, so the corn was taken back home. Every winter in various snowbound and ice-clad sections of the country we are treated to news stories of sportsmen braving the Arctic blasts to feed the poor game birds, and lawyers, doctors and merchants are shown patriotically lifting out sacks of grain in the interest of harassed birddom.

"The fact of the matter is that the average sportsman can do little with regard to feeding the game. If he makes an attempt to do so it is largely a pretense, to build up an impression that has nothing of concrete value to sustain it. The sportsmen in the large cities and in the small towns and villages comprise by far the greater number of the sportsmen. Any game feeding they do is necessarily accomplished around the borders of the cities, towns and villages, all of which, while possibly contributing in a fair degree to the safety of some of the game, is but a scratching of the surface. More than 95 per cent of the game lies well beyond the reach of the city, town and village sportsmen. Yet the pretense is fostered that the sportsmen are doing wonders in game feeding."

Negroes Kept Out

Civil Service Rules Not Being Observed, Is Claim.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Gov. Landon, in an interview with Mr. Robert R. Church, an astute Negro politician, has expressed himself as being in favor of giving the Negro a square deal under the civil service.

The civil service law requires that there be no discrimination on account of race, sex or creed. The letter of the law was strictly observed in the early years of its operation. Grover Cleveland made the strict enforcement of the civil service law as part of the credo of his Administration. When Theodore Roosevelt became civil service commissioner, he insisted with all the dramatic emphasis of which he was capable that there should be no discrimination on account of race or color, but that all applicants should have a square deal.

In those days colored men and women, in large numbers, from all parts of the country, recruited civil service ranks. Race discrimination crept in the civil service under the Administration of President Taft. From that time until now, it has been increasingly difficult for a colored applicant to receive an appointment in the classified department of the Government, except in the Postoffice, where the service is of the mixed-manual and clerical nature.

It is now as difficult for a colored persons to receive a civil service appointment in certain departments as it is for a camel to go through the eye of a needle or for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. As a result, the Negro has become practically eliminated from the clerical service. Former appointees of color who resign, die or who are removed, are not replaced, consequently there will shortly not be left a single Negro of clerical rank in the several departments of the Government.

There is no complaint that the civil service commissioners are unfair in grading papers or in certifying the successful applicants, but the process is blocked when it reaches the appointing officers, who are vested with certain discretion. In many of the departments there has not been a Negro appointee in 20 years. Members of the race have been so intimidated that they no longer seek to enter an examination, knowing that they would be cheated out of the reward which they have won by merit. A sea with intake, but without outlet will soon run dry.

The control of the civil service machinery is placed by the Constitution in the hands of the President. If he desires to abolish race discrimination, he has the full power and authority to do so. Although many Negroes have passed competitive examinations, with the highest ratings, they have been turned down by the appointing officers on one pretext or another.

If Gov. Landon will guarantee that if he is elected President the colored applicants shall have a fair chance, both before the civil service commissioners and before the appointing officers, and will have the regulation changed requiring the applicants to be selected from the certified list in the order of standing, then we will be convinced that his civil service pronouncements have not merely been for campaign purposes, which are always taken cum grano salis.

"Too Damn Dumb."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The people re-elected Woodrow Wilson because "he kept us out of war." The same idiotic cry has been seriously heralded both in the press and out about Franklin Roosevelt, giving it as a reason for wanting him re-elected.

This is one proof that Harry Hopkins spoke the truth a few months ago when he said "The people are too damn dumb to understand;" and that Henry L. Mencken also spoke the truth in the American Mercury a few days ago in saying, "On the side of Roosevelt stands the massive fact that it is hard to overestimate the imbecility of the great mass of the plain people."

Budget Prospects.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Of all the political speeches the writer has heard in a very long life he never listened to a more rabble-rousing, demagogic one than that of Mr. Roosevelt at Boston, or one with more reckless and irresponsible statements. For example, he assured his auditors that the budget would be balanced within a year—something beyond the power of Omnipotence itself. It will never be balanced under him, but will get progressively more out of balance until the country becomes bankrupt, and the slate is wiped clean, and the American people begin the slow and painful job of rescuing the country from the wreck he and his communistic associates have made of it.

ANTI-NEW DEAL.
Washington.

With Other Editors

"A Roar Of 'Noes' Rose."

In his Atlantic Monthly article, which has attracted wide attention, President Hopkins, of Dartmouth, expressed his deep concern over those policies of the New Deal which he felt were undermining the qualities of self-reliance and individualism that have made this country strong. "The misfortunes of the present day may easily become catastrophies," he wrote, "if the process is continued of dissipating our inheritances of courage, initiative, fortitude and aspiration." An incident occurred at Wichita on Tuesday that gives especial point to Dr. Hopkin's words.

President Roosevelt was speaking there to a great crowd and near the close of his speech he asked this question: "Is there among the many farmers in this audience a single one who would want to go back to the uncooperative formula—the rugged individualism, the economic freedom of 1932?" According to the trustworthy Associated Press, "a concerted roar of 'Noes' rose" in answer. This can only mean that the farmers whom the President was addressing said that they preferred to have their problems solved for them by Washington than to work out their own solutions. If some measure of economic security is guaranteed them by the Federal Government, what care they for that individualism which was once their proud boast? If the Government will pay them for crops not grown, if it will continue such payments under some other guise, what if they are regimented and ordered about? What does economic freedom amount to if only they are taken care of in some fashion? What if Jefferson did say, "Were we told by Washington when to sow and when to reap we would soon want bread?" Should they not reply, "Let them eat cake?"

It is not cooperation but paternalism they have been getting from this Administration, and they seem to like it. From the cloistered precincts of Dartmouth Dr. Hopkins may say that "all the forces of democracy dedicated from the foundation of the Republic to hardening the self-reliance and personal responsibility of every citizen" are now being utilized to belittle and undermine these very qualities, but that does not register with them. Their forbears may have treked across the country and suffered all manner of privations to take up homesteads on the prairies and fight their way to success, but none of that for them. There is an easier way today even if it does involve the sacrifice of qualities once held so high as to be beyond price.

"The foundations of American society," Dr. Hopkins writes, "were laid by men who endured economic want and physical hardships that they might gain access to opportunities few in number and inconsiderable in importance as compared with those which today lie close at hand for all of us. There was no thought in their minds that the conditions of life ought to be anything but a challenge or that the rewards of life could be possessed except through valiant effort. They accepted the conditions and went their individual ways without dismay and without complaint, with definiteness of purpose and with high aspirations. Thus, from recognition of the fact that life must be a struggle for men to profit most from it, arose a great people."

Can we believe that there is not a much sounder philosophy in this than in the philosophy that Mr. Roosevelt preaches, which has found a ready acceptance not in the agricultural West alone but elsewhere? "Though the people support the Government, the Government should not support the people," was the principle laid down by Grover Cleveland when he vetoed the Texas seed bill.

All was not rosy with the Western and Southern farmers back in Cleveland's time. They had droughts and plagues of grasshoppers and all the vicissitudes that attend farming operations, but somehow they managed to come through. Ever since the collapse of agricultural prices following the World War the farmers of the Prairie States and the cotton planters of the South have been treated with special solicitude by the Federal Government. No one would say that there has not been great occasion to come to their relief. But the situation has now become such that both the New Dealers and the Republicans are vying with each other to see which can do the most for them, until today they are in a mood to answer as they did the question President Roosevelt asked them at Wichita. Is it not time to inquire with Dr. Hopkins if there is not a catastrophe awaiting the American people if governmental policies are continued that dissipate "our inheritances of courage, initiative, fortitude and aspiration?" (Hartford Courant.)

Excerpts From Our Letters

Education Under Roosevelt.

When Mr. Roosevelt took office about 200,000 teachers were unemployed, 2,000 rural schools had not opened, and 700 had run less than three months. School construction had dropped from a peak of $433,000,000 in 1925, down to $211,000,000 in 1932. Since Mr. Roosevelt took office in 1933 PWA has assisted in the construction or making of major improvements to 2,813 public schools situated in 48 States. Through the National Youth Administration of the WPA 166,000 high school students and 123,000 college and post-graduate students have been helped to continue their education. These 123,000 college students are distributed among the 1,602 of the 1,649 institutions of higher learning in the Uuited States. This is what the Roosevelt administration is doing for the youth of this country, not to mention the 25,000 that have learned to read and write in the CCC camps. — Benjamin R. Stickney Jr. Washington.

Single Tax Argument.

There is no legitimate excuse for unemployment and low wages. Our schools, colleges, and our lawmakers are to blame for ignoring the science of political economy which was established by Adam Smith, John Stuart Mill and Henry George. It has been permitted to become a dead science, experiments in socialism and technocracy taking its place. All that we really need is a rational system of taxation. — Henry Ware Allen, Wichita, Kans.

A Catholic's Request.

The writer of these lines is a Catholic, but he has been hard put to it to explain the Spanish situation in a favorable light to the Church, especially to his non-Catholic interested friends. He is, in other words, bewildered, and believes his bewilderment is shared by millions of his fellow-Catholics, in America and elsewhere. We know only good of the Church—why should anyone wish to harm her? Won't some one well qualified and connected with a Catholic educational institution prepare a Catholic apology for the Spanish situation and publish this apology in the secular press? Let it not shy at unpleasant truth, but go into the matter of Church ownership of Spanish utilities, mines, etc.; the treatment of the employes of these operations; the extent to which Church property was tax exempt; the use made of revenue from Church holdings, etc. Also, let there be an analysis of the reason for the Riffian campaign, which resulted in the slaughter of the flower of Spain under a burning tropical sun; of the rise and fall of the dictatorship and the abdication or flight of Alfonso.—Charles E. Cross, Washington.

Running The Country?

Instead of criticising the President the candidates who think they are running for President should offer a proposition that would at least help to end the unemployment in this country. It is said that this country is working under a dictatorship composed of nine old ladies in dark kimonos—six Republicans and three former corporation lawyers. You can't beat that combination; they have Congress and the President skinned a mile.—S. Magruder Simpson, Washington.

Popular Front Prediction.

If the Republican leaders are telling the truth about the Democrats, and the Democratic leaders are telling the truth about the Republicans, both are disreputable, unprincipled, and unfit for public trust. Therefore, we can look for no just representation from the ranks of either. It appears to be just a matter of endurance for the masses until they reach the breaking point, which means a Popular Front American Party, or a dictator.—A. W. Carter, Charlottesville, Va.

Campaign Propaganda.

In one of your recent editorials you draw the strong inference that only Democrats are sending out campaign literature at postage expense of the taxpayer. I have in my possession a piece of campaign literature, a radio address, sent by one of the most influential and respected Republican members of the Senate. How many others received the same literature and in the same manner I am not in position to say. Knowing politics as I do, I am in no way surprised. I am surprised, however, at the inference that only Farley and his group are capable of such tactics. This is no time for the kettle to call the pot black.—C. B. R., Washington.

Praise For Sen. Byrd

Is No Rubber-Stamp Statesman, Says Writer.

To the editor of The Post—Sir: We applaud the customary frankness and vigorous indorsement of President Roosevelt by Senator Harry Flood Byrd, who, in the straight way of Jeffersonian principles and statesmanship, gave a stout argument favoring beneficial Administration accomplishments, at the same time observing that greater spending would result should Gov. Landon be elected. If dissenting Democrats hoped for an alibi for their conduct they were bitterly disappointed; Republicans likewise realized that the Senator's broadcast was no political lullaby.

Any appraisal of governmental functioning by Senator Byrd has the weight of expert knowledge based on the Senator's accomplishment in the field of constructive economics and sociology. Briefly stated, he knows something concerning the principles of Thomas Jefferson and our basic institutions. Consider, how he has given Virginia a leading place in the sisterhood of States.

As Governor he had Virginia's ancient constitution completely made over, reduced the number of departments in the State government from 100 to 12, resulting in an annual saving of $800,000 plus greater efficiency. He revised the tax system so that farmers now have lower taxes in Virginia than in almost any State. Highway construction mileage was increased 45 per cent. When he took office as Governor, Virginia had a deficit of $1,368,000, which four years later was changed to a cash surplus of $4,256,000. Gov. Byrd gave Virginia a new deal. His record reveals him a true constructionist, qualified to make political indorsements.

No rubber-stamp statesman, Byrd has differed with the President but his criticism was constructive; he co-operated; he is a builder, not a destructionist. When the Senator flung in the faces of the Administration's opponents the picture of the leaderless, incompetent, wasteful Hoover administration he took a lot of the swagger out of the wandering stride of dissenting Democratic leaders. Compare the example of Harry Flood Byrd with that of Alfred E. Smith. The former is a statesman, the latter just a politician. Mr. Smith might disclaim a grudge against the President, but he must admit he lacks today an ability to co-operate under any leadership other than his own. His attempt to tear down the Democratic party fits in with his threadbare story of frustration.

Senator Byrd believes that if initiating beneficial proposals and securing their adoption constitutes leadership, President Roosevelt is a leader. If saving the country from one impending disaster after another provides any basis for gratitude, President Roosevelt is entitled to gratitude. In short, he expressed the conviction that the public welfare requires the re-election of Roosevelt. One may conclude that any voter who determines solely to register blind resentment against the Administration without deference for New Deal accomplishment must enter the polling booth with a secret sense of shame.

The Relief Problem.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The speech of Hon. J. W. Davis, of New York, recently reported in the papers, is a strong presentation of the anti-New Deal position. Mr. Davis, always sincere and unemotional, has said the best that can be said for his contingent. The pathos of the situation is that he says nothing new, but reiterates the already tiresome cry of "waste of public money."

He quotes Mr. Cleveland, but overlooks Mr. Cleveland's remark: "We face a condition, not a theory." If those who talk loftily of business absorbing the unemployed, would, as in case of Mr. Davis and his ilk, be asked to use their influence with big business to absorb several millions of the unemployed, this would put their theories into practice. We know what embarrassment it would occasion. Thus, while anti-New Dealers talk in generalities about how big business will absorb the unemployed, Mr. Roosevelt and his aid, Mr. Hopkins, are facing the condition, not only the theory. And if the millions thus given work should feel like voting for the present incumbent of the White House, is there anything remarkable in that?

Physicians give stimulants to tide over crises when their patients hang between life and death. But physicians do not seek to make their patients "dope fiends," notwithstanding some men, having become accustomed to narcotics, do become chronic addicts to the same. Our Government is not so insane as to wish to make any of its subjects chronic reliefers. Yet some may become so, just as the pension system and the bonus system have been abused. Shall the worthy who need to be tided over an industrial crisis be shut off from temporary aid because some (probably few in comparison) abuse this generosity on the part of the Government?

Church Heads Cool To Father Coughlin

Detroit Radio Priest Found In Disagreement With Catholic Hierarchy Generally On Deportment and Philosophy.

The Post presents the third of three articles on the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin written from a Roman Catholic viewpoint. The author is a former research fellow of the Catholic University of America and professor of sociology at St. Thomas College, St. Paul, Minn. He is now national correspondent of the Catholic Daily Tribune of Dubuque, Iowa.

By Clarence J. Enzler, Ph. D.

THERE is no problem more disturbing to the Catholic conscience in America today than this, "Must I yield to Father Coughlin the same submission that I give to my pastor?" Very few reply in the affirmative, and yet there are many sincere people who believe that Father Coughlin is the authorized spokesman of the Catholic Church. Non-Catholics in large numbers blindly accept Father Coughlin as the official interpreter of papal encyclicals.

No less an authority than the Right Rev. John A. Ryan, S. T. D., of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, stated a few years ago that Father Coughlin "was on the side of the angels." Dr. Ryan later explained that he meant to approve both the goal of social justice of Father Coughlin and his energy in arousing the people to an active interest in economic problems. Yet, on October 8, 1936, Mgr. Ryan, in speaking to a national audience stated, "I say deliberately to the laboring men and women of America that Father Coughlin's explanation of our economic maladies is at least 50 per cent wrong and that his monetary remedies are at least 90 per cent wrong."

In economics certain principles have been authoritatively inculcated by Pope Leo XIII and Pope Pius XI. Certainly in them Father Coughlin finds support for some of his 16 principles. These principles are:

Crucifixion Tower.

1. Liberty of conscience and education.
2. Just, living, annual wage.
3. Nationalization of important resources.
4. Private ownership of all other property.
5. Abolition of Federal Reserve banking system and establishment of a Government-owned central bank.
6. Control of private property for public good.
7. Restoration to Congress of its sole right to coin and regulate the value of money.
8. Maintain cost of living on an even keel.
9. Cost of production plus a fair profit for the farmer.
10. Labor's right to organize.
11. Recall of non-productive bonds.
12. Abolition of tax-exempt bonds.
13. Broadened base of taxation on basis of ownership and capacity to pay.
14. Simplification of government and lower taxes.
15. Conscription of wealth as well as men in event of war.
16. Sanctity of human rights preferred to sanctity of property; with Government's chief concern for the poor.

However, only six are specifically enunciated in papal encyclicals—2, 2, 4, 6, 10 and 16.

* * * *

THE heart of Father Coughlin's monetary reform emphasizes abolition of the Federal Reserve and establishment of a Government-owned central bank; restoration to Congress of the sole right to coin and regulate the value of money; recall of non-productive bonds; abolition of tax-exempt bonds; broadened base of taxation on the basis of ownership and capacity to pay; conscription of wealth as well as men in the event of war. No matter how desirable some of these objectives may prove to be, they are not supported by papal authorty.

In a recent radio address, Mgr. Ryan stated:

"Father Coughlin misuses the encyclical (that is, in speaking of credit) by implying that the Pope is speaking absolutely instead of conditionally . . . the Pope is talking of a condition that sometimes obtains. He does not assert that it obtains always and everywhere and that it exists in the United States."

In April, 1932, Cardinal O'Connell expressed in vigorous terms an attitude of mind applied to Father Coughlin, "We do not like to hear almost hysterical addresses from ecclesiastics. They have a way of attracting attention they do not deserve. The fact is they are not entirely just. We Catholics know the normal way the Faith is propagated and its principles enunciated. When it is a question of universal truth, the head of the church, the Holy Father, speaks."

The excesses to which Father Coughlin has given expression during the past summer, particularly in his abuse of the President of the United States, have brought a vehement reaction against him from most Catholic editors. This thought, too, has been expressed in America: "Wherever be his mind or heart, the language that he uses is the language of the hustings; it is not the language of purely ethical indignation." The editor of Commonweal represents the viewpoint of a layman when he states, "It is not likely that Monsignor Ryan's radio addresses in this controversy will cause many of Father Coughlin's emotion-intoxicated Catholic followers to use their reason, and thus to subject Father Coughlin's oratory to the logical analysis which so clearly reveals its fatal contradictions . . . Father Coughlin's methods lead only toward discord or disaster."

The Brooklyn Tablet states: "Intelligent Catholics will await the decision of Rome before passing judgment on the Detroit priest."

In the Intermountain Catholic, Father Robert Dwyer, in speaking of the arguments concerning Father Coughlin, writes, "However much we may regret this dissension, our conviction remains that the source of unpleasantness is precisely the political activities of the Detroit priest . . . The American priest does not belong in party politics."

* * * *

THE Catholic Church is no novice in dealing with Father Coughlins. It is not quick to condemn and it never condemns one unseen or unheard. That may or may not explain the attention given Father Coughlin by church authorities in Rome. At the present time there are churchmen who think that Father Coughlin, while tearing down what his own hands have wrought, has great possibilities for good. Unquestionably the Catholic Church will attempt to turn back the calendar on Father Coughlin to direct his energies into the channels he followed in 1930.

Pope Pius XI, in "Quadragesimo Anno," with which Father Coughlin professes familiarity, writes "Let them not urge their own ideas with undue persistence, but be ready to abandon them, however admirable, should the greater common good seem to require it."

Cardinal Pacelli, in his radio broadcast at the Catholic University of America, October 22, gave an impassioned appeal for devotion to truth. Church authorities know that Father Coughlin's fact-finding activities do not keep pace with his public pronouncements. Either the church must supply him with research assistants who can be trusted and who are comparatively impartial, or his activities must be restrained. It is apparent that no official action will be taken until after the November election. At the present moment, certain members of the American hierarchy are advocating a Plenary Council for America. The last Plenary Council was held in 1837. In article 83 of this council, priests are expressly commanded to "abstain from public discussion of political or secular matters either in or outside of a church." The bishops of Canada have passed a drastic regulation depriving priests who engage in politics of their benefices. Will the bishops of this country do likewise?

While Father Coughlin personally may continue as a priest to appear upon the American scene, it is the writer's firm conviction that for the last time a Catholic priest has appeared as an active figure in political life, and that the mental turmoil occasioned by Father Coughlin's inconsistencies and peculiar activities will be solved once and for all within the next few months. Whether the good achieved by the radio priest offsets the scandal he has given will be the subject for years to come. Even his foes must yield to him respect for untiring energy, for stimulating interest in political issues, and for translating abstruse economic doctrines into intelligible phrases.

Autumn on the Shenandoah.

By Emma Frances Lee Smith.

I know that I shall never see
Fair Carcassonne,
Nor that dim isle of mystery,
Sweet Avalon.

I'll never tread the magic road
To Mandalay,
Nor dwell in some gay-tiled abode
In bright Cathay.

But where the Shenandoah drifts,
In silver drest,
See how the Massanutten lifts
Its red-gold crest!

And in yon sunset's tawny glow
Almost I see
The gateway to a Place I know,
Adorned for me!

Public Personnel

By Lewis Meriam

Member, Senior Staff, Institute for Government Research, Brookings Institution. Author of "Principles Governing the Retirement of Public Employes."

THIS ambitious undertaking is apparently primarily designed as an introductory text for university students of public personnel administration. Its authors are both from the academic field. Dr. Mosher is director of the school of citizenship and public affairs at Syracuse University, and Dr. Kingsley assistant professor of government at Antioch.

The work is called ambitious because it covers the entire range of the public personnel in all levels of government in the United States—national, State and local—with some comparison with conditions in private industry and foreign governments. With such a scope, the book, although reasonably elementary and treating each subject as a rule briefly, is necessarily long—553 large, closely printed pages in moderately small type. In the main, it is based on a review of the existing literature in the field; a very comprehensive review, be it said, including the literature in the field of private personnel administration, after the leading texts of which it is frankly patterned. It quotes liberally from leading authorities and official reports. Only occasionally do the authors present the results of their own original research, and only occasionally and briefly do they inject their own points of view on more or less controversial matters.

• • • •

WRITERS and teachers in the field of public personnel administration in the United States have a hard row to hoe because this country has a Federal system, with a national government—48 sovereign States and a perfect host of counties and municipalities. The author must decide whether he will treat a single unit of Government comprehensively, or whether he will take up a particular subject and under it consider the various units of Government in so far as he deems them significant. Whichever course he pursues, he has his difficulties. If he concentrates on a single unit of government he may give a clear picture of that one unit, which unfortunately may not be like that of any other unit. If he draws his illustrative material from many units, he may get a composite or average picture which is not as a matter of fact an accurate detailed picture of any unit.

The authors have chosen the composite form of presentation and naturally they have not escaped the difficulties of their choice. It is virtually impossible to escape them in this field because of the wide differences in the conditions existing in the different jurisdictions.. Persons who know the national service well will feel that the actual conditions in that service are better than the impression a reader will get from the present text, and yet many of the statements and conclusions can be abundantly supported by conditions in various States and municipalities. From the standpoint of a teacher, the question is whether it is better to start at once on a composite basis, or to present the material first from a study of one jurisdiction and proceed from that study on a comparative basis.

THE authors seem to be in sympathy with the school that is profoundly impressed by the administrative class of the British national civil service. This school would develop here a group of professional administrators who are specialists in administration and not specialists in any of the old-established professions, in the recognized sciences, or in the newer techniques if not sciences. Members of this school often view the British administrative class through a narrow-angle lens. To persons who know our own national Government well, it often seems that this school does not give enough weight to the fact that the British have a centralized government and a responsible ministry with no division of powers. In this country we have a Federal system. Our national Government is not of limited, delegated powers, and it boasts a division of these delegated powers between Congress, the President, and the courts. In our national Government many of the agencies have no large, Nation-wide operating functions. They are engaged in fact-collecting investigation research, with the objective of the promotion and development of different aspects of our civilization. Their relationship with the State and local authorities is co-operative and advisory, rather than supervisory and controlling, and that statement is true of most of the grant-in-aid Federal agencies.

It follows, therefore, that in the United States national Government, professional, technical and scientific work plays a more dominant part than in the British service, because in this country operation and management of many activities in which the Federal Government is involved belong in the field of the State and the municipality. This country has not developed in its national Government an administrative class comparable to the British, but it has developed a scientific and professional service for which it does not have to blush, as witness the Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of Standards, the United States Public Health Service. Our natural line of development for the central Government appears to lie along this line rather than in the development of professional public administrators who are not equipped in any special field of national Government activity. Top Federal permanent officers must generally have both administrative ability and technical, scientific or professional competence.

CONCEIVABLY the situation is different in our municipalities, especially in our larger city-manager cities, and possibly also in our States. With respect to them the position of the author is more defensible. Again this statement illustrates the difficulties that arise from trying to discuss at one and the same time all levels of government in a decentralized Federal system, covering so wide a territory and such diverse conditions.

The text is unquestionably of great value in showing the importance and the content of public personnel administration and in giving in brief summary form the present advanced and enlightened thought on the subject and a description of the current best methods and techniques. One will hardly criticize the authors for the few—the amazingly few—instances in which the text is already out of date, or the few instances in which important points have not been adequately discussed. Perfection cannot be expected especially in a book on the composite plan. University students will unquestionably get an excellent general background out of the study of this book.

"PUBLIC PERSONNEL ADMINISTRATION," by William E. Mosher and J. Donald Kingsley. (Harpers, $5.)

Faulkner's Quality of Mercy

Author Seeks to Reveal the Pitiful Plight of Man on Earth.

By Russell Smith.

Mr. William Faulkner has one distinction of questionable merit, among a host of more solid achievements. He wrote three first novels before launching, in "The Sound and the Fury," upon his true course. Then he waited several years and several books to write a fourth first novel. "Pylon," published last year, was an unwelcome surprise to the growing roster which believes its predecessor, "Light in August," to be one of the finest of American novels.

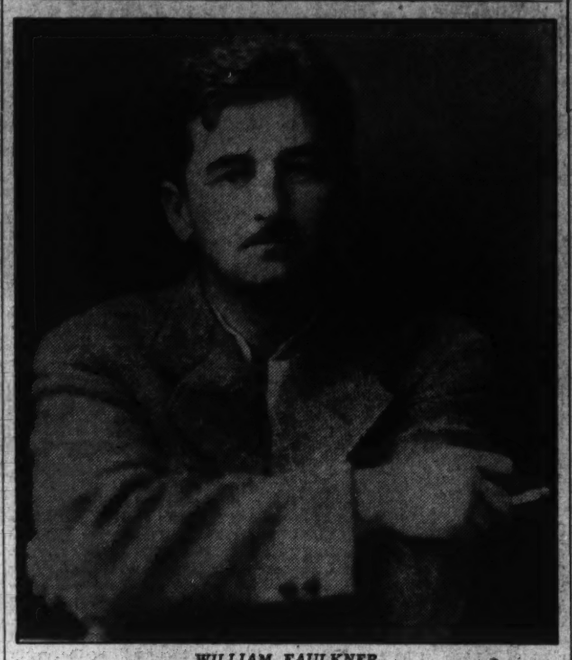
Now it can be reported that Mr. Faulkner's adherents had no cause to fear that his return to the vein of "Soldiers' Pay," "Sartoris" and "Mosquitoes" was more than an aberration.

His new book, "Absalom, Absalom!" it should be said without quibble of words, establishes his recent and major phase as his true literary role. If sensory evidence of Mr. Faulkner's own attitude, in this respect, is needed, it may perhaps be found in the Faulkner-drawn map of fabulous Yoknapatawpha County, Mississippi, with its identification of spots which have figured in all of his novels and with the imprimatur: "William Faulkner, owner and proprietor." "Absalom, Absalom!" does more than merely equal the performance of "Light in August;" that performance, technically, and in its icy objectifying of compassion, could not well be surpassed; but now, in this most recent book, Mr. Faulkner has gone further than he has ever gone previously in the elaboration of this compassion, and in its humanizing for the lay reader.

To the devotees of Mr. Faulkner who read the short story, "Wash," in Harper's Magazine two years or so ago, the principal character of "Absalom, Absalom!" will be no stranger, in the sense that Thomas Sutpen and the devotee will have been introduced to each other.

Mere recitation of the events of this story gives it the color of other of Mr. Faulkner's fables which have given him the name of shock purveyor. It is the tale of Thomas Sutpen and Sutpen's Hundred, the kingdom he bargained for, 25 years before the Civil War, with an Indian chief, a 100 miles of wild Mississippi hinterland. Sutpen arrived in Jefferson, Miss., to its static astonishment, with a herd of "wild niggers" and a semi-captive French architect, and little else. In 10 years he had built his kingdom and its palace, married into a respectability, forced his recognition upon a town still profoundly ignorant of his past or his chart of the future, and but little more acquainted with his present. His demonic energy had realized his magnificent design by the time the war came; but the malignancy in his fate which finally overtook him was already at work.

Ultimately, the gaudy structure of his fulfilled dream tumbles in ruins about him. His daughter dies, "an unwed widow" and his son flees, Sutpen's Hundred as murderer, slayer of his sister's lover; the stringencies of war's aftermath reduced his acres to ten; and his once princely estate is converted into that of a roadside storekeeper. This is a part of the framework, of Mr. Faulkner's story. It is not all even of the framework, for his baleful destiny was not content with his death at the hands of his poor-white retainer and friend, Wash Jones; it destroyed at last his son and his half-breed daughter in the flames of his mansion, and all imprint of Sutpen had vanished then from the earth he had striven so valiantly to stamp with some impress of his strong and furious self.



WILLIAM FAULKNER.

Technical Dexterity and Virile Imagination Take Red Ribbon.

This story can not be dismissed as have some others of Mr. Faulkner's with the comment that it is piling horrors upon horrors, purposelessly. In no other book of his is it so clearly apparent that what he has sought, always, has been to reveal in his own way the pitiful plight of man set down without having willed it so "on the implacable earth," his origin and destiny alike a mystery. This quality of compassion most critics miss in Mr. Faulkner; it is his great virtue. Certainly, he is one of the technical masters of the narrative form. The power and prodigality of his imagination, likewise, was never better defined than in "Absalom, Absalom!" that startling creative strength which can focus and hold the filmsiest factual details of his story while the narrative itself unfolds without regard to chronology, just as one peels a flower bud, one petal after another as their sequence dictates, not as does time nor space nor anything humanly qualitative.

But after you have stood off and admired this technical dexterity and this imaginative virility, you suddenly understand that central to his genius is the shining quality of mercy which has been common to all great artists. It is just as if you were walking, maybe at night, around the Lincoln Memorial, praising to yourself its design and workmanship, when you were brought up short by the thought of that embodiment within, larger than human, of tenderness and sorrow for man, of Lincoln, washed with light, shining in stone as imperishable as whatever is made by man.

"ABSALOM, ABSALOM!" by William Faulkner. (Random House, $2.50.)

The A B C of Politics

By A. Bouchard de Belleuse

HAROLD D. LASSWELL, the psychoanalytical political scientist of the University of Chicago, has at last condescended to write a "popular" book, "Politics: Who Gets What, When, How?" Intending it as a manual for politicians, he has wisely put aside much of his abstruse vocabulary. The result is a remarkably simple, though unexciting work. In reality, it is a series of variations on his ever-recurring theme that politics, the game of getting what one wants when one wants it, can best be understood in psychoanalytical terms.

Specifically, Lasswell sets out, in his latest book, to give politicians the "inside dope" about success. In his eyes, success depends on the apt manipulation of symbols (catchwords, propaganda, ceremonies, etc.), violence and material goods (prices of commodities, or even the commodities themselves). In dealing with the problem of violence, he comes to very much the same conclusions that Machiavelli once did, e. g., "Terror must be ruthless and swift. The destruction of some enemies without delay may paralyze the opposition and save many lives later on," and "Whether used for war, secession or revolution, it is plain that violence must be subordinated to the total operation of which it is a part. Sheer joy in sadistic excess must be chastened by expediency."

But beyond this Lasswell and Machiavelli part company, for Machiavelli spoke in passionate terms, and advised ruthlessness because he saw in it the only way to save his beloved Italy. Lasswell is always cool. Whereas, the Florentine spoke out of intimate experience with the broils of politics, whereas, his illustrations and exhortations were concerned with flesh and blood men. Lasswell's political world and personalities just miss being real. He cannot make us forget that, for all his erudition, for all his penetration, he is not a politician, nor has he breathed the air politicians breathe. He still looks at politics from the outside.

• • • •

"POLITICS: Who Gets What, When, How" in no sense enlarges Lasswell's contribution to political science. But it is worth reading for those who want an easy introduction to the ideas of a man who most decidedly has something to say. For Lasswell, more than most of his fellow political scientists, has seen the necessity of viewing politics in terms of human relationship—consequently in terms of human personalities.

Perhaps his greatest contribution to the study of politics is his inquiry into the psychopathological factors which go to make political personalities. All politicians, in his eyes, are the result of the displacement of private motives by public incentives. The problem, then, is to find what is at the root of this displacement. For instance, a man who is very unsure of himself and obsessed by feelings of inferiority may become an arrogant agitator as a way to assuage his self-esteem. Another, needing great affection, but finding little in his personal environment, may give all his affection to the "people" and seek an answering affection from them. According to Lasswell, Lincoln was such a man. But even after many aspects of Lincoln's character have been treated psychoanalytically—such as his depressive tendencies, his gentleness—one feels that Lincoln the man still stands unrevealed.

In other words, studying political personalities from an analytical standpoint can be very valuable for the understanding of politics—especially in dealing with agitators like Robespierre, assassins, etc.—but it does not and cannot tell the whole story of the great statesmen who have appeared at the turning-points of history.

• • • •

A COROLLARY to the importance of psychopathological factors in political individuals is that of psychopathological factors in political groups. Lasswell is a pioneer in pointing out this fact, which, if it is exploited, may be politically momentous. We are now in an age of groups; we are thinking, acting, feeling less and less as individuals and more as members of collectivities. Hence the applicability of psychoanalytical criteria to groups. In fact, many group movements, e. g., the Ku Klux Klan, Nazism, cannot otherwise be understood.

It follows from this that the successful manipulation of groups, which is the prime task of politicians, must in great part depend on apt psychoanalysis. It remains for Lasswell to work out concrete workable methods for this.

Lasswell the historian is far less convincing than Lasswell the psychoanalyst. In his manual for politicians he stresses the Russian revolution as a world revolution, and as one of the guide-posts for present-day politicians in Europe and America. One may concede the intrinsic significance of the Russian revolution without seeing in it a world phenomenon. For the upheaval of the Russian rural masses can scarcely be said to have a direct relation to the possible upheavals of the Western industrial masses—either historically or psychologically. At least one cannot take such a relation for granted, as Lasswell would have us do.

All things considered, it may be said that "Politics, Who Gets What, When, How," may be of use in orienting persons with vague notions as to politics. The chapter on personality, dealing illuminatingly with Lincoln, may even be said to have a wide general interest. But the book as a whole cannot be expected to enthrall its readers, or to lead them to new spiritual realms.

Veldt Trek

"UNDER THE SUN," by Grace Flandrau. (Scribner's, $2.50.)

Miss Flandrau has written "Under the Sun," a book on Africa which is like a story of a magnificent dog told by recounting the biographies of his unhealthiest fleas. Your reviewer does not know Africa, and after reading "Under the Sun," he doesn't want to know Africa.

In this collection of short stories, Miss Flandrau has set forth her Biblical text which she takes very literally: "So I returned and considered all the oppressions that are done under the sun; and behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter." Certainly Miss Flandrau was a very poor comforter. Her trek through the wilds of the veldt must have had all the sweet charm of kissing a bush of poison ivy, not necessarily fatal, but very unpleasant. Not one of her characters enjoys living. They are thwarted, insignificant people. They would have been thwarted and insignificant if she had left them in Iowa, like the Psalm-singing Arnold Wetzell, who still had the soul of a grocery clerk even when transmuted by a "divine call" and transplanted to Africa or in some small university town, like the prim Mrs. Meuchner, who hid her lasciviousness under a heavy cloak of prudery.

These people would have done, or left undone, the same petty, disillusioned things in their own home towns. They would have unalterably cast their destinies among the stupid, futile ways. They didn't need to be in Africa to bring out all that was so soul-shakingly trivial that it wrecked their lives. Miss Flandrau lays the burden upon Africa, a remarkable piece of geographic injustice.

This should not be taken as an adverse criticism of Miss Flandrau's writing, which at times is powerful and moving, but it is a condemnation of her implied accusations against Africa, and of her carefully selected group of characters, selected, apparently on the basis of their inability to face life. If the reader happens to like microscopic dissections of unpleasant little people, Miss Flandrau's book will be excellent source material.

So, perhaps, this reviewer was wrong. He might like to know Africa, after all. The real Africa, under the putrid mess of these dwarfed and wretched souls, might be a very nice place. Miss Flandrau's occasional slashing strokes that cut away the undergrowth of human futility reveal momentary vistas of an Africa that has a lazy glamour and an indolent charm.

Works of Shakespeare

"THE COMPLETE WORKS OF SHAKESPEARE." Edited by George Lyman Kittredge. (Ginn & Co. Library edition, $6; trade edition, $4.)

Of the making of many editions of Shakespeare, to paraphrase Solomon's dictum, "there is no end." The problems involved in making one are great. There are the problems of editing. Shall, for example, the traditional readings which generations of editors have built up be followed, or shall the editor be guided by the newer methods of the "bibliographical" school? Shall the text of the plays stand alone or shall it be accompanied by elaborate critical notes? And then there is the problem of manufacture: Shall Shakespeare's works be issued in about 38 volumes, with their inevitable high cost and bulk, or shall they be printed in one volume—a form which involves the difficulty of securing legibility of type without rendering the volume unwieldy in size?

This edition presents in an attractive typographical form the ripe scholarship of Prof Kittredge, of Harvard. A portly octavo volume of 1,567 pages, printed on thin but durable and opaque paper, it is not too heavy to handle with comfort, and the clearly printed 9-point type needs no excuse from the standpoint of legibility. In appearance it gives the effect of a modern collection. Except for the bracketing of stage directions, supplied by modern editors, there are no reminders of the school edition and no attempt has been made to give the book an antique flavor. A redrawing of the Droeshout portrait serves as the frontispiece.

The volume contains the 37 plays usually included in the Shakespeare canon, together with "The Two Noble Kinsmen" (by John Fletcher and Shakespeare) and the "Poems." At the beginning of each play is a two-page introductory note on the date, sources, plot and characters—each an admirably written, clear, simple and concise summary of essential matters. At the end of the volume is a glossary. Here are found, not long expositions of meanings and usage, but carefully selected modern equivalents of obsolete or rare words used by Shakespeare. Prof. Kittredge wisely retains the old line-numbering of the Cambridge editors, thereby saving the user of Bartlett's "Concordance" needless vexation. No explanatory notes are added.

• • • •

As a textual editor, Prof. Kittredge seems, on the whole, a conservative. His selection of readings in "Hamlet," for example, is little influenced by Prof. John Dover Wilson or by others of the "bibliographical" school. He follows rather the methods of the great eighteenth century editors. "O that this too, too solid flesh would melt," to take one reading out of many, remains; Wilson's argument for "sullied" is rejected.

Quite conservative, also, is Prof. Kittredge's treatment of the problems of authorship. He assigns the greater part of "Henry VIII," to be sure, to John Fletcher, and admits Shakespeare's part in it to have been small, but he maintains unreservedly the Shakespearean authorship of "Titus Andronicus," tentatively accepts as his "Henry VI," Parts 2 and 3, and, in regard to "Henry VI," Part 1, he concludes that "on the whole it seems likely that Shakespeare was the author at one time or other of much more of the texts than critics admit." Despite their disagreeable character, he assigns to Shakespeare most of Acts III, IV and V of "Pericles."

• • • •

In his comments on the plays Prof. Kittredge is at his best. He clings to no one school of interpretation. On the one hand, he maintains that the witches of Macbeth are in reality the Norns of Scandinavian mythology; on the other, he dismisses the theory of Hamlet's irresolution and holds that his delay in the killing of his uncle was occasioned by a cautious desire to test the truth of the ghost's message. He makes no attempt to identify the Sonnets.

In Prof. Kittredge's pages, it is of interest to note, Shakespeare does not appear as the unlettered genius of the romantic critics. He does not think it unlikely that Shakespeare may have known enough Greek to read the poets, such as Homer and Lucian (pp. 880, 1045) and, as to his ability to read rather difficult Latin authors, he boldly asserts, "Of course Shakespeare could read Livy" (p. 924).

Six Decades

"A PAPAL CHAMBERLAIN," by Francis Augustus MacNutt. (Longmans, Green, $3.50.)

A fascinating volume of memoirs. Personal chronicles have a way of vibrating between two extremes—the dry, factual, monotonous recital; and the rambling, overintimate utterances of a thwarted essayist. Mr. MacNutt has steered a middle course achieving a balance of both of these methods. At the same time, he unfolds a cosmopolitan narrative wherein persons of little consequence and personages of great rank, position and importance are presented in a most natural manner, despite the kaleidoscopic changing of scene and atmosphere. The result is, to this writer, one of the most satisfactory books that has come out in a long time.

"A Papal Chamberlain" is divided most logically into "Decades"—six in all. The author in compiling his work has, consciously or unconsciously, recaptured faithfully the progression of human outlook as it passes through the stages from early impressions to objective observation and thence in mature years to an increasingly subjective contemplation.

The whole tone of the book is one of modesty and sincerity. Mr. MacNutt was singularly blessed with a very rare sort of personality which drew and held the confidence of some of the finest minds of his time. The authenticity of his account of the personal and private characters of many members of the royal families of central Europe, dignitaries of the Catholic Church particularly in Rome, and distinguished persons with whom he came into contact in official and semiofficial capacities, is unquestionable. There are incidents which reveal significant facts hitherto unpublished which add not a little to any reader's understanding of puzzling circumstances in the diplomatic, and it might be added, the undiplomatic, relations of some of the countries involved in the World War.

Lay readers will be surprised at certain candid revelations of much misunderstood aspects of the Vatican, its functions and its occupants.

To review such a book is to be tempted to continue indefinitely the praise of this very compelling and valuable addition to biographical literature, which has been considered of such importance that it has been selected the current Catholic Book of the Month.

Fiction For Adults Only

Two New Novels of Varying Types Have Individual Appeal for Readers

"CALL FOR A CHAPERONE," by Sybil Bolitho and Cen Fearnley. (Wm. Morrow, $2.50.)

Unlike Sybil Bolitho's first novel, "My Shadow as I Pass," which was essentially autobiographical and told in touching terms of her marriage with her first husband, "Call for a Chaperon," which was written jointly with Cen Fearnley, deals entirely with characters apart from her own life. Now happily remarried, Miss Bolitho proves that she can be equally effective in the more strictly fictional realm.

The story deals with an international group of the artistic set gathered together at a pleasant villa in Verona to do honor to a great producer on his fiftieth birthday. The honor was to take the form of the production of a modern version of "Pilgrim's Progress," which he was to direct as a crowning achievement to his glorious career. Not satisfied with such mere formal honors, the producer, Carlo, proceeds to fall in love with Penelope, the daughter of his benefactor. His wife's, Anna, concern with this "affair" took not only the form of personal jealousy but also fear for the outcome of the play which was being presented. The elaborate plot to extricate this misguided genius from his predicament proved entirely unnecessary when he lets it be known that his apparent love is only a passing whim which he no longer considers seriously.

The novel reaches a result satisfactory to all concerned, for the play is entirely successful and is rewarded with the accolade awarded to all good little plays that behave themselves, a bid to Hollywood. The story is partially interpreted through the clever comments of sympathetic Mrs. Rudd, in whom the characters confide.

Entirely frothy in its implications, this novel is, perhaps because of that very fact, excellent entertainment. Since the characters are unconventional, no situation seems improbable, and unexpected turns are accepted as perfectly justifiable. The reader soon learns to expect the improbable and waits with bated breath each succeeding occurrence.

NELL GREY CLEMENTS.

"THE REVELS ARE ENDED," by Robert Carson. (Doubleday, Doran, $2.50.)

In his first novel, Robert Carson examines the effects of eight years of prison life on a young man of average sensitivity, who has been both hardened and weakened by his stay in the brig.

Carson's protagonist, Philip Cloud, killed the man who had seduced Janet Cloud, his wife—killed him with such pleasure that he used up the bullets he had intended for Janet and himself.

Eight years at San Quentin burned away many things from Cloud's half-formed personality. He returns to life outside with a single determination—to be himself—to say and do and think exactly as he pleased, unmindful of the consequences to others. Utterly self-indulgent. Cloud drifts through one sordid experience after another, mocking, sneering, drunken, soul-sick, calloused somehow to all suffering but his own.

The novel is picaresque in type, following Cloud's squirmings up and down the State of California—as a bum, as a day-laborer, as a non-paying boarder with two prostitutes, as a service-station employe as a rising business man, as a lover, as a drunken mourner for his dead love, and as a tired, defeated man, who returns at last to the wife and child he has hated and deserted.

Carson's writing, occasionally amateurish and halting, is on the whole very strong and fine, adjusted to both the shaded delicacies of thought and the powerful crashing scenes of fighting and drinking.

It's a soundly-written, exciting first novel. You'd have to be a very difficult case, indeed, for this to bore you. SIDNEY OLSON.

Man of Wings and Words

Cecil Lewis Recaptures Thrills of Combat Between Planes for Readers

"SAGITTARIUS RISING," by Cecil Lewis. (Harcourt, Brace, $2.50.)

Cecil Lewis was a tall, good-looking boy of 16 when he left his English school to go to war as a flier; less than a year later he was an ace, piloting with skill planes that are museum pieces today. Three weeks was the average expectancy of a flier who went to the front, but Lewis has lived to look back across 20 years to his war-time flights and to recapture on paper something from those hectic days.

Since Lewis is quite possibly the most articulate man to fly through the war, his 'autobiographical narrative' is well worth the reading. Notable are those passages when he holds up for the reader the beauty and peace surrounding the flier far above the battle lines, gazing down at a war that appeared, from such a vantage point, "a fantastic caricature of common sense." Here, too, is a graphic account of the most advanced form of combat in a war whose methods are obsolete already. Some reader in years to come will find this book a mine of information on how air fighting was done in the primitive years of 1915-1919.

Like Anne Morrow Lindbergh, Lewis can see beyond his wing tips when he flies. Coupled with this gift is a keen imagination and a love of beauty. At heart, the man is a romanticist; by nature, he is an incurable romancer. (At least three women in the book would serve as inspiration for any knight.)

Of war he naturally has much to say. It was not fighting, which is akin to sport, but murder, "senseless, brutal, ignoble." Combat between planes, on the other hand, was a different thing: victory depended on individual skill and speed and control. On an early leave he describes his reactions to the battle front he has left: "It was all so exciting to me. I had no sense of tragedy. It was a marvelous life, a sport, a game."

The same reaction holds when he is a seasoned veteran of many combats. Somehow, these aerial meetings between two planes were like a gallant jousting between knights on horseback. Opponents saw and recognized each other's ability: it was no business of skulking in a trench and shooting an unseen enemy miles away. Each man had a sporting chance. He describes the action of such meetings with a foe, feinting, twisting, turning. A combat worthy of sportsmen:

". . . And if at last he went down, a falling rocket of smoke and flame, what a glorious and heroic death! What a brave man! It might just as well have been me. For what have I been spared? To die, diseased, in a bed? Sometimes it seems a pity!"

There will be no such meetings between respecting foes in the mechanized, wireless-controlled next World War. But Lewis has only a vague solution to offer to the problem of war, a suggestion for "a collective rise above narrow nationalism . . . to pool our resources, disarm and set up an international air police force, federally controlled;" a vision similar to that of Wells in "Things to Come."

Three chapters at the end of the book, in which he relates his experiences after the war, when he taught Chinese to fly, are as anticlimactic to the reader as they must have been to Lewis. His reactions to the beauty of the centuries-old Chinese culture are those of many another westerner. His schooling interrupted by a cataclysm, his university the Western Front, Lewis seems to have been best off "alone in the wonderful skies, as happy as I have ever been or ever shall be, I suppose."

For Lawyers

"YOU MAY CROSS - EXAMINE!" by Lewis Herman and Mayer Goldberg. (MacMillan Co., $2.)

Incipient lawyers, eagerly awaiting the first, never-to-be forgotten client, and husbands of inquisitorial wives should find this volume a great help. The first class may learn something of the fine art of extracting the truth, or as much of it as serves their client's interests, from unwilling witnesses.

The authors demonstrate by actual testimony from scores of cases that a good, stiff cross-examination, like a bull fight, is lots of fun for the spectators, whether the witness gets neatly dispatched or the lawyer gets gored. It's all in the interest of good, clean fun for the habitues of the courtroom, and may Justice look out for itself!

From a literary standpoint, the book is a curious compound of tabloid slang and precise legal verbiage. But it has its points, as in the chapter on women in court, where sage Rufus Choate, master practitioner, is quoted: "Let me give you my dying advice—never cross-examine a woman. It is of no use. The moment you begin to cross-examine one of them, instead of being bitten by a single rattlesnake you are bitten by a whole barrel full."

The ladies will have no need of this book; they are the inventors of the art which it strives to impart.

nomination of Hoover went over on the first ballot. Curtis became the Vice Presidential nominee, also on the first ballot.

The nomination of Smith was being conceded right and left by the time the Democrats got to Houston. Nor was there any hesitancy about the choice of Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, for second place on the ticket. A series of fist fights on the floor, when Smith adherents sought to draw the standards of North Carolina and some of the other Southern States into parades, gave an indication, however, of what was to come.

Both parties had pledged themselves to enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. Smith, however, in a telegram to the convention, said that he favored a change in the amendment to put prohibition enforcement in the hands of the States. He said later he wanted to give the convention a chance to change candidates if it would not accept his views. Religion played a large part in the campaign. Smith was a Catholic. Just a few days after the election, Dawes wrote:

"In the country at large the overwhelming influence of the religious issue is clearly manifest both in the North and the South."

In the Methodist Episcopal Church South, two of the bishops joined in urging its ministers: "Know your high calling. Preach Christ and Him crucified. Do not preach politics."

Four others, however, opposing Smith, issued a joint statement:

"We notify the defenders and the advocates of the liquor traffic that the moral forces of the country will not be driven from the field by the cry that they 'are bringing the church into politics.'"

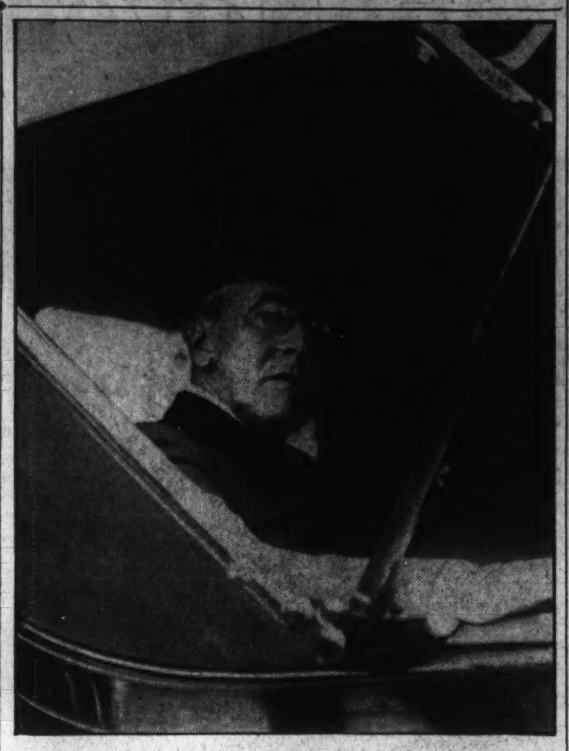
One of the bishops called ministers and laymen to a meeting at Asheville, N. C., at which an anti-Smith-Democratic organization was formed. The Atlanta Journal in October carried a report of a speech by a minister opposing Smith in which he made broad references to taking "orders from the Vatican" and said Tammany was after "the Harlem vote by appointing Negroes to high positions."

The November voting showed: Hoover, 21,392,190; Smith, 15,016,443; Thomas, 267,420; Foster, 48,700; Varney 20,106; Webb, 6,390. The electoral vote gave Hoover 444, Smith 87.

For the first time since the Tilden-Hayes dispute the Republicans had cracked the solid South, taking North Carolina, Virginia, Florida and Texas.

But, even as early as July of 1928, Dawes had been saying:

"The business situation in the country points to a coming business change. Will the American people, as they sometimes do during the closing of a period of prosperity, wake up some morning changed from an optimistic to a pessimistic view of the future, as occurred in 1892, culminating in the panic of 1893?"



President Woodrow Wilson's dream for a League of Nations led by America was rejected by the voters in the 1920 campaign.

now is living with relatives in nearby Virginia.

Thus ended one of the starkest tragedies of Death Curve, of which native farmers speak with awe. They have heard of many tragic mishaps on this section of the highway, but perhaps none so heartrending as the story of the Bromleys.

The driver of the truck and his assistant were only slightly injured. They tried desperately to pull Mrs. Bromley and her son from the wreckage.

The Associated Press reported that some boys helped the girl from the car and tried to rescue her brother.

"The little boy was pinned under the wreckage," recalled William Jackson, still shaken by what he had experienced as an eyewitness. "His mother screamed two or three times before the flames killed her. The boys couldn't get to her. "It was all unspeakably horrible!"

Jackson, a native of the section, had seen other crashes on Death Curve, now apparently doomed by the highway authorities, but none had seemed to him so frightful as this one.

Even before Bromley died in the hospital, it was evident that the people of Beaver County had won their victory. But they still had to fight, and fight hard, for action.

District Attorney Robert D. McCleary ordered barricades thrown up around Fallston Hill—"Death Curve" by this time to motorists everywhere.

He refused to allow his special guards to permit even passenger automobiles over the section of highway for two weeks.

"I'll keep this road closed until the State highway people do something about it," he said.

Later pleasure cars were allowed to pass, but guards warned them of the danger ahead, and trucks were not allowed to travel east there. Until the new highway is finished, this will be the rule.

Contract was let for the new Fallston Hills road October 1.

Soon the new section will be finished, and the grade will be imperceptible.

Bromley, a native of Minnesota, was elected mayor of Colmar Manor in 1929.

He served many terms, and brought about many improvements, including the floating of an $80,000 bond issue for street and highway improvements He had lived in Colmar Manor for 15 years.

Mrs. Bromley was a native of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Authorities in Pennsylvania are weighing several plans for the elimination of Death Curve.

When they make a definite selection of that scheme which seems most feasible and practical to engineers now studying the problem, work will proceed immediately.

And the tragic fate of the Bromleys' may never again be equalled on the curve which so consistently has justified its nickname.

Memorial Will Be Dedicated To Jusserand were keen appreciators of the pomp and circumstance of diplomatic functions. Even for daytime events at the White House Mme. Jusserand dressed the part of Mme. la Ambassadress and set the example of wearing demi-toilettes for such occasions.

The balls and dinners and receptions at the pink granite embassy then on Sixteenth street were carried out in the best traditions of diplomatic entertaining.

M. Jusserand always found time to walk with his wife, even when he was a member of the famous "Tennis Cabinet." But after President Roosevelt left Washington and especially during and after the World War he turned more and more to his wife for companionship on his walks. The American wife of the Frenchman was a good walker. They would not stroll but walk at a smart gait, not too slowly and not too fast, choosing the paths along Piney Branch in Rock Creek Park as their favorite promenade. They would ride out to Piney Branch in their automobile and then walk back to the embassy. They would stop and watch the birds or rest for a while on one of the rustic benches. When they left Washington they placed a handsome bird fountain near Piney Branch for their bird friends.

It is therefore quite fitting that a site in Rock Creek Park should be selected for the placing of the granite bench authorized by act of Congress to honor Washington's favorite diplomat.

It also is fitting that it should be made of the same pink granite of which the embassy in which they lived for so many years was built. Arrangements for the placing of the bench have been made by Dr. Franklyn Paris, of New York, chairman of the Jusserand Memorial Committee. It was designed by Joseph Freedlander, of New York, well known architect.

Jules Jusserand was born in Lyons, France, in 1855. He was always of a scholarly type and showed an avid appetite for learning at an early age. He was only 21 when he entered the diplomatic corps as consul in London. Between his duties in London he studied and engaged in literary research until he became a master of English literature and a Shakespearean scholar of wide renown.

He grew to know the English people and England just as later he became familiar with America and Americans, our customs and ideals and temperament.

M. Jusserand came to Washington in 1902 as French Minister and he was soon made Ambassador. His term of service in the United States ended in 1925. He served as French Minister in Copenhagen from 1890 until 1902 and was a member of the French Embassy staff in London from 1887 to 1890.

Mme. Jusserand was Miss Elise Richards, daughter of a New York business man. She met the young French diplomat while at school in Paris. They were married in Paris October 15, 1895, when M. Jusserand was 40.

So much a part of the Washington of yesterday were the Jusserands that there will be special welcome from those of us who remember them, to Mme. Jusserand when she arrives in Washington.

We will remember with affection the quick moving, quick spoken little man, who however never lost his self control or his calm. The only time this calm really seemed broken was when he expressed his joy when at last the United States went into the World War. He can be remembered hurrying faster then his wont along the long corridors of the State Department, all smiles and greetings, for he saw victory ahead through this act of the United States.

Statue of Liberty 50 Years Old; Dedication to Be Re-enacted Ceremony Similar to That of 1886 Will Be Staged Wednesday on Bedloes Island in Honor of Bronze Lady of New York Harbor.

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—The bronze lady of New York harbor is a half century old this week, her gaze still firmly seaward and the torch in her right hand still held high.

For 50 years she has lighted the march of events from her pedestal on Bedloes Island. She has seen ships bringing eager, hopeful Americans of the future from lands abroad; and seen ships put out to sea with flags flying, bearing armies on their decks. The bronze of her ample gown has grown green in spots from sea spray. But still the proud, diademed head is erect and the torch in which 12 men can stand lights up the harbor.

She is the Statue of Liberty.

Fifty years ago thousands of cheering men, women and children crowded the shorelines of this water-girt area, when she was unveiled, the gift of France to a sister republic. Wednesday the 1886 dedication ceremonies will be re-enacted at Bedloes Island. Freedom was Liberty's message to Americans and the world. She saw the great blizzard of 1888, about which old men still talk; stood, the sea at her feet, when Castle Garden, where Jenny Lind sang, gave way to Ellis Island as immigration depot, and the first electrocution for crime took place in New York State. She saw the Greater New York bill signed, making the city a vast union of five sprawling, teeming boroughs.

Under her light, American troopships steamed forth after the Maine was blown up and the Spanish-American War broke out, and it shone when Dewey and Hobson returned to heroes' welcomes. The great "corner" in North Pacific Railroad stock precipitated a Wall street panic, President McKinley was assassinated at Buffalo, the General Slocum burned in the East River with a death toll of 1,021, New York City opened its first subway, the depression year—1907—threw a pall over the financial district and the country, and still she stood.

When C. P. Rogers left in an airplane to make the first transcontinental flight, landing at Pasadena, Calif., the bronze lady of the harbor heard the whirring of wings, the first of many to come. She saw the Carpathia move quietly into port, bearing survivors from the Titanic and a tale of disaster in ice-strewn seas.

The light in the torch burned symbolically brighter as momentous events abroad brought the United States into the World War on the side of the allies, and the harbor was thronged with great troopships. She was the first to greet their return in triumph. And she saw the arrival of the Unknown Soldier, whose flag-draped coffin was borne to Arlington National Cemetery. She heard the blast in the Wall Street explosion of 1920, when 30 persons died and $2,000,000 damage resulted, heard the din of merry-makers the night before national prohibition went into effect, heard the cheers of women as the nineteenth amendment gave them the vote. Three Army airplanes circling the world reached the city on the last lap of their epochal flight, the Prince of Wales arrived on his American tour, the Dirigible ZR3 (later the Los Angeles) thrust her prow over the canyons of New York.

Queen Marie of Rumania arrived. Capt. Charles A. Lindbergh zoomed out of obscurity into world fame on his solo hop to Paris, came back to the greatest welcome in the city's history. Other fliers followed the Atlantic air trail—Chamberlin, Byrd, Ruth Elder and Amelia Earhart. New York welcomed the crew of the airplane Bremen, Dr. Hugo Eckener brought the Graf Zeppelin from Germany, the British Prime Minister, Ramsay MacDonald, arrived to discuss naval armaments with President Hoover.

These have been passing incidents to the lady in the harbor. Fifty years after she took up her stand here, once more emissaries and representatives of the two republics, France and America, meet together to pay her homage. The city under her sway has grown from 1,911,698 to 7,601,575. Her gaze is still firmly seaward and the torch in her right hand is held high.

Quintuplets Bring 'Invisible Imports'

Ottawa, Ont. (U.P.).—The value of "invisible imports"—tourists from abroad and the money they spend—is illustrated in that great Ontario industry, the Dionne quintuplets.

It is estimated that 400,000 tourists have visited the village of Callander to see the famous babies. The average expenditure of each visitor is placed at $10. In other words, the quints alone have brought $4,000,000 into the country.

Business throughout the Callander section of Ontario has had an enormous stimulus. Hotels, tourist cabins, restaurants and "hot dog" stands all share in the advantage.

The quintuplets will be wealthy when they grow up. The fund to their credit is already large and is steadily mounting as a result of moving picture contracts, advertising and other rights.

The great preponderance of visitors come from the United States, although, in fact, all countries are represented. The "infant industry" provided by Mr. and Mrs. Oliva Dionne is unique in its type but almost inconceivably profitable to the district where it is located and, as well, to many other places en route.

Lawyers, Doctors Urged To Defend Professions

Leaders of medicine and the law ought to bring to public attention merits and services of their professions, and the "false, distorted and exaggerated character of many of the charges brought against them," Dr. Harold M. Stephens, Washington attorney, declared Friday in an informal address before the closing meeting of the annual Clinical Congress of the American College of Surgeons in Philadelphia.

"We take too comfortably for granted in respect of medicine and law that their virtues, which we know to exist, are so clear to all that they need no demonstration and no proclamation," he asserted.

Count of Paris Says Monarchy Need of France

Royal Rule Alone Can Give Country True Liberty, He Says.

Paris (AP).—Henri, Count of Paris, heir-apparent to the non-existent throne of France and scion of 40 Bourbon kings, offers himself to France as its eventual monarch—as a champion of liberty.

France must return to monarchy "to preserve French liberties," the count asserts. His views are embodied in a book he has just published. After examining France's political and economic ills, he concludes that his country's government of tomorrow will be royalist.

France will be forced to return to monarchy, he holds, because "parliamentary democracy has come to the last stage of impotence, of decadence, of decomposition, ready to fall into Marxian dictatorship or revolutionary anarchy, contemptible, contemptuous and rotten."

Monarchy alone can give France both liberty and authority, he writes, and its "assured continuity" will permit it to function without the tyranny of dictatorships. The count recommends a decentralized France, effected by a return to the old division of the country into provinces, which, he says, are its "natural regions," and a corporative state.

Over everything would be the king, "arbitrating and pacifying," an umpire between capital and labor and other warring factions, drawing them together for co-operation and assuring "the best possible compromise between the liberty necessary to human activity and the discipline necessary to the nation."

The Duc de Guise, pretender to the French throne, now 62, recently announced assignment of a large part of his duties as head of the family to his son. Both live in Belgium. Royalists have hailed the count's book as evidence that he has been well educated in the art of kingship and has a perception and knowledge of affairs which qualify him to rule if he is ever called to the throne.

Soviet Again Makes Yule Decorations

Moscow, (U.P.).—Christmas trees in Russian homes, made legal only last year, will be well decorated this season. Moscow factories are turning out 30 different kinds of decorations of a total value of 6,000,000 rubles.

Under the new custom, Christmas trees are decorated for New Year's Day instead of Christmas, and are called "evergreens."

No new decorations were manufactured last year, but when display of trees was made legal a surprising number of ornaments kept since pre-revolutionary days was dug up from old trunks and other hiding places.

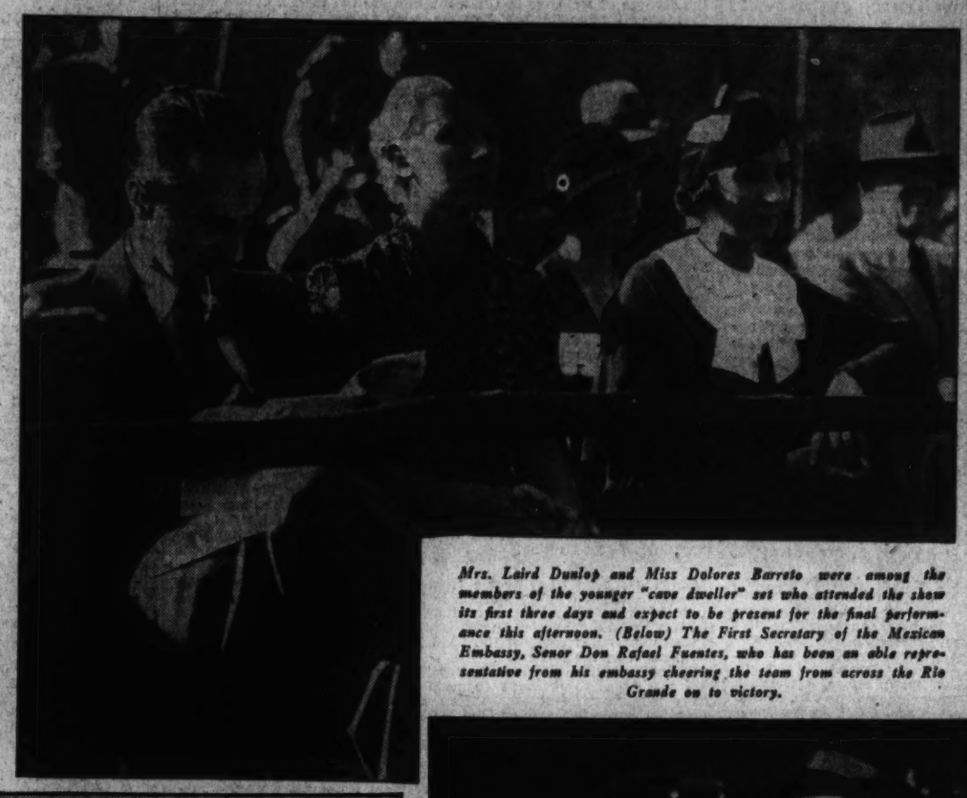
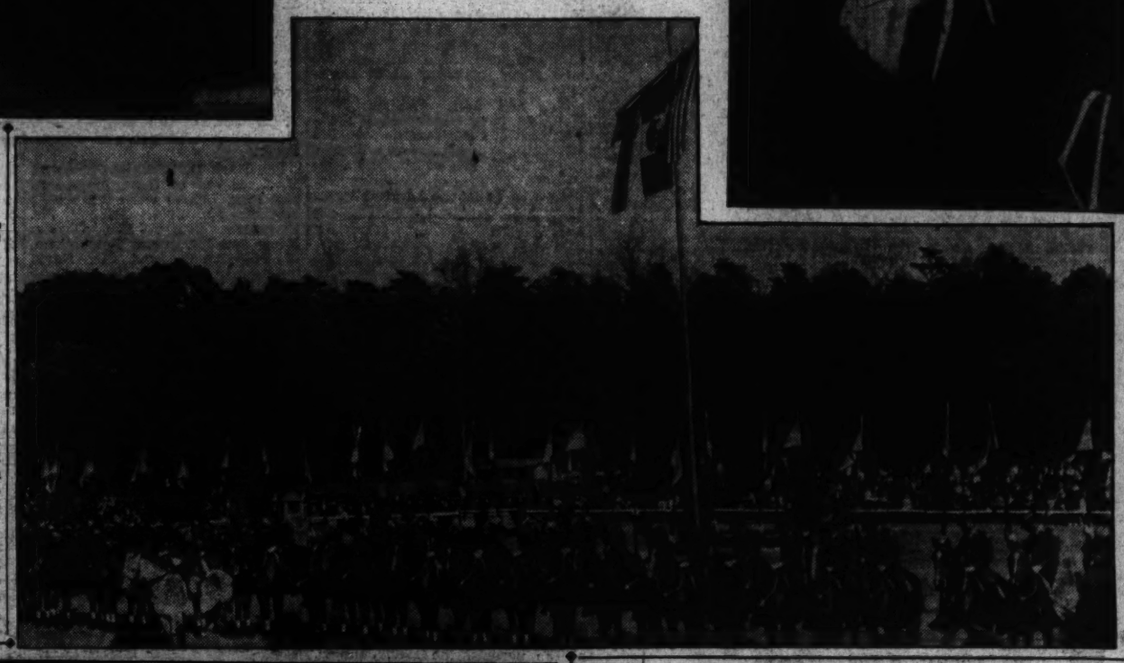
Carlton Is the Scene of Colorful Dinner and Dance of Horse Show Group

The Inter-American Horse Show drew large crowds to the rustic ringside in Rock Creek Park. (Left)—The Ambassador of Germany, Herr Hans Luther, offers a serious comment on one of the events to Mrs. Jonathan Wainwright, wife of the Commandant of Fort Myer, who has been in regular attendance at the shows. (Center)—The three teams from Chile, Mexico and the United States and their mounted escort pay their respects to the diplomats and officials in their boxes. (Below)—The Chilean Ambassador, Senor Don Manuel Trucco, snapped with his family. At the left is Senorita Rebeca and on the right her sister, Senorita Marta. Behind them sit Senorita Maruca Sacasa, Senorita Graciela Trucco, just behind her father, and at the extreme right is Dr. Ricardo Alfaro, former Minister of Panama.

Post Staff Photos—Klemm.



Mrs. Laird Dunlop and Miss Dolores Barreto were among the members of the younger "cave dweller" set who attended the show its first three days and expect to be present for the final performance this afternoon. (Below) The First Secretary of the Mexican Embassy, Senor Don Rafael Fuentes, who has been an able representative from his embassy cheering the team from across the Rio Grande on to victory.



Function Given in Honor Of Diplomats and Teams

Scarlet Coats and Gold Braid Mingle With Silver Lame and Velvet at Brilliant Fete; Distinguished Guests Present.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Scarlet coats, gold braid and gold medals—silver, lame, brocade and velvet—combined in a brilliant picture last night as the guests assembled for the dinner and dance given at the Carlton by the Inter-American Horse Show Committee in honor of the Ambassadors of Chile and Mexico and the teams from their countries and our own, here to participate in the event.

Most of those who attended had been at the Meadowbrook Show Grounds earlier in the day, either as spectators or riders, and many had also been guests at the receptions and cocktail parties given by the Minister of the Dominican Republic and Senora de Pastoriza, the Air Attache of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Puga and by the Fenton Fadeleys.

The patio at the Carlton provided an appropriate Spanish setting for the colorful gathering as cocktails were served there before the dinner which was in the Carlton room. Large centerpieces of chrysanthemums and other fall flowers in yellow and bronze formed the decorations.

Seated at the table with the Ambassador of Chile, Senor Don Manuel Trucco, and the Ambassador of Mexico and Senora Castillo Najera, the latter in a gown of black Moroccan crepe with silver accessories, were other distinguished guests. They included Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and Mrs. Hazen, who wore dark blue lace with rhinestone clips at the neck; the Director General of the Pan American Union, Dr. Leo S. Rowe; the captain of the United States Army team, Maj. J. Tupper Cole, and Mrs. Cole; the captain of the Chilean team, Capt. Eduardo Yanez and Senora de Yanez, who wore black lace; the captain of the Mexican team, Capt. Armando Villarreal; the daughters of the Chilean Ambassador, Senorita Graciela Trucco, in black, and Senorita Marta Trucco, in white crepe made on tailored lines; the daughter of the Mexican Ambassador, Senorita Erma Castillo Najera, in red and gold accessories; his niece, Senorita Lupe Davila, in a frock of white crepe studded in rhinestones; the son of the Chilean Ambassador, Senor Don Manuel Trucco, jr.; the Military Attache of the Mexican Embassy, Brig. Gen. Juan F. Azcarate, and the First Secretary of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Huneeus.

Mr. Mott Has Party.

Another large party was that of Mr. Thomas T. Mott, one of the men who wore their scarlet jackets. At his table were Mr. Fenton Fadeley, an honorary whip of the Riding and Hunt Club, who also wore his scarlet coat, and Mrs. Fadeley, in a blue vegera velvet gown; Mr. and Mrs. Chester A. Blinston, Mr. and Mrs. John Young, Mr. and Mrs. George T. Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Harry H. Semmes, Maj. and Mrs. James Duke, Mrs. Duke wearing a black ridge crepe, Maj. Frank L. Whittaker, chairman of the Inter-American horse show committee, and Mrs. Whittaker, who wore black taffeta with a cluster of gardenias at the neck; Mr. and Mrs. F. Larmour Oyster and Mr. Augustus Riggs 3d.

At a nearby table were Mr. and Mrs. Claude W. Owen, Mr. Owen, who is also an honorary whip of the Riding and Hunt Club, in his scarlet coat, and Mrs. Owen in black velvet with rhinestones at the neck; Mr. Anton Weiskittle and Mrs. Esther Donovan, of Baltimore; Miss Jane Shanahan, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Morris, Mr. Lacy Shaw and Mr. Marcy L. Sperry.

With Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Cottrell, Mrs. Cottrell in white lame made with cowl neck and flaring skirt, were Dr. and Mrs. A. Magruder MacDonald, Dr. and Mrs. Jesse Mann, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Leonard, Dr. and Mrs. Martin Stohlman, Lieut. Raymond W. Curtis, Mr. and Mrs. W. Gwynn Gardiner, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Robert Watson, the latter in a white crepe gown with a train and a silver sequin top; Mr. John Saul and Miss Caroline Jenney.

Miss Margaret Cotter had exchanged her riding clothes for a white taffeta frock with red velvet trimming. At her table were the Naval Attache of the Peruvian Embassy and Senora de Althaus, Mr. Fred Hughes, of the Maryland Hunt Club, and his guest, Miss Elizabeth Steig, Capt. Sergei Kournakoff, of New York City, one of the judges

Marcia De Moll Becomes Bride

Married in St. Stephen's Episcopal Church to James Campbell 3d.

The marriage of Miss Marcia Elizabeth De Moll, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Otto J. De Moll, to Mr. James Atkinson Campbell 3d took place yesterday in St. Stephen's Episcopal Church.

Only members of the immediate family were present, due to illness in the family of the bridegroom. The wedding, set for December at the time the engagement was announced two weeks ago, was held yesterday as a simple ceremony.

Mr. Campbell is the son of Commander and Mrs. James Atkinson Campbell, jr. The couple left immediately for a trip through New England States. They will be at home in Colonial Village after November 15.

To Have 'At Homes.'

The Chief of Staff and Mrs. Malin Craig will be at home this season in their quarters at Fort Myer on the first Sundays of November, December and February. The hours are from 4 to 6.

Miss Whitfield to be Wed.

Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Whitfield, of Wakefield, Va., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Mary Whitfield, to Capt. Frank N. Sands, of Waverly, Va. The wedding will take place early in January in Wakefield.

Friday Club Fixes First Dance Event For December 4

The Friday Evening Dance Club will have its first dance on Friday, December 4, at the Willard Hotel. There will also be a party on New Year's eve.

The members of the committee include Mme. Alfaro, wife of the former Minister of Panama; Senora de Baron, wife of the Counselor of the Cuban Embassy; Mrs. William King, Mrs. Benton McMillin, Mrs. Charles Riggs, Mrs. William S. Culbertson, Mrs. John Allan Dougherty and Mrs. S. Wallace Dempsey. Mrs. Parker West is the secretary-treasurer.

Ingrahams Leave For California Post

Officer and Family Were Visiting Parents Here.

Lieut. and Mrs. Lawrence Lee Ingraham and their infant son Lawrence Lee, jr., has left for Fort Winfield Scott, Calif., after a visit with Mrs. Ingraham's parents, Col. Alvah J. Brasted, chief of chaplains, U. S. A., and Mrs. Brasted. Mrs. Ingraham has been here two months and Lieut. Ingraham joined her three weeks ago.

They will remain at Fort Winfield Scott until February 3, when they will sail for the Philippines, which will be Lieut. Ingraham's new station.

Miss Stant Wed To John Dollins

Washington Girl Married to Portland, Ind., Man In M. P. Church.

The wedding of Miss Mary I. Stant, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter R. Stant, to Mr. John W. Dollins, son of Mr. and Mrs. Guy O. Dollins, of Portland, Ind., took place at 8 o'clock last evening at the Rhode Island Avenue Methodist Protestant Church. The Rev. R. Y. Nicholson performed the ceremony, assisted by the Rev. R. W. White. A reception at the home of the bride's parents followed the wedding.

The bride, who entered the church on the arm of her father, by whom she was given in marriage, wore a gown of white satin made on princess lines. Her tulle veil was decorated with handpainted orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of white rosebuds and lilies of the valley.

Miss Betty Ditzler, the maid of honor, wore a frock of white satin with a tunic and carried talisman roses. The bridesmaids, the Misses Mina Gardner and Cecil Mary McKenzie, wore gowns of light green satin made on the same style as that of the maid of honor, and carried pink rose buds.

Mr. Paul Lunde was best man and the ushers were Mr. Robert McIntyre, Mr. Robert Sutton, Mr. George Grade and Mr. James Huss.

TOP HATS and TIARAS

Diplomatic data:

There will definitely be no large-scale entertaining at the Spanish Embassy until the "situation in Spain" is settled. The little blue chairs in the embassy ballroom are lined up in forlorn rows against the wall and the whole spacious room has rather a forgotten air.

Senor de los Rios, the new Ambassador, his wife, and their pretty young daughter, are all intellectuals. The Ambassador was president of the University of Madrid and both his wife and Senorita de los Rios taught in Spain. The founder of the progressive education movement in that country was a great-uncle of Senor de los Rios.

Definitely of the "new Spain" is his blonde daughter, who looks more Nordic than Latin. She studied at the University of Madrid, specializing in literature, and then taught school at a time when even going to college was considered by the more conservative Spanish families something akin to becoming a chorus girl. She plans to take some more courses at a Washington university while she is here.

Senorita de los Rios is interested in politics and plans to work with her father this winter. There probably will be plenty for her to do.

Now for news of two members of the "old regime," former secretaries at the Spanish Embassy:

Rumor, which at one time reported the death of Ramon Padilla, in Spain, and then was discovered to be false, now informs us that he will return to Washington in the near future. Padilla has deeper roots in Washington than most peripatetic diplomats, as his father was Ambassador here for several years. He adores America and was very popular in the Capital.

Senor Don Luis de Olivares, former First Secretary of the Embassy, has left his apartment at the Anchorage for a stay in New York, but will return.

* * * *

Senora de Boyd, wife of the newly arrived Panamanian Minister, is also the niece of the Ecuadorean Ambassador, Senor Capitan Colon Eloy Alfaro. The Minister and Senora de Boyd have a son who is studying at George Washington niversity this year, and a daughter, who accompanied them from Panama.

Miss Anne Carter Greene, president of the Junior League last year, has returned to Washington from a motor trip through the West and Canada. With several other girls, she hired a car and they drove through the national parks and visited many out-of-the-way places.

Members of the Junior League will meet on Thursday, November 5, at the Mayflower, for their opening luncheon of the year. Mrs. Harper Sibley, wife of the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, will be guest speaker.

Members of the clergy, Catholic students, and newspapermen were the only persons who had an opportunity to see the papal secretary of State, His Eminence Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli, on his recent visit here. During his 24-hours stay at the handsome Apostolic Delegation there was no time for anything but official entertaining, and very little of that.

Even if there had been a large function given at the delegation, the feminine members of Washington society wouldn't have been invited. For no woman is ever asked to dinner or tea there. The telephone is not listed, and even officials of the National Catholic Welfare Conference don't know the number.

Since President Roosevelt was in New England during the visit of His Eminence, the latter did not see him, thus putting an end, at least for the time being, to the rumor that the Secretary was in this country to discuss political recognition of the Vatican. It's been a good many years since the United States sent a minister to represent this country there. However, according to one authority, there's a possibility that His Eminence will return for another visit to Washington while in this country.

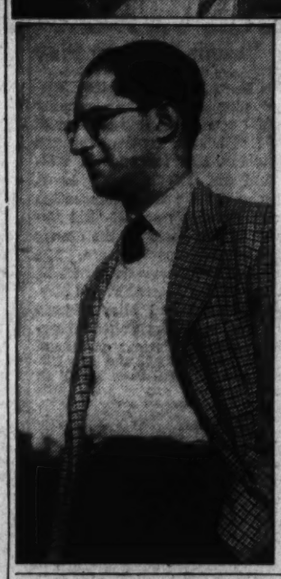
Miss Eileen O'Daniel had always considered herself definitely ground minded until one day her boss, Mr. John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, told her to get airplane tickets to fly with him to every State in the Union. As one of his secretaries, she had an unusually interesting summer campaigning with him all over the country. She wrote his letters on a typewriter balanced on her lap as they soared over peaks and valleys.

Miss O'Daniel was in Washington last week for the wedding of Miss Lois Jameson to Mr. Thomas Eliot, general counsel of the Social Securities Board. She is now back at committee headquarters in Chicago, and will not return to Washington until after November 3, or, as she puts it, until "after Landon is elected."

In addition to being a graduate of Smith College, Miss O'Daniel attended the Geneva School of International Studies in Switzerland. Quite a favorite school with Washingtonians, incidentally. Mr. Isaac Stokes, son of Canon and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, and Miss Caroline Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Huston Thompson, are among those who have taken courses there at one time or another.

Mr. Gerard Swope, jr., son of the General Electric tycoon, rides to work on the trolley car! A young New Dealer, he has a position in the local department of the Securities and Exchange division, and lives with Mrs. Swope and their young child in a charming but unpretentious house in Georgetown.



Albert Stephan, Of D. C., to Wed

Son of D. E. Stephan and Katherine Hart, Oregon, to Marry Shortly.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Hart, of Portland, Oreg., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Katharine Hart, to Mr. Albert E. Stephan, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Stephan, of Washington. The wedding will take place this winter.

Miss Hart is a graduate of St. Helen's Hall and Mills College in California. She is a member of the Junior League.

Mr. Stephan attended the Force School and was graduated from Wesleyan University and Harvard Law School. He is a member of Alpha Delta Phi and the University Club. He is formerly of Washington, but is now located in Portland.

Miss Mary Agnes Young To Make Debut Dec. 5

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Russell Young will present their daughter, Miss Mary Agness Young, at a tea dance at the Mayflower on Saturday, December 5. Miss Young is a graduate of Sweet Briar College and also of Holton Arms and this winter she plans to continue the study of French and Spanish.

Miss Katharine McKane, who was presented in Washington last season by her mother, Mrs. J. P. McKane, is entertaining at luncheon for the season's debutantes on November 17 instead of November 5 at the Mayflower.

Mr. Schneeman, Miss Leith Wed In Church Rite

Family, Friends Attend Reception in Home After Ceremony.

All Souls' Memorial Episcopal Church was the scene of the wedding at 4:30 p. m. yesterday of Miss Mary Elizabeth Leith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fenton F. Leith, to Mr. Theodore Schneeman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward W. Schneeman. The Rev. H. H. D. Sterrett performed the ceremony, which was followed by a reception for relatives and friends of the two families at the home of the bride's parents, 3101 Macomb street.

The church was decorated with palms, chrysanthemums and autumn leaves. The bride who was given in marriage by her father, wore a Lanvin model of white satin made on princess lines with corded cuffs and Elizabethan collar. Her double-tier circular veil fell from a cap of net trimmed with orange blossoms and bands of bridal satin, and around her neck she wore an old family heirloom of pearls. Her bouquet was of Madonna lilies and white bouvardia.

Mrs. James Marvin Masters, jr., of Quantico, Va., was matron of honor, wearing a rust-colored silk moire frock with puffed sleeves and a full skirt. Her velvet halo hat was of a slight deeper shade than the dress and she carried a bouquet of yellow and bronze chrysanthemums.

The bridesmaids were Mrs. George S. Denton and Mrs. J. Carlisle Ruddy. Their dresses and hats, of a soft shade of green, were made like that of the matron of honor, and they carried large bronze colored chrysanthemums.

Mr. Orman Schneeman, brother of the bridegroom, was best man, and the ushers were Mr. William Leith, the bride's brother; Mr. George S. Denton, Mr. Paul Rugerri and Mr. Herman Garavalla, of Herrin, Ill.

As her going away costume the bride chose a dark green two-piece suit with a red fox collar, with which she wore accessories to match. After a wedding trip through the North, the young couple will reside at 3911 W street in Glover Park.

Mrs. Schneeman was graduated from the National Cathedral School for Girls and her husband attended Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa.

Make Home Here.

Admiral Joseph J. Cheatham, U. S. N. retired, and Mrs. Cheatham have taken an apartment at the Wardman Park Hotel where they will make their home for the coming season.

Embassies and Legations in Capital Begin the Winter Season's Entertainments Early

Fail to Wait White House Social Plans

Senor Trucco and Najeras Will Be Hosts Today for Visiting Riders.

Mr. Romm Is Honored by Mr. Troyanovsky at Embassy Party.

Embassies and legations usually wait for Mrs. Roosevelt to announce her social schedule before making many plans for parties, but this fall they are giving several large entertainments before such an announcement is forthcoming. This is partly because such important events as the recent Power Conference and the Inter-American Horse Show have been the occasion for several large parties given by members of the diplomatic corps.

This afternoon the Ambassador of Chile, Senor Don Manuel Trucco, will entertain at a tea at the embassy in honor of members of the Chilean Army team. The tea is from 6 to 7:30, as the guests of honor will be competing until late in the afternoon in final events of the show.

The Mexican Ambassador and Senora de Castillo Najera will honor members of all three competing teams, at a reception this evening. Yesterday the Ambassador, at a ceremony at the embassy, conferred the decoration and diploma of the Mexican Association of Military Surgeons on Col. Harold Wellington Jones, Col. James Douglas Fife and Maj. Albert Dabney.

Father to Give Luncheon.

Entertaining in diplomatic circles will by no means cease, however, with the close of the horse show today. The German Ambassador, Herr Hans Luther, is planning a small luncheon tomorrow for Herr Schuengel and Herr Neumann, both officials of the North German Lloyd. Mme. Peter, wife of the Minister of Switzerland, entertained at a small luncheon yesterday at the legation on Kalorama road.

The Soviet Ambassador, Mr. Alexander Troyanovsky, was host at the embassy yesterday at a farewell luncheon in honor of Mr. Vladimir Romm, Washington correspondent of the Moscow Izvestia. The luncheon was attended by a group of American and foreign newspaper correspondents who have been closely associated with Mr. Romm during his work here, and members of the embassy staff. Mr. Romm has been assigned by Izvestia to London and he and Mrs. Romm will sail for his new post the latter part of next week, leaving Washington on Monday.

Mr. Romm came to Washington shortly after this Government recognized the Soviet regime in 1933. With a wide background in foreign affairs he came here after serving his newspaper in Tokyo and at Geneva and has become one of the most popular of the foreign correspondents in Washington. His unexpected transfer to London has caused deep regret in the corps of Washington correspondents.

Senora Chevalier Feted.

Many parties have been given this week for Senora de Chevalier, wife of the retiring secretary of the Panamanian legation. Today Dr. and Mrs. Tomas Cajigas are entertaining in her honor, and yesterday Mrs. J. G. Lewis, who is herself a native of Panama, gave a luncheon for Senora de Chevalier.

Mrs. Lewis' guests were Senora de Castillo Najera, wife of the Mexican Ambassador; Mme. Alfaro, wife of the Ambassador of Ecuador; Senora de Recinos, wife of the Minister of Guatemala; Senora de Castro, wife of the Minister of El Salvador; Senora de Pastoriza, wife of the Minister of the Dominican Republic; Senora de Boyd, wife of the Minister of Panama; Senora de DeBayle, wife of the Charge d'Affaires of Nicaragua; Senora de Fombona, wife of the Counselor of the Venezuelan Legation; Senora de Guardia, wife of the new secretary of the Panamanian Legation; Senora P. Sossa, sister-in-law of the Ecuadorian Ambassador; Mrs. Oscar Albertini, with her niece, Miss Beba Montero; Mrs. D. Mack Innis, Mrs. Allan Dawson, Senora Maria Arias, sister of Senora de Chevalier, Mrs. C. Lloyd, Mrs. Clarence Grosner, Mrs. Mark Shapiro, Senora Juan Davila, Mrs. James Moran and Mrs. William Perricelli.

With the arrival of fall, many of the diplomats are settled in new homes for the winter. The Counselor of the Danish Legation and Mme. Eickhoff have leased a house at 2146 Wyoming avenue.

An attractive addition to Washington society is Miss Willa Magee, daughter of Lieut. Col. and Mrs. A. A. Magee, of Montreal, who is spending the winter with Lady Marler, wife of the newly arrived Canadian Minister.

Ambassador From Italy Takes Box for Concert

The Ambassador of Italy, Signor Fulvio Suvich, has taken a box for the opening concert this afternoon of the National Symphony Orchestra, at which Tito Schipa, the tenor of the Metropolitan Opera, will be soloist.

Mme. Saito, wife of the Japanese Ambassador, is another member of the diplomatic corps to have taken a box for the entire eseason.

"Politics" spelled with an enormous "P" is the leading topic in Washington drawing rooms. Always interested in political happenings, because statecraft is the foremost industry of the National Capital, this voteless town follows every sign of the times with unabating attention.

"If" is a potent word in the discussion, of course, especially when the chances of a change in administration are the theme. Word comes that many Washington hostesses are delaying their return here to put in a few more strokes for their favorite candidates. The Capital heard the other day that former Representative Ruth Hanna McCormick Simms was in the East, having left her ranch in New Mexico to campaign for Landon.

There is no more indefatigable political mind in the United States than that of Mrs. Simms. She was cradled in the atmosphere of politics, for her father, the late Senator Mark Hanna, of Ohio, was in the front line of Republican activities for many years. Better still, Mrs. Simms is a splendid speaker. A worker for women's causes for many years, she knows how to reach the masses and has been doing yeoman service for the Republican Party in Ohio, her native State.

While there Mrs. Simms was a guest for part of the time of Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, widow of the former Speaker, at Rookwood, in Cincinnati, and Mrs. Longworth accompanied her to Columbus and Dayton when Mrs. Simms spoke to large meetings in both those cities.

Now she is busy with another speaking program in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York. It is expected, at the close of the campaign, that she will come to Washington for a few days on the way back to her home in New Mexico, where she will pass the winter.

If Landon is elected President there is every reason to believe Mrs. Simms will be offered one of the big posts for women available in his Administration. Such a choice would meet with approval from the women of the country.

In paying tribute to Mrs. Archibald Hopkins for inspiring the Washington slum clearance plan, which has had a happy conclusion in the erection of low-priced housing in London court, the first unit to be known as "Charlotte Hopkins Place," there was recalled the interest of Miss Isabel MacDonald, daughter of Ramsay MacDonald, in this project.

During her brief visit to Washington with her father some years ago, Miss MacDonald expressed a desire to go through the Washington alleys and to be shown the plans for their rehabilitation. Miss MacDonald, a leading social service worker in Great Britain, takes time off from society functions in her trips to inspect ventures for improvement in low-cost housing.

Glowing accounts have come from a Washington woman, now the wife of the chief of Clan McNeil, in Barra, Scotland, of the welcome accorded them when they arrived there on their honeymoon. She is the former Mrs. Frederick Hicks, whose marriage to Mr. Robert Lister McNeil, forty-fifth chief of the Clan McNeil, was a leading event in Washington in the early fall.

When the McNeils arrived on the historic island the entire population was there to welcome them in a Highland home-coming with many picturesque features. Pipers played native Barra airs as the reception committee greeted The McNeil and his bride.

As the Lochearn, the vessel on which the McNeils were traveling, neared the pier at Castlebay, the assembled crowd set up a cheer that resounded through the hills while the pipers lustily played "The Road to the Isles." The ship's siren added its bit to the musical medley. At the dinner that night the King and President Roosevelt were the subject of toasts. Speeches were made in both English and Gaelic.

Later in their visit, the honeymooners visited Kismul Castle, the ancient stronghold of the McNeils, now a noble ruin rising from the waters of the bay.

It was an emotional moment for McNeil, of Barra, for, as the pipes playing "McNeil's Welcome" echoed through the ruins as he led his American bride through the old castle ruins, it was as if for a fleeting moment the spirit of the past had been recaptured.

Mrs. Calvin Coolidge's interest in photography, which still endures, dates back to the days when, as wife of the Vice President she and her two sons, John Coolidge and the late Calvin Coolidge, jr., would start out armed with cameras to take unusual views of Washington. There was keen rivalry among the three, and when the films were developed there was something of a photographic exhibition in the Coolidge Vice Presidential suite in the New Willard, with Mr. Coolidge as the arbiter and judge.

When Mrs. Coolidge was in the White House she always kept a camera at hand and among the most valuable collections of pictures of Presidents and people are those snapshots taken by the former First Lady.

After the death of young Calvin Coolidge in the White House, Mrs. Coolidge collected many pictures she had made of him studying, swimming and walking and engaged in other pursuits, and hung them in the room once occupied by him. Friends heard of the collection and added to it. One day Mrs. Coolidge was sitting in this room knitting and chatting with friends when there arrived a photograph of young Calvin on the famous bicycle he earned by his own efforts while his father was Governor of Massachusetts.

It was so nicely framed that Mrs. Coolidge, without waiting for a nail and hammer, took off her shoe, and, using its high French heel, drove a tack in where she wanted the picture to hang and put it there herself.

Sarah Withers Becomes Bride Of D. A. Currie

Wedding Ceremony Held in Presbyterian Church in Davidson, N. C.

The Presbyterian Church at Davidson, N. C., was the scene of a beautiful wedding last evening at 8 o'clock, when Miss Sarah Bell Withers became the bride of Mr. Daniel Allan Currie, of Fayetteville, N. C., and Washington.

The church was simply decorated with white chrysanthemums and tapers used amid palms and smilax.

Prior to the ceremony, performed by Dr. C. M. Richards, Mrs. Guy R. Vowles and Miss Dorothy Finlayson sang, accompanied at the organ by Mrs. T. H. Watkins.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, Mr. J. R. Withers. She wore a wedding gown of white satin, made princess style with a train and long pointed sleeves. Her long veil was caught with orange blossoms and her flowers were a shower bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley.

Serving as bridesmaids were the Misses Adele Arbuckle, Lucy Currie and Jane Leighton Richards, of Davidson; Miss Elizabeth Shipman, of Brevard, N. C.; Miss Ida Currie, of Clarkton, N. C., and Mrs. J. T. Richardson, of Raleigh, N. C. They wore velvet gowns in autumn colors and carried arm bouquets of chrysanthemums, tied in contrasting shades of tulle. Miss Mary Withers, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. She wore green velvet and carried an arm bouquet of chrysanthemums.

Mr. Currie had as his best man his brother, Mr. Duncan B. Currie, jr., of Fayetteville. Ushers were Mr. J. M. Currie and Mr. Bailey Evans, jr., of Fayetteville; Mr. James Withers, brother of the bride; Mr. C. R. Hunter, of Blenheim, S. C., and Mr. C. C. Clark and Mr. D. M. Calhoun, of Elizabethtown, N. C.

After the ceremony, an informal reception for members of the wedding party and out-of-town guests was held at the home of the bride. Later, Mr. and Mrs. Currie left for a short wedding trip. After November 1 the young couple will be at home at 819 Riggs place, Washington.

Mrs. Currie is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Withers, of Davidson. She received her education at Converse College and after graduation taught for a short time. For the past year she has held a position in the Soil Conservation Service in Washington.

Mr. Currie is the son of Mr. Duncan Black Currie and the late Mrs. Currie, of Fayetteville, N. C. He was graduated from Davidson College, then attended law school at the University of North Carolina and George Washington University. At present he is in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in Washington.

Miss Lois Walters Wed to Mr. Robert R. Coker in National Baptist Memorial Church

Bride Given By Father, Federal Aid

Official and Resident Society Present at Ceremony.

Young Couple Departs on Trip; Will Live in Hartsville.

In the presence of a large number of members of official and resident society, Miss Lois Walters, daughter of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Theodore A. Walters, was married at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon to Mr. Robert R. Coker, of Hartsville, S. C. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. David R. Coker, of Hartsville and the late Mrs. Coker. His stepmother is the former Miss Margaret May Roper, daughter of the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper.

The ceremony took place at the National Baptist Memorial Church, the Rev. Rufus W. Weaver officiating. The church was decorated for the occasion with white chrysanthemums, ferns, and palms, and was lighted by white candles.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of ivory satin made on princess lines with a redingote of Chantilly lace and satin. There were small satin buttons from the collar to the train of her gown, and inserts of lace trimmed the sides of her satin coat, which fell into a five-yard train. Her long, full veil was held in place by a Stuart cap of lace and tulle caught on either side with orange blossoms, and she carried a shower bouquet of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Sister Is Attendant.

Mrs. Robert T. Van Uden, the bride's sister, was matron of honor and her only attendant. She wore a gown of rose leaf slipper satin with a long full skirt and short puffed sleeves and a wreath of fresh flowers in her hair. She carried a shower bouquet of Lady Diana roses.

Mr. Robert Shand, of Hartsville, was best man and the ushers were Mr. Robert T. Van Uden and Mr. Richard F. Roper, of Washington; Mr. Charles Edward, of Darlington, S. C., Mr. Richard Coker and Mr. James Coker, of Hartsville, cousins of the bridegroom, and Mr. Herndon Fair, of Columbia, S. C.

Immediately following the ceremony there was a reception at the Hotel Roosevelt, where the bride's parents make their home. Mrs. Walters, the bride's mother, wore a gown of blue chiffon and lace with a hat of the same shade and a corsage of white orchids.

Depart for South.

After the reception Mr. Coker and his bride left for Miami, whence they will go by plane to Havana and Nassau. The bride wore as her traveling costume a wool suit in a raspberry shade with a dark blue hat and accessories of dark blue. After November 15 they will be at home in Hartsville.

Among the out-of-town guests at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. David Coker, of Hartsville, and their three daughters, the Misses Martha, Caroline and Mary Coker, all of whom are visiting the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Roper.

The bride attended Mills College, in California, and was graduated from both the University of California and the University of Idaho. She is a member of Delta Gamma sorority and, for the past three years, has been head of the history department at the Arlington Hall Junior College for Girls. Originally from Boise, Idaho, she and her family have been living in Washington for three and one-half years.

Mr. Coker is a graduate of the University of South Carolina.

Virginia Hall Is Wed Here To Indianan

Chevy Chase Girl Bride of Mr. Ruckelshaus at Walter Reed.

Will Make Their Home in Indianapolis After Wedding Trip.

One of the most important events in Chevy Chase this season was the wedding yesterday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock of Miss Virginia Hampton Hall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Hall, of Chevy Chase, to Mr. Thomas Frederick Ruckelshaus, son of Mr. John C. Ruckelshaus, of Indianapolis. The ceremony took place at Walter Reed Chapel, the Rev. Patrick J. Ryan officiating.

The bride's gown was of white satin with a tunic, to which was attached a long train. Her white tulle veil was pleated at the hem and held on either side of her head with orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of gardenias and lilies of the valley. Her father gave her in marriage.

The matron of honor was Mrs. Richard Kenney, of Baltimore. She wore a yellow moire frock made with puffed sleeves and a standing collar, with a small net hat to match.

The bridesmaids were Mrs. Conrad Ruckelshaus and Mrs. Stuart Blish, of Indianapolis, and Miss Marjorie Garland and Mrs. Merrill Clementson, of Washington. They wore frocks of chartreuse moire made like that of the matron of honor, and matching hats.

Mr. Conrad Ruckelshaus, the bridegroom's brother, was best man. The ushers were Mr. Burford Danner, Mr. Russell Fortune, jr., Mr. Thomas Kackley, Mr. John Ruckelshaus, another brother, and Mr. Thomas Madden, all of Indianapolis, and Mr. John Adams, of New York.

Following the ceremony there was a reception at the home of the bride's parents at 4 East Kirke street. The rooms were decorated with white chrysanthemums against a background of ferns and palms.

Among the out-of-town guests at the wedding were Mr. Robert Hasler and Mr. Stuart Iglehart, of Westbury, Long Island; Mrs. O. N. Tevander, of Chicago; Mrs. E. M. Pendleton and Miss Polly Dyer, of Ventnor, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. N. T. Kenney and Mrs. Taylor Kenney, of Baltimore; Col. and Mrs. F. D. Munnikhuysen, of Fort Meade, and Mr. and Mrs. Stuart C. Rosson, of Baltimore.

Immediately after the reception Mr. and Mrs. Ruckelshaus left for a wedding trip, the bride wearing a black suit with silver fox cape and a black antelope hat. They will reside in Indianapolis.

The bride attended the Baldwin School in Philadelphia and Holton Arms in Washington. The bridegroom attended Notre Dame University.

Annual 'Tacky' Ball Features Gay 90's

The spirit of the gay 90's will prevail at the annual "tacky" ball Saturday night at the Mayflower. The party was inaugurated eight years ago by Mrs. William Laird Dunlop, jr., and the fact that it falls on Halloween night this year will make it even more festive.

Many post-debutantes and debutantes will impersonate characters from Margaret Mitchell's book, "Gone With the Wind." All guests at the ball will be masked. Prizes will be awarded for the best costumes. The ball starts promptly at 10 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Scott Watson are entertaining at a cocktail party before the ball, with Dr. and Mrs. J. C. Barkley, of Philadelphia, as honor guests.

D. C. Girl Is Wed To Marylander

Miss Mary Blanche Gardiner, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Simms Gardiner, of Washington, was married at 10 o'clock yesterday morning to Mr. Eugene S. Burroughs jr., son of Mrs. Eugene Burroughs, of Odenton, Md. The wedding took place at the Shrine of the Sacred Heart Church, the Rev. John S. Spence officiating, and was followed by a reception at the home of the bride's mother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Schum.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. Joseph Cecil Gardiner, wore a gown of sapphire blue velvet with a matching turban. She carried a bouquet of Johanna Hill roses. Her only attendant was Miss Naomi V. Carrico, who wore a cinnabar red velvet frock with a red turban and carried talisman roses.

Mr. J. Armistead Burroughs served as his brother's best man, and the ushers were Mr. Joseph Burroughs and Mr. Dwight Burroughs, brothers of the bridegroom; Mr. Reeves Blandford, Mr. Edwin M. Gardiner jr., Mr. Francis J. Howard and Mr. Eugene Summers.

Mr. Burroughs and his bride left after the reception for a wedding trip to New York by motor. They will be at home December 1 in Odenton.

Miss Eleanor Montgomery Wed To Mr. M. G. Cameron at Orange

Many Washington Residents Attend Ceremony at St. Thomas' Church; the Bride Is Granddaughter of the Late Gen. Fitzhugh Lee.

Many residents of Washington were present yesterday afternoon at the wedding of Miss Eleanor Bernard Montgomery, daughter of Col. and Mrs. John Carter Montgomery of Bronxville, N. Y., to Mr. Malcolm Graham Cameron, which took place at St. Thomas Church in Orange, Va. The bride attended Holton Arms School in Washington, and is a granddaughter of the late Gen. Fizhugh Lee, one-time Governor of Virginia, and a great-great-niece of Robert E. Lee. Mr. Cameron is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Barton Haxall Cameron, of Inverness, Gordonsville, Va.

The Rev. Henry Erving Batcheller performed the ceremony, assisted by the Rev. John Ryley. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of ivory chiffon velvet made on princess lines with a rose point lace veil, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley.

Miss Virginia Lee Montgomery served as her sister's maid of honor, wearing a frock of ivory chiffon velvet and carrying white chrysanthemums. The bridesmaids were the Misses Marjorie Harrison, Jean Seagrove, Jessie Sloan, Betty Lu McBride and Sally Johnson. Their gowns were of ivory chiffon fashioned like monks' robes, and they wore monks' caps and carried altar candles.

Mr. Clifford Ziegler was best man. Ushers were Mr. Henry Lee Montgomery, the bride's brother; Mr. Egbert Leigh 3d, Mr. Alexander Cameron 3d, Mr. Heron Crosman, Mr. Wesley O'Neill and Mr. Edward Strange.

After the ceremony there was a reception at Piedmont, the home of Mrs. Egbert Leigh. The house was decorated with chrysanthemums, gladioli and dahlias.

After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Cameron left on a trip to Bermuda and Nassau. Upon their return they will reside in Warrenton, Va., until December 1, going then to Fort Myers, Fla.

Among the out-of-town guests at the wedding were Dr. and Mrs. Louis Greene and their daughter, Miss Anne Carter Greene; Mrs. David W. Taylor, of Washington, and Mrs. Harry Cootes and her daughter, Miss Mary Cootes, of Alexandria.

Cruger Daughters Expect Big Thrill At Halloween Fete

A real American Halloween party such as they have often heard their mother describe promises more of a thrill than the historic sights of Washington for Andrea and Dorothy Cruger, daughters of the United States Consul to Funchal, Madiera, and Mrs. Alec Cruger. The girls are here with their mother for a week on their way to California, where they will visit Mrs. Cruger's mother.

Mrs. George Douglas, of Alexandria, is entertaining at a Halloween party for her young son next Saturday night and Andrea, who is 13, and Dorothy, 10, are to be among the guests.

Dorothy was born in Italy and this is the first time she has been in her own country. Both girls are better acquainted with the foreign posts in which their father has been stationed than they are with the United States and its customs. They have always been eager to be present at a party on Halloween, with bobbing for apples and the other exciting games of which their mother has told them, and their visit here at this season gives them the opportunity.

One American custom Mrs. Cruger has carried to her homes abroad is that of an Easter egg hunt, which she has planned for her children and their friends every Easter season. Last spring, in Funchal, children of seven nationalities participated.

She and her daughters arrived in New York about ten days ago on the Pennland and spent some time there before coming to Washington. They have many friends in the Capital.

W. A. Smith Marries Dorothy Anderson

The wedding of Miss Dorothy Mae Anderson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel L. Anderson, of Washington, to Mr. William A. Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman S. Smith, was solemnized last evening at 7 o'clock in St. Alban's Church. The Rev. Charles T. Warner performed the ceremony.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a white satin gown with a lace redingote which extended into a long train. Her long tulle veil fell from a coronet cap and she carried a bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley.

Her only attendant was her sister, Mrs. Thomas J. Norris, who wore a gown of apple green satin with a velvet and maline hat of the same shade. She carried talisman roses. Mr. Norris served as best man.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith will reside at 2223 Thirty-eighth street.

Mrs. Merrill Returns.

Mrs. Keith Merrill will return to Washington today from a stay in Virginia.

Newspaper Women Arrange for Party

Halloween Celebration at Club Saturday.

The Newspaper Women's Club plans a Halloween party for members and their friends at the headquarters, 1640 Rhode Island avenue, next Saturday evening.

Two well-known fortune tellers will be on hand. There will also be bobbing for apples, dancing, toasting marshmallows over the open fireplaces at the club and other appropriate festivities.

Many of the guests will dress in tacky attire, and prizes will be awarded for the best costumes.

Hope Ridings Miller, chairman of the entertainment committee, is arranging the party, assisted by Mrs. Ned Brunson Harris, secretary; Mrs. Lillian Arthur and Miss Katherine Brooks, chairmen of the house committee. They are aided by Mrs. Mary Allen.

Two Weddings Furnish Busy Day for Colony at U. S. Naval Academy, Annapolis

Adm. Sellers, Wife Hold Second 'At Home' of Year

Comdr. Weems, Family Arrive From European Trip Where Air Navigation Expert Worked on New Book; Comdr. Walton Home After Visit.

Special Dispatch to The Post

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 24.—Wednesday of this week was a busy day for Annapolis society with two large Navy weddings and a reception at the superintendent's house crowded into a few hours.

Both weddings took place in the Naval Academy Chapel, which has never looked lovelier than it did then with palms banked behind the altar and at its sides, the chancel rail outlined by masses of ferns, and bouquets of white flowers on the altar. Large clusters of white dahlias were tied with white maline bows to every other pew along the main aisle.

The wedding of Miss Katharine Philbrick, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Manning H. Philbrick, to Lieut. Charles K. Bergin, U. S. N., took place at 5 p. m. Chaplain Edward A. Duff, of Washington, officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of ivory satin, with a seed pearl collar. Her voluminous tulle veil was held in place by a cap of rose point lace, and she carried a shower bouquet of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Miss Jeanette Philbrick, her sister's only attendant, wore a gown of rose taffeta, with a hat of maline and velvet in the same shade. Her bouquet was of pink roses and delphinium.

Capt. E. C. Dyer, U. S. M. C., was best man, and ushers included: Lieuts. H. L. Tallman, G. B. H. Stallings, E. H. Pope, G. W. Wilcox, jr., D. B. Young and Leo W. Nilon. The bride and groom left the altar beneath an arch made by the crossed swords of the ushers.

The service was followed by a reception at the quarters of Capt. and Mrs. Philbrick on the naval reservation. After a wedding trip, Lieut. and Mrs. Bergin will live in Washington.

At 7 p. m. Miss Elizabeth Compton Nicols, daughter of Mrs. George Baynard Nicols and the late Mr. Nicols, was married to Lieut. Joseph Eugene Michael Wood, U. S. N., at a formal military wedding. Chaplain William N. Thomas, of the Naval Academy, officiated.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. John Lloyd Nicols. Her gown was of white satin with which she wore a trailing veil of Duchesse lace, with a coronet in front and a spray of orange blossoms holding the back fullness. Her shower bouquet was of roses and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. H. D. Baker, her sister's matron of honor, wore red velvet, a gold mesh cap and gold slippers. Two other sisters of the bride, Mrs. Thomas Irving Hall, of New York, and Mrs. John Robert Grove, of Washington, were bridesmaids. Their gowns were of sapphire blue velvet.

Three of the bride's nieces acted as flower girls. The Baker twins—Virginia and Elizabeth—and Susan Pendleton Grove, of Washington, wore Kate Greenaway models of Alice blue moire and carried old-fashioned nosegays of pink roses.

Lieut. H. D. Baker, U. S. N., brother-in-law of the bride, was best man, and ushers were Lieut. Comdr. Elmer Kiehl, Lieuts. Bradford Bartlett, Richard G. McCool, John M. McIsaac, and Leo W. Nilon, and Capt. Thomas B. Jordan, U. S. M. C.

Mrs. Nicols, mother of the bride, was gowned in fuchsia velvet, with a spray of pink orchids.

After the wedding, a supper for the family and a few close friends was held at Carvel Hall. Lieut. and Mrs. Wood then left for a wedding trip. They will reside later at 269 Hanover street.

A large crowd enjoyed the reception given Wednesday by Admiral and Mrs. Sellers, their second "at home" of the season. The ladies assisting included Mrs. Edgar L. Woods, Mrs. Theodore T. Patterson, Mrs. Harold V. McKittrick, Mrs. James E. Maher, Mrs. George V. Stewart, Mrs. Wade DeWeese, Mrs. Lewis B. McBride, Mrs. W. Taylor Smith, Mrs. DeWitt Carr, Mrs. W. W. Smith, Mrs. Paul R. Glutting, Mrs. Robert Brownlee, Mrs. William J. Millican, Mrs. Albert L. Toney, Mrs. Walter C. Ansel, Mrs. James P. Clay, and Mrs. Benton W. Decker.

Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Philip Van Horn Weems, and their daughter, Miss Margaret Weems, returned Thursday after five months spent abroad. They came on the Queen Mary, landing in New York Monday.

Comdr. Duncan Cameron Walton, Medical Corps, U. S. N., has arrived from England, where he had been visiting his sister, Mrs. Mordon Rigg. He was the guest of another sister, Miss Margaret Cameron Walton. Mrs. Walton will join Commander Walton here in about two weeks.

Mrs. Alexander M. Tyree entertained at tea this afternoon in honor of her aunt, Mrs. Caro Cameron, of Mobile, Ala.

Cadets Give First Dance At Staunton

Military Academy Scene of Informal Event on Saturday.

Alumnae Tea Is Held at Stuart Hall; Kings Are Visitors.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Staunton, Va., Oct. 24.—Colleges and schools here each fall have their influence on social activities, especially the dances which continue throughout the school term.

The first informal dance of this term was held Saturday under the auspices of the Cotillion Club of Staunton Military Academy.

Guests included young women from Mary Baldwin College, Stuart Hall and patrons and friends of the school. More than two hundred dancers made the occasion one of the largest held on "The Hill" for several years.

One of the most delightful events of the autumn season was the alumnae tea held at Stuart Hall Thursday, when the principal, Miss Ophelia S. T. Carr, and members of the faculty were at home to members of the local chapter and nearby towns. Receiving with Miss Carr were Miss Elsie Lanier, dean of the school; Miss Mary Alexander Opie, president of the Alumnae Association; Miss Jessie Mae Cover, secretary; Miss Mary Ann Valz, treasurer; the Rev. J. Lewis Gibbs, chaplain, and Mrs. Gibbs, together with members of the faculty.

Sportsman Completes Trip.

Capt. Ben King, noted sportsman-pilot, and Mrs. King are guests of Maj. and Mrs. E. M. Brown at their home near Endless Caverns. Capt. King has just returned from a 6,000-mile flight to the Pacific and back. He was accompanied by his wife, Mrs. Marjorie Brown King, of Washington, who is a sister of Maj. Brown.

Mr. and Mrs. P. O. Cline, of Stuarts Draft, Va., announce the marriage of their daughter, Mary Lou, to Mr. Charles Justin Hindley, of Lansdale, R. I. The ceremony took place yesterday at the home of the bride's parents. After the reception, Mr. and Mrs. Hindley left for New York City, whence they sailed for a ten-day trip to Bermuda. On their return they will be at home in Lansdale, R. I. Among out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hindley and Mr. Frazier Thornley, of Rhode Island, and Dr. William K. Hennessey, of Washington.

Invitations recently received here have created much interest. "Mr. and Mrs. Oscar F. Bravo, of Puerto Rico, invite you to the marriage of their daughter, Raquel, to Rynaldo Barletta, on Thursday, October 22, at 11 o'clock a. m. in the chapel of Our Lady Cathedral of San Patriclo, New York."

Mr. and Mrs. Bravo have made frequent visits to Staunton, while their daughter attended Mary Baldwin College and their son Staunton Military Academy.

Tinkling Spring Presbyterian Church was the scene of the wedding last Saturday of Miss Laura Virginia Hammond and Mr. John R. Schindel, of Washington. After the wedding an informal reception was held at the manse. Mr. and Mrs. Schindel, after their wedding trip, will make their home in Hagerstown, Md.

Mr. and Mrs. N. A. Michael, of Mount Solon, announce the marriage of their daughter, Mary Catherine, to Mr. Horace Vernon Cox, last Sunday at the Church of the Brethren in Bridgewater. Following the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Cox left for Washington, where they will make their home.

Margaret Brady and Theodore D. Pimper Marry in St. Stephen's Church at Chevy Chase

Newlyweds Open Home In Bethesda

Residence of Couple Is Scene of Reception After Ceremony.

Halloween Parties Are Center of Interest for Bethesdans.

Chevy Chase, Md., Oct. 24.—An interesting wedding of today, uniting two Chevy Chase families, was that of Miss Margaret Edmund Brady, daughter of Mrs. Edmund Brady and the late Mr. Brady, of East avenue, and Mr. Theodore Denham Pimper. Mr. Pimper is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Pimper, long-time residents of Primrose street.

The ceremony took place at 4 o'clock, in St. Stephen's and the Incarnation Church, with the Rev. George F. Dudley performing the ceremony. The bride, who was escorted by her brother-in-law, Mr. Robert S. Hinton, was given in marriage by her mother. She wore a gown of white moire, with draped bodice finished with a ruff at the neckline, and leg-o'-mutton sleeves. Her finger tip veil of tulle fell from a Juliet cap of pearls. Her flowers were white gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Hinton, who was matron of honor for her sister, wore a soft blue moire gown fashioned along princess lines and an off-the-face bonnet of the moire. She carried pink and white chrysanthemums. The bridesmaids were Mrs. Robert Callahan, of Baltimore, a sister of the bride; Mrs. Dean F. Jordan, of Hampton, Va.; Miss Margaret M. Kline and Mrs. Donald A. Deane, both of Chevy Chase. Their dresses were fashioned like that of the matron of honor, but were in old rose.

The best man was Mr. James L. Pimper, and ushers included another brother, Mr. Charles W. Pimper, jr., Mr. John G. Simpson, Mr. Donald C. Bradley and Mr. Luther V. Winstead.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the home which the bride and bridegroom have ready in Woodhaven, just off Bradley boulevard in Bethesda. They were assisted in receiving by Mrs. Brady, who wore an afternoon dress of violet velvet with matching hat, and by Mr. and Mrs. Pimper.

The bride traveled in a brown wool dress with topcoat of forest green and accessories of brown. Mr. and Mrs. Pimper will be at home after November 1.

Parties of the Week.

Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Yohe entertained at a dinner party followed by bridge, Saturday. Another party of the week was given Sunday by Mr. and Mrs. James V. Bennett. Tonight Mr. and Mrs. Albert A. Dietrich are entertaining at dinner and bridge at their home on McKinley street. Next Wednesday evening, Mrs. David K. Robinson will entertain at dinner and bridge in honor of Mr. Robinson's birthday. Commander and Mrs. G. R. O'Connor entertained at dinner last night, when their guests were the friends of their young daughter.

The rector and Mrs. Henry Teller Cocke have their daughter, Mrs. Nathaniel Barker, of Philadelphia, as a guest this week-end. Lieut. Barker is now stationed at the League Island Navy Yard. The Cockes will be hosts at dinner Wednesday, when they entertain for Mr. and Mrs. George McNeir, of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. William McNeir, of Washington.

Miss Mary Sleman spent the week in Philadelphia, staying part of the time with Mrs. Carl Michelet. Mr. and Mrs. William L. Orem, jr., returned yesterday from New York. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Perry have also returned after a visit with their daughter, Mrs. Charles Hal Dayhuff, and Capt. Dayhuff at Culver Military Academy in Indiana. Mrs. Marvin Farrington and her daughter, Edith, also are among those returning home this week. The Farringtons have been in Freiburg, Me., since June. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Cheatham, who had been in California for the past two months, also have returned.

Bethesda Is Center Of Halloween Fun.

In Bethesda this week the center of interest is in Halloween. Festivities began with a masquerade dance given by the Rendezvous Club, Monday, at the Battery Park Club, with Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Barkley as hosts. The Battery Park Citizens' Association has planned a masquerade party for children Friday afternoon. It will be followed by a dinner dance in the evening for the grown-ups.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Emmert Beall, of Edgemoor, are receiving congratulations on the birth of a son.

Mrs. James L. Fleser was hostess at luncheon and bridge Wednesday. She entertained her guests at the A. A. U. W. on Wednesday last.

Miss Margaret Wohlgemuth, Grand Martha of the General Grand Chapter, Eastern Star of Maryland, and Most Worthy Grand Patron Duvall, of the General Grand Chapter of Maryland, will be honor guests at the meeting of the Noami Chapter, Eastern Star, Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Leon S. Stead, of Montgomery Lane, have Miss Caroline Foster, of South Carolina, as their guest.

Washington Bachelors Are Proficient In an Interesting Variety of Hobbies

Harris & Ewing. CAPT. WILLIAM RITCHIE.

Underwood & Underwood. SENOR DON LEGUIZAMON.

Writing Is the Avocation of Senor Leguizamon in Spare Time.

By Marylyn Reeve.

What an interesting variety of hobbies and sports our Washington bachelors possess! The long list of activities these city dwellers manage to take care of is really surprising.

Senor Don Hector Diaz Leguizamon, attractive First Secretary of the Argentine Embassy, was a welcome addition to the younger diplomatic circle here when he arrived last year. He gets along equally well with both sides of the diplomatic set. His tours of duty in Norway, Denmark and Sweden and his own state department have provided the necessary qualifications for serious discussions and negotiations with the Chiefs of Missions, and his fondness for "doing things" fits in very well with the interests of the younger contingent.

In his more serious moments, when the affairs of state have been all taken care of, Senor Leguizamon frequently turns to his pen and paper and writes. Modestly, he never tells of his writings, and it is only after the utmost questioning or a remark let fall by one of his close friends that one learns of his essays. He has many an article under his name, and several very interesting verses.

He is one person who does not collect stamps or coins or what have you, for a hobby. He considers living life his hobby. Although the young career man does not paint or draw, he is quite a connoisseur of art. He enjoys going to the various museums, slowly prowling through the rooms.

Through his visits to the numerous buildings here and in New York housing paintings and statues, he has realized that there is a great similarity between his country and ours. He believes that this extends into other fields as well as the creative, and that it is more important than most people realize.

* * * *

Capt. William Ritchie is the affable young Army officer who pilots Secretary of War Harry Woodring on his business trips about the country. When not up in the air he has plenty to keep him busy at the office. It would be much simpler to list the activities in which he doesn't take part, because his sports and "doings" are legion. While at West Point he was on the tennis team. Since graduation, however, and after transferring from the Field Artillery to the Air Corps, he has paid more attention to polo than any other sport and, though skilled in the use of the epee, does not find time to fence.

Capt. Bill has been moving around the country so much during the past few years that he has belongings scattered at many points of the compass. His three hunting dogs are divided between Indiana, Oklahoma and Arkansas and two of his horses are "out West." He was one of the lads who when a small child delighted in taking clocks to pieces, and has changed in this respect only in switching from tickers to radios. He always has several radios, each one in a different state of being taken apart or put together.

The flier and his friends are still laughing about the time when he took the captain of the Chanute Field basketball team for a flight. Capt. Ritchie was the coach of the team, which was coming up for the championship game. While playing tag with the clouds, he saw his roommate up for his "daily dozen." Apparently the same idea struck the two officers and a dog fight was the result. This lasted for some time and was capital fun, but, alas, in the excitement of it all, the passenger was completely forgotten. When they landed he was so shaken up by his harrowing experience, he could not play. Thus, Capt. Ritchie, won the dog fight, but the championship game was lost.

The genial Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. J. F. T. O'Connor, has one very strong rival for the title of undisputed chief raconteur of Washington, and that is Joseph Casey, young Congressman from Massachusetts. He is a lawyer by profession and a very good one at that. Several years ago the people of his own little bailiwick insisted upon separating him from his law books and sent him packing off to Washington and "the Hill." He is a golf addict and spends much of his spare time on the links. At present he is up in Massachusetts and will not return to the Capital until after the first week in November anyway.

Middleburg Hunt to Hold Opening Meet of the Season at Benton Saturday Morning

First Day Will Attract Throngs of Sportsmen

Mr., Mrs. James Ball are Guests of Mrs. Roland; Mr., Mrs. Jelke Return to Home in Chicago; Piedmont Master Fixes Nov. 4 Opening Date.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Middleburg, Va., Oct. 24.—Sportsmen from many sections are planning to join the opening meet of the Middleburg Hunt, to be held at Benton at 10 a. m. Saturday. The field is always large on opening day, for many wait for that time to hunt. The hunt will go out regularly every Monday, Thursday and Saturday until the middle of March.

The cubbing meets are too early for many of the fox hunters and the fields are usually small. Those who have been out have enjoyed good sport. On Wednesday the meet was from Hobbs' Bridge.

Those riding were the joint masters, Mr. Sands and Miss Noland; Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Hulbert, Mrs. McMann, Miss Rosemary Ward, Miss Eleanor Mackubin, Miss Laura Sprague, Mr. Roger Fred and several grls from Foxcroft School.

Mrs. Armfield Is Honor Guest.

Mrs. Howard Armfield was honor guest at a miscellaneous shower given Wednesday by Mrs M. S. Reed.

Mr. and Mrs. James Ball, jr., of Richmond, are guests of Miss Charlotte H. Noland, at Foxcroft, and with Miss Noland attended the wedding of Miss Eleanor Barnard Mongomery to Mr. Malcolm Graham Cameron, which took place in Orange this afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. John Jelke have returned to Chicago after a visit to Midleburg, where they left their young daughter at Foxcroft School. They will return in November for several weeks' hunting with the packs.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Prince, jr., have arrived at their farm, near Reetortown, for the hunting season.

Mrs. Henry Fairfax and Mrs. D. C. Sands were visitors in Richmond Tuesday on their way to Suffolk, where they attended a meeting of the Garden Club.

Mrs. Randolph Santini, of Brookeville, N. Y., is at her country estate here.

Mr. D. O. Furr, jr., who is attending the University of Maryland, passed the week-end at his home here, and Mr. D. O. Furr, sr., is in Lexington, Ky., this week.

Master of Piedmont Hunt Sets Opening Date.

Upperville, Va., Oct. 24.—Dr. A. C. Randolph, master of fox hounds of the Piedmont Hunt, the oldest recognized hunt in America, has set Wednesday, November 4, as the opening date of the club, which has hunted regularly since 1840. The meet will be from Grafton, home of Dr. Randolph, at 10 a. m. The Randolphs own two large estates, Grafton Hall and Welbourne, near Middleburg. The Upperville Horse Show grounds are on their property.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Guest, who have been riding with the Piedmont and Cobbler Hunts, will be unable to attend the official opening. Mr. Guest is president of the United Hunts and they will attend their races at Belmont Park on election day.

The Guests, who were married in New York about a year ago, have come down to Middleburg and have opened and redecorated the old house on the Guest estate near there. Although New York will claim them part of the time, they expect to call Middleburg their home.

Mrs. Guest, the former Miss Elizabeth Polk, lived in Washington when very young. Her father was Undersecretary of State during the Wilson Administration.

Senator and Mrs. Thomas Glascock have as their guests Mrs. Richardson Libby and Mrs. Franklin Miller, of Darien, Conn.

Newlyweds Take Motor Trip South

Mrs. McKnight Entertains at Bridge Luncheon in Her Home.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Ryland Return From Visit at Beulahville.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Arlington, Va., Oct. 24.—The St. George's Episcopal Church was the scene of an attractive wedding Friday evening when Miss Margaret Lavina Anderson, daughter of Mrs. Conway M. Anderson, of Linden, Va., became the bride of Mr. David Anderson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Bruce Anderson.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Col. James A. Anderson, of Lexington, wore a gown of ivory velvet.

As maid of honor, Miss Mary Louise Williams, wore a royal blue velvet gown, and carried pink roses.

Virginia Postels Is Flower Girl.

Little Miss Virginia Lee Postels, of Waycroft, was flower girl, wearing a pink georgette dress, white shoes and pink ribbon around her head. She carried a white basket of pink rose buds and rose petals.

Mr. Philip Bruce Anderson, jr., was his brother's best man. Ushers were Mr. William H. Higham, of Franconia, Va., brother-in-law of the bride, and Mr. Benedict Genua, of Washington.

Following the ceremony a reception was held in the Rhodes room of the parish hall. The young couple were assisted in receiving by Mrs. Anderson, mother of the bride, gowned in black velvet, with a corsage of gardenias, and Mrs. Philip Bruce Anderson, mother of the bridegroom, who was wearing a blue lace dress and a corsage of gardenias, and Mrs. Gould, of Washington, sister of the bride.

Later, a small reception for the bridal party and immediate families was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gould, of Washington, where Mrs. Anderson has been making her home for some time.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson left for a motor trip through the southern part of Virginia. They will make their home at 2228 Fortieth street northwest, Washington, after November 1.

Mrs. McKnight Is Hostess.

Tuesday Mrs. John McKnight was hostess at a bridge luncheon and Mrs. James M. Jones entertained her bridge club.

After spending some time at Beulahville, Va., Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Ryland have returned to their home in the county. They were accompanied by their daughter, Mildred, who is a student at St. Margaret's School at Tappahannock, Va.

Miss Emily Lindsay and Miss Margaret Lindsay, of Virginia Beach, are spending some time with their uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Jessie, at their home in Golf Club Manor.

Mrs. Cecil Childress has returned to Richmond. She was the guest of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Clyde C. Leighty, at their home in Lyon Village.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul H. Cathcart and their daughter, Nancy Ellen, of Cleveland, Ohio, are the guests of Mr. Cathcart's mother, Mrs. A. W. Cathcart, at her home in Ballston.

Club Members at Orange.

Among those attending the fourth district meeting of the Federation of Women's Clubs, being held in Orange, Va., at the Hotel James Madison, are Mrs. Arthur J. Sheridan, Mrs. William George Watt, Mrs. Harry Burton Bates, Mrs. Richard Owens, Mrs. Merwin McKnight, Mrs. Louis C. Carl, Mrs. Robert Livingston, Mrs. S. H. Omohundro, Mrs. George DeVaughn, Mrs. Lester Bennett, Mrs. Richard Groettum, Mrs. Edwin V. Byrnes, Mrs. G. H. Towner, all from the Lyon Village club.

Mr. and Mrs. William George Watt, assisted by their niece, Miss Virgil Louise Watt, entertained the Junior League of the Community Methodist Church at a Halloween party Friday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. George P. Grove, of Lyon Village, have returned after spending some time as guests of Commonwealth's Attorney Mr. Daniel Weymouth, and Mrs. Weymouth, at their home in Heathville, Va.

State Societies List Programs

Gov. Ehringhous and Wife to be Guests of N. C. Group Nov. 19.

State societies have announced their programs of social activities for this month, the winter and spring seasons.

The Governor of North Carolina and Mrs. John C. B. Ehringhaus will be the guests of honor of the North Carolina Society of Washington at a reception and dance November 19 at the Shoreham Hotel. The Governor will address the society on this occasion. Over 1,000 North Carolinians are expected to be present.

Other plans for the social season are: December 16, Christmas party; January 23, Congressional night; February 13, Valentine party; March 13, the spring party, and April 21, D. A. R. night and annual meeting.

The officers of the society are Giles Yeomans Newton, president; John Wilbur Jenkins, first vice president; Mrs. Aubrey D. McFayden, second vice president; Mrs. William H. Hessick, jr., secretary-treasurer; the Rev. Rufus W. Weaver, chaplain, and Mrs. Boydston Satterfield, historian.

Members of the board of governors are Hon. Harold D. Cooley, Hon. Graham A. Barton, Dr. Joseph Quincy Adams, Edward R. Preston, Mrs. R. E. W. Connor, Mrs. J. Crawford Biggs, Gov. O. New Yorkers Plan Dance.

Thursday evening the New York State Society will open its 1936-37 social season with a Halloween dance in the west ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel.

The following dates have been definitely selected for future dances this season: December 12, January 16, February 20 and March 20. All of these dances will be held at the Shoreham Hotel.

The officers for the year 1936-37 are as follows: President, Dr. Lamar Harris; vice presidents, Mr. Walter D. Sutcliffe, Mr. Samuel J. Gompers and Miss Leona Decker; treasurer, C. M. Little; secretary, Miss Irene E. Boehlert, and historian, Miss Mary Teresa Paro. The trustees are: Hon. John. Taber, M. C.; Hon. John J. Boylan, M. C.; Hon. James P. B. Duffy, M. C.; Mr. William F. Richard, Mr. Herbert G. Barott and Mr. Henry H. Wright.

Virginia Society to Meet.

The Society of Virginia of the District of Columbia will hold its thirteenth annual business meeting Tuesday evening in Room 128 of the Willard Hotel at 8 o'clock. At this time the officers and council for 1937 will be announced by Thomas Slater Settle, chairman of the nominating committee.

Former Gov. John Garland Pollard is the president of the society and Mr. George P. Grove is secretary.

Debutantes Presented in Bygone Days

Harris & Ewing.

MRS. JAMES M. THOMSON
as she looked when, as Miss Genevieve Champ Clark, daughter of the Speaker of the House, she made her debut here.

Genevieve Clark Made Her Debut at 'Open House' in 1914.

By Vylla Poe Wilson.

It was New Year's afternoon, 1914, and all social roads in Washington led to the large brick house on Massachusetts avenue where Speaker and Mrs. Champ Clark were presenting to American society their daughter, Genevieve, the "Daughter of the House of Representatives" as she was fondly called by its members.

With democratic simplicity, Speaker and Mrs. Clark had simply said that any of Genevieve's friends or theirs would be welcome, sending out no invitations. Hundreds responded—diplomats, officials, social celebrities, young and old, school friends of the debutante, members of the Missouri colony in Washington and the hosts of admirers of Champ Clark, lion of Democracy, who, like Jefferson "never sold the truth to serve the hour."

Miss Clark had the enviable distinction of having made her first appearance on the floor of the House of Representatives when her father carried her in proudly to show her to his colleagues at the age of six weeks. She had played around these political precincts with her brother Bennett, now United States senator from Missouri, and both of them had learned statecraft from A to Z.

Educated at Friends School, Miss Clark was interested in social service work and the morning of her debut she went with her coterie of debutante house guests to the Gospel Mission, where they had received at a "linen shower" held to replenish the supply of clean sheets, pillow cases and towels for this worthy institution.

Clark Home Was Gay.

The Clark home was gay with laughter of young people when Genevieve's debut party began. At the door of the drawing room stood Speaker Clark with Mrs. Clark beside him and then the debutante and her long line of debutante friends who had been asked to receive with her. She looked prettier than ever with her light brown hair brushed back from her forehead in natural waviness and caught in a low coil at the back of her neck from which the famous "Genevieve" neck curl escaped. She was in a dress of pink satin-striped chiffon over satin made with a girlish bodice and very long pleated skirt of the type that has been revived as a debutante style this year.

A narrow girdle of blue velvet encircled her slender waist and the same velvet trimmed other parts of the gown. She carried an armful of Killarney roses and lillies of the valley.

Mrs. Clark wore a gown of white chiffon made on the modish dignified lines of that day, with flowing sleeves and very long trained skirt.

The debutantes in line with Miss Clark included Miss Madeline Edison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Edison, now Mrs. John Eyre Sloan, of New York; Miss Helen Cox, whose father was then Governor of Ohio; Miss Alice Willis Preston, whose father was Mayor of Baltimore; Miss Dorothy Harvey, daughter of Col. and Mrs. George Harvey, now Mrs. Augustus S. Cobb, of New York; Miss Laura Graves, daughter of Col. and Mrs. John Temple Graves, now Mrs. Frederick Tomkins, of New York; Miss Imogene Thomson, debutante sister of Mr. James M. Thomson, of West Virginia and New Orleans whom Genevieve Clark was to marry the following year, and Miss Jeanne Winter, of Washington.

Your Shopping Reporter

Well, here's the surprise! News of the opening of "THE UPTOWN" shops in Warner Bros. Uptown Theater Building in the thirty-four hundred block of Connecticut Ave. Folks shake hands with Harold Tannenbaum of the smart JANE STEWART, INC. Dress Shop, and I want you to know Mr. Jack Cropper who will operate LILLIAS UPTOWN SALON, and for John Georyopoulos . . . "by his posies you shall know him," THE UPTOWN FLOWER SHOP; BRENTANO'S need no introduction, but it's a real thrill to have them located there . . . and right across the street have you been introduced to THE ARCO RADIO CO., who has just the set you've been looking for . . . and just a "ways" down the street you'll find FLEURS, who will appease your appetite in confections and pastries . . . and now for more news about this section as well as all my other shops . . . read the column below!

MARTONE'S HEALTH CLUB

"PLAY YOUR WAY TO HEALTH" . . . under the body-building or reducing courses of MARTONE'S HEALTH CLUB, at WARDMAN PARK HOTEL. JACK MARTONE, the perfect physical director (who, by the way, was sparring partner to Jack Dempsey) is ready to serve you. If you feel sluggish from inactivity . . . or if you crave a sylph-like figure call CO. 2000, and make an appointment. The Club has been enlarged and equipped to accommodate men, women and children. You may take individual reducing or massage treatments and colonic irrigations. Try this special . . . four week's course of 12 lessons, consisting of the use of mechanical boats and bikes, boxing, etc., plus an hour class of exercise, followed by electric cabinet, hose and shower. Classes at convenient hours.

F.ST. ALTERATION SHOP

"FORM-FITTING" . . . is the adjective describing new fall frocks. So if your wardrobe cannot boast this flattering mode trek forward to THE F ST. ALTERATION SHOP, 4th floor, at 1110 F ST. Here your new garments will be fit to you "like paper on a wall" . . . and at such modest prices. I must slip in a word about the marvelous new foundation garments Miss Beattie is introducing. She will fit them to your individual figure and give you that smart sleek appearance. NA. 1996.

"I JUST ABOUT SWOONED WITH DELIGHT" . . . and along with the revival of the word "swooned" has come the renewal of Edwardian styles . . . swing skirts and Princess silhouettes. In fact the styles are as lightly mocking of yesterday's as the word "swoon" is on a deb's lip-sticked mouth. But any-hoo, the styles are adorable and COLLIN'S INC., 3408 14TH ST., have an unusual collection of street and afternoon crepe frocks in high blue, raspberry, green and more subtle shades of grey, brown and black. These for a petite miss . . . and COLLIN'S have young women's dresses in larger sizes that actually reek of "smart" . . . all ticketed from 12.95 to 16.95.

PAINT & HARDWARE

"A COAT OR TWO" . . . of shiny paint makes us look like what we aint!" This, my pets, applies to furniture as well as to our physiognomy. If you're right in the midst of housecleaning, as am I, guess you've come across a lot of things that need freshening with a coat of paint. The best I can recommend (because I've used it) is Devoe's MIRROLAC, sold at THE CHEVY CHASE PAINT AND HARDWARE CO., 5608 CONN. AVE. It's an enamel procurable in all grand colors, dries in four hours and leaves a hard, slick surface. Call CL. 1045 and order a can right now . . . they deliver!

Helen Berner

"HELEN BERNER WAS IN NEW YORK LAST WEEK" . . . and brought back the loveliest collection of party frocks you ever laid your eyes upon. Evening gowns of wool in high shades, Castilian red and Mediterranean blue are novelties. Then the crepe dresses, draped Greek effects in snowy white or sophisticated black with rippling tunics. Smart crisp taffeta dresses with puffed sleeves and square necks, boasting tiny bows outlined with rhinestones "marching down the front." Sizes from 12 to 20 . . . priced 12.95, 19.95 and up. Don't forget . . . at HELEN BERNER'S, 920 17TH ST. N. W.

"MAKE ME A CHILD AGAIN" . . . just for tonight! Funny how we "act up" on Halloween and do things we wouldn't think of doing any other night in the year. Parties, fun and festiveness are enhanced by the decorations . . . and what are decorations without fresh flowers? The four GUDE shops have co-operated with the spirit of Halloween and have designed center pieces, favors (such as corsages) and room decorations to follow out the color scheme of your party. Call the main store at 1212 F ST., NA. 4276, and let them make suggestions for your affair.

Uptown Shopping Center

lillias

"THIS IS MUSIC" . . . to the ears of discriminating women. The opening of LILLIAS UPTOWN SALON, 3416 CONN. AVE., Oct. 31st, is happy news to all of us . . . we know that the name LILLIAS stands for perfection in beauty work to Washington women. LILLIAS popular prices will prevail with the same high class service under the personal direction of Mr. Jack Cropper and his staff of skilled operators. As an opening special and for the entire month of November, LILLIAS UPTOWN SALON is offering their regular 8.50 oil permanent for 6.50. Call CL. 2500 and be one of the first to make an appointment in this delightful salon.

Jane Stewart, Inc.

"AM I DREAMING" . . . or is it actually so . . . that I saw frocks of individuality and quality in JANE STEWART'S, INC., 3420 CONN. AVE., for 6.95! Never have I cast my glimmers upon hand-picked, one-of-a-kind dresses, boasting the newest style conceits, in the desired winter shades for such a price. The debutante or her fashionable mother will find smart, new and correct street, afternoon and dinner dresses in all sizes, colors and fabrics . . . ticketed from that funny, little price of 6.95 to 18.95. What values! Drop in soon . . . you'll live this frothy, enchanting shop. For your convenience, open 'til 9:30 p. m.

UPTOWN FLOWER SHOP

"FLOWERS FOR THE SICK" . . . flowers for weddings, flowers for party decorations, corsages, funeral designs, potted plants . . . just everything you can think of in the way of flowers can be had from THE UPTOWN FLOWER SHOP, 3414 CONN. AVE. Having 20 years experience, this shop is able to give you the most artistic work imaginable . . . and only the highest quality at unbelievably low prices. Satisfaction guaranteed . . . and, of course, they deliver. Phone CL. 9736.

"AFTER MY FIRST LOVE COMES A BOOK" . . . now don't blame me if I've forgotten if Milton, Shakespeare or "Ed Sullivan" wrote that . . . but isn't it true? So maybe you think we book-lovers aren't thrilled at the opening of BRENTANO'S UPTOWN SHOP, 3430 CONN. AVE. Here you may browse around to your heart's content and thumb through all the latest fiction and non-fiction. Best of all is the Circulating Library, which will bring to you all the books of the year in their entirety. Be among the first to have a card in BRENTANO'S UPTOWN LIBRARY.

And Just Across the Street . . .

ARCO RADIO CO.

"'TIS RCA VICTOR" . . . that has the "magic brain" which provides the ultimate in controlled radio reception. This week THE ARCO RADIO CO., 3417 CONN. AVE., offers you an inexpensive 4-tube receiver, housed in an attractive table-type cabinet of Cathedral design, that effectively covers the broadcast band, bringing in standard broadcasts and one band of police calls. A swell little set. Tone quality alone makes it outstanding in its field . . . Priced 19.95. See it!

Fleurs

"SIMPLY HEAVENLY" . . . are the confections and pastries at FLEURS, 3325 CONN. AVE. Actually their ice creams are made of PURE cream . . . and their delicious candies of the finest ingredients obtainable. Take HER a box of assorted candies . . . if you really want to go over big! And for Halloween, bridge or dinner parties FLEURS candies are just right, for they come in flavors and lovely colors to match your decorative scheme. Free delivery . . . EM. 3788.

LILLIAN GUSACK

"GO SOUTH, YOUNG GIRL" . . . and so-o-o, if "the boy friend" can "go West," why, why not? But go well fortified with appropriate bonnets. LILLIAN GUSACK, 5022 CONN. AVE., occupies a place removed from all that is merely superficially smart . . . she IS smart, and at this opportune time offers you PASTEL FELTS the "must have" in every "am going South" wardrobe. The newest styles, the loveliest shades and the lowest prices . . . always and only 1.95.

GARRISON'S

"THE GOBLINS'LL 'GIT' YOU" . . . if you don't watch out. For they've already swooped down upon GARRISON'S, 1215 E ST. Every Halloween novelty you can think of has taken up lodging at GARRISON'S. So don't go all over town looking for your party novelties . . . just save yourself steps and go directly to GARRISON'S, where you will find crepe paper decorations, paper hats, costumes, masks, false noses, teeth and ears, place cards, poppers, nut cups, noise makers of all kinds . . . and do you know that you can rent the most adorable center pieces for as low as 1.00 an evening? Dash in!

PALAIS ROYAL

"IT'S IN THE BAG" . . . and boy, are they cute? . . . THE PALAIS ROYAL have just unpacked from their tissues a collection of the smartest bags your old Auntie Shopper has seen this season. Dressy bags, street bags in genuine calfskins, dull suedes waterproof crepes and genuine howhide. Black, browns and all the colorful shades so good for now and later . . . and, my dears, but a paltry 2.00. First floor, Bag Section, madam.

Southern Stelos

"GOOD LINENS GONE TO THE DOGS" . . . Oh, no! They have to be pretty bad before THE SOUTHERN STELOS, 613 12TH ST., tells you they can't be satisfactorily repaired. This shop does fine inweaving on sheets and tablecloths (of linen or damask) that are suffering from "holeotosis." They also reweave silks of all kinds and do the work so perfectly that it is hardly visible to the naked eye. Glove and hosiery repairing, too.

A. H. KRIKORIAN

"YOU MAY RUN AMUCK" . . . when you choose your new rug . . . for it seems that today EVERYTHING is fashionable. If your heart's desire is a handsome Sarouk or a semi-antique . . . or if it be a colorful domestic with Oriental or Chinese design . . . or if your taste runs modern, to the new nubby broadcloth carpeting in plain colors . . . suit yourself, they're all IN STYLE. And a finer selection you've never seen than that at A. H. KRIKORIAN'S, 1315 G ST. (Formerly with Dulin & Martin). Drop in!

THE PARROT

"AWAY FROM IT ALL" . . . You don't have to ascend to the stratosphere to "get away from it all." People who desire to escape the day's petty annoyances drop into the PARRAKEET SNACK BAR at THE PARROT, 20TH & R STS. Here they can enjoy long drinks and delicious snacks. The feasts of Bacchus have nothing on the grand Southern luncheons and dinners at THE PARROT. Their fried chicken and hot breads fairly melt in your mouth. (Just writing about it calls my attention to the empty feeling in my "tummy.")

"PROLONG THAT YOUTHFUL SKIN GLOW" . . . with the HORMONIQUE METHOD OF SKIN CARE now being introduced by Julia McGrady, of MAXINE MAX BEAUTY SALON, 3d floor, at 1327 F ST. It promotes complexion loveliness by lubricating the skin to avoid wrinkles, stimulating the natural secretion of skin oils and circulating the blood. Facials includink milk pack are 2.50 and you may purchase the cream for 3.00 a jar. Call ST. 9476 for more information.

"FOR WOMEN WHO KNOW" . . . A grand new SHOE SHOP, selling the kind of shoes that you and I would like to wear but never could because of the prohibitive prices. EDWARD'S, unique shoe store, located uptown at 3416 14TH ST., sell samples, factory cancellations and close-outs of such shoes as SAKS FIFTH AVENUE, DELMAN, MATRIX, and other fine, expensive footwear, and the prices are 3.95 to 5.95. (For instance, SAKS FIFTH FIFTH AVENUE SHOES are priced 4.95). Think of buying such shoes, in the latest styles, in all colors and sizes for such prices! Hop into your car, ride a bus, take a street car or walk . . . but hurry into EDWARD'S . . . the only shop of it's kind in Washington.

Are You Hungry for a Good Steak?

"SUCCESS OF OLMSTED'S BUSINESS" . . . depends almost entirely upon their ability to please patrons. To this end, the quality of their STEAKS is of the greatest importance. OLMSTED GRILL, 1336 G ST., still retains the time-honored custom of REAL GRILLING—the glowing hickory coals which alone give us PROPERLY GRILLED STEAKS. The flames occasionally leap up and give the steak that "burning kiss" which slightly chars it, imparting that unequalled flavor to the outside of the steak while the inside still remains slightly under-done and juicy.

"THE HELEN MARIE BEAUTY SALON" . . . 522 12TH ST., is noted for Permanents of loveliness—deep, soft, rolling waves, curls placed "just right." Frederic, Eugene, Nestle, Helen Marie, or Undine Permanents, which are reduced to 8.00, will rule those staggiy locks and your hair may be "coiffed" in the new high roll or the nape-of-the-neck headdress. First get a special hair and scalp treatment to correct faulty conditions . . . it will bring back life and gloss to dry, faded or bleached hair. Mr. Lynn, hair-stylist, is now affiliated with this shop. You know, HELEN MARIE'S modest prices! Phone for appointment. DI. 4638.

"ON YOUR TOES" . . . is a test of PERFECT BALANCE, but you may acquire it for "practical use" in a pair of C. E. TURNER'S PERFECT BALANCE SHOES. If you take the elevator to the second floor of THE WESTORY BLDG., 14TH & F STS., you'll find a charming shop, the contents of which will be an end to a lot of trouble, discomfort and unhappiness. The unusual shoes sold there are built on a special last, originated by Mr. Turner, who serves the medical profession and fills prescriptions in shoes for men, women and children. If feet aren't just normal, correct shoes help . . . and if feet are perfect KEEP THEM SO . . . in TURNER'S PERFECT BALANCE SHOES.

"ARE YOU ARTISTIC" . . . ? Well then, you'll appreciate the stunning display of chromium furniture and VENETIAN BLINDS on the second floor of THE COMMERCIAL OFFICE FURNITURE CO., 800 E ST. The decorative schemes are simply exquisite . . . you've never seen a more comprehensive combination of colors. The PERFECTION de LUX VENETIAN BLINDS come in hundreds of colors and combinations with contrasting or matching tapes. Drop in and have Mr. Heifetz show you about and offer suggestions for your own needs.

Hope you've enjoyed my column. Cheerio 'til next Sunday.

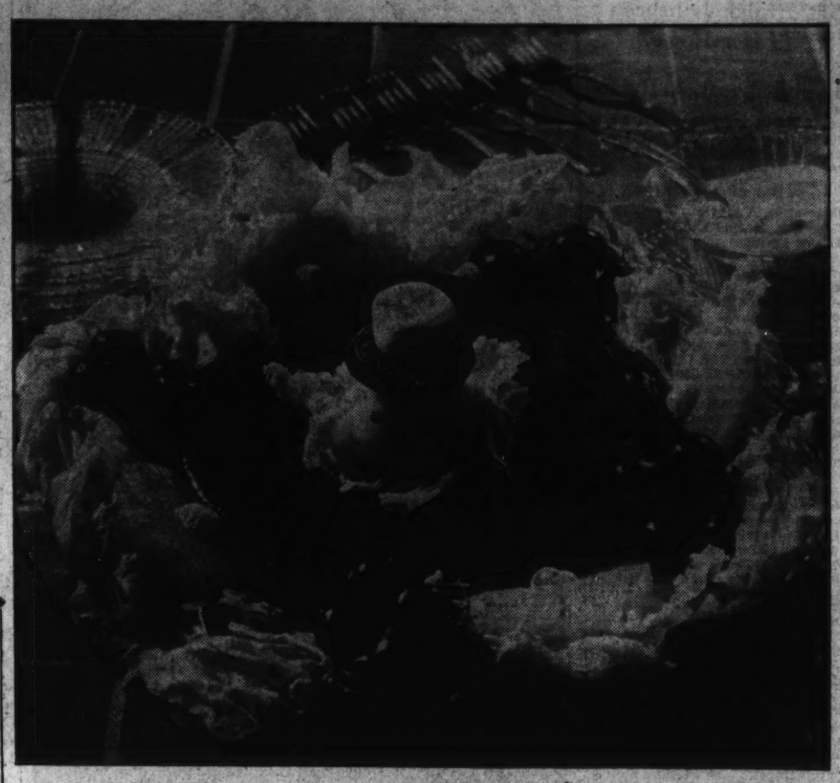
Black Cats and Hobgoblins Figure in Halloween Parties for Children and Grown-Ups

If you are having a Halloween party your table decorations will be considered first of all in your plans. There is no end to the interesting and appealing things that may be done with nuts for decorations and refreshments. Brazil nuts may be made into amusing figures by painting them with melted chocolate then dressing them in gay robes of crepe paper.

Halloween is an excellent time for the hostess to test her ingenuity in preparing food. Lantern salad is a simple and yet appropriate part of your Halloween menu and consists of everyday foods dressed in holiday attire. You may use peaches or pears in this attractive and delicious dish which will also contribute to the decorations for the table.



Designed to bring good luck to a Halloween party is this shining black cat centerpiece. It is in keeping with the occasion and may be easily constructed with cellophane and wire.

CHILD CHATS

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

A HOT TEMPER may be a valuable asset, but not if it is uncontrolled. The object of training a hot-tempered child is not "to break his spirit," nor even to root out his temper and make him yielding and submissive, but to teach him how and when to use his temper.

His temper under control is like a high-powered engine running smoothly. The power is there and can at need be pushed to greater effort. The person who has no temper loses this extra energy.

But the uncontrolled temper is like an engine running wild. It will tear machine and everything near it to pieces.

Requires Much Tact.

To deal with a high-spirited child who is apt to fly off the handle requires infinite tact, patience and strength. The gentle parent who seeks peace at any price and will yield to any demand rather than start a row, is worse than useless. The child will grow more and more outrageous, until he actually becomes a nuisance to himself and everyone else. If his parents are not able to bring the need of self-control home to him, they would do well if they should get help from the outside.

It is not necessary to fight fire with fire. Just because a father or mother is placid and peace-loving is no excuse for acting like a jelly fish. There is no need to fly into a rage or spank the child or to speak to him sharply.

Indifference Effective.

The most gentle parent can wield the weapon which is the best of all others to use against temper tantrums—judicious indifference, which usually works wonders on the irritated child.

If they will leave the room or quietly put the child into another room, or simply go on with their affairs in the face of the uproar, the noise and fury will soon stop. A few such treatments and the child will have learned the uselessness of such scenes.

Arrival of Harvest Moon Sign for Gay Entertaining

Novel Food and Decorations Needed for These Events; Brazil Nuts May Masquerade as Witches, Cookies Take Form of Spooks.

THE HARVEST moon swings high in the sky, the corn is husked, the pumpkin and squash are lying in golden mounds, the whole world smells of apples and cider and it's time for the ghosts to walk and for the parties to begin. Of course you must have a Halloween party. The autumn would be as flat as stale soda pop without all the jolly doings

No matter what kind of a party you are planning, your Halloween party must be one the crowd will remember. Parties are apt to be pretty much the same all year 'round unless you take advantage of the passing holidays and entertain in a lively and festive manner.

So let's put on our thinking caps and make some plans. Table decorations come first; they should be unique. If you are planning a jolly buffet affair, provide decorations that will make attractive favors; if you are having a sit-down supper, use them as place cards.

Little preparation is needed for the games. The traditional stunts, such as telling fortunes and bobbing for apples, are easily arranged. Guests can usually be counted on for ghost stories and pranks.

The table trimmings should have preliminary attention.

Attractive Centerpiece.

A centerpiece in keeping with the occasion is in the form of a shining black cat, easily constructed with cellophane film over a wire frame. The body, legs and upright tail are made from crinkled tubes of black film and the head is a flat piece of cardboard covered with the film. This good-luck kitty wears a brilliant bow of clear film striped with red, green and yellow Scotch tape. A matching ruffs encircles the silver cardboard base on which the cat stands in walking position.

The frame of the centerpiece is built with three No. 15 wires. Two 36-inch wires are each shaped to form the following continuous outline: front leg 9½ inches with 1½-inch paw, humped body 15 inches, hind leg, 8½ inches with 1½-inch paw. The third wire is 32 inches, forming the 9-inch tail, and another 15-inch body support, with the remaining 8 inches bent into a triangle for attaching the cat's head. The three units are wired together along the 15-inch curve, and legs are adjusted to stand.

Make the "fur" for the legs and tail with five pieces of black cellophane 9x20 inches. Wind each piece loosely around the cardboard tube on which the sheet was rolled, cement the overlap and crinkle by working the film gradually along the tube. Then slip out the tube. For the body, crinkle black film over a bottle 2½ to 3 inches in diameter, using a piece twice the bottle's circumference and 30 inches long. After removing the bottle, place the tubular film on the body wire. Slip the remainder over the tail wire and pinch the end to a point. Put on the leg pieces and fasten legs and tail to body with Scotch tape on the inside.

Cut the cardboard head about 6½ inches each way, allowing extra for the ears, and cover the front with black film. Applique a mouth of red Scotch tape and eyes of green tape. The whiskers are four 14-inch lengths of spool wire wound with clear film and drawn through pinholes at each side of the mouth. Tape the back of the head to the wire triangle and cover with black film. For the base, cut a 12-inch cardboard circle and cover with silver paper. Then wire kitty's fore leg and left hind leg to this base and clock the other legs in walking position. The tape-edged ruffle of clear film is a 6x90-inch piece doubled lengthwise and gathered on a knitting needle. Slip it under a 40-inch wire circle and tie this wire to the base. Cover wire with Scotch tape.

Brazil Nut Decorations.

Brazil nuts especially lend themselves to many amusing forms of decoration. The size and shape of these nuts suggest all sorts of humorous figures, witches, clowns, strange animals, funny faces in variety. Shell and blanch nut meats, turn them this way and that as you wish and, with melted chocolate and a fine brush, draw quaint features on the white meat of the nut or on the brown inner skin. Insert toothpicks in the nut meats, add gay robes of crepe paper and stand the funny little creatures in filled nut cups.

Deviled and spiced nuts are tasty additions to the refreshments.

It is not necessary that the hostess seize this event as a time for elaborate food, but instead it is advisable to employ clever ideas in preparing tried and true recipe favorites.

A simple and yet very appropriate part of your Halloween menu might be lantern salad. You may use peaches or pears in preparing this attractive and delicious dish. This salad may be used as part of a fruit salad tray. It will help to garnish the tray and increase the variety of servings offered.

There are many interesting foods to be served as timely refreshments for your Halloween party. If you are planning on serving a complete dinner why not consider Jack o' lantern cocktail, baked broiled chicken, apples baked with mashed sweet potatoes, cauliflower with nuts, date corn muffins, lantern salad, pumpkin pie and coffee. For simple refreshments at a children's party, be sure to serve the ever popular cider and doughnuts, with sandwiches if you like. Crunchy mince meat cookies will be fun to eat between the games.

Mirror Panel on Wall.

A model modern apartment on display at one of the better-known furniture houses in New York has a wide-mirrored panel on one entire wall, sorrounding the fireplace and extending to the ceiling. The vivid shades used in the room's decorations are reflected harmoniously.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Idyll of French Governess and Missionary-Professor Cited as Case of "Getting-Your-Man" by Letter.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Unless the forum on "Get-your-man by correspondence" is already closed, I should like to add my little contribution. It is in the affirmative. My French governess (for five years) was a faithful and painstaking reader of "Les Annales." This dignified and literary journal had a "correspondence department," which encouraged the exchange of letters between "abonnes" in all parts of the world.

* * * *

Mademoiselle selected several names and a voluminous correspondence ensued. Many letters were written and received. The postoffices must have done a good business, for most of her effusions went to far places. In the end things narrowed down in such a way that only one steady correspondent remained; a "professeur," who was a sort of missionary and school teacher somewhere in darkest Africa. His letters, addressed in a fine French hand with cute curlicues and flourishes, came as regularly as the milkman, and where at first we had teased mademoiselle and made her blush dark red everytime one of these "African" letters arrived, afterwhile we took them as a matter of course.

* * * *

One day mademoiselle told us that she had consented to become engaged to Monsieur le Professeur—all by letter. She said that he was on his way to Europe on his first vacation in several years and that she would like permission to go and meet him. That permission was granted, of course.

* * *

From this trip mademoiselle returned, glowing like a full blown rose—for she was very pretty and dainty—telling us that she would be married in six weeks, the time it took to publish the banns, and that her professor was all she had expected. Both were sure that they would be very happy. They were. Monsieur had himself appointed to the faculty of a boys' "lycee" in Paris and that is where the two "lovers by correspondence" established their home. It was the real thing, apparently, for when Monsieur le Professeur died, after a number of years, his widow, disconsolate, entered a convent.

* * *

So, you see, such things can be and they do happen in real life.

Sincerely, ADELE NEVILLE.

Exception Proves Rule.

DEAR MISS NEVILLE: It is always pleasant to have both sides of a picture, and it is just possible I have been unduly pessimistic concerning a woman's chances of making a happy marriage through the correspondence approach. But I still believe that for every couple who might find the perfect mate in such a manner nine hundred and ninety-nine others would live to rue the invention of the postal system.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Shelves in Doorways.

If the wide vista a French doorway affords spoils your room, the remedy employed by one homeowner may be effective. One-half of the opening was fitted with a set of narrow shelves, which held books and bright pieces of pottery.

Eye Make-Up Follows Style; Mascara in Colors Is Vogue

Thinly-Plucked Brows Are Outmoded; Lashes, Like Hair, Must Be Curled; Eye Shadow Gives Depth and Brilliance of Expression.

By Carolyn Abbott.

EYE MAKE-UP is playing an unusually important part in styles this season. With the vogue for ornamentation and elegance, eyes must be dressed up to meet the public.

Mascara is in this season in numerous shades. Plain black is becoming passe.

The middle aged matron should be particularly careful to avoid black mascara as it ages her. She should use green, blue, violet or brown. Colored mascara on the lashes brings out the color in the eyes and it can also harmonize with the costume.

For the younger women, green mascara, particularly, gives an effect women would call "exotic" and men would call "beautiful, but dangerous."

Apply mascara lightly with a tiny eyelash brush to darken the brows as well as the lashes. Treat the upper lashes first, then the lower lashes. This cosmetic adds luster as well as depth to the eyes.

Thinly plucked eyebrow lines are no longer in vogue but you cannot throw away your pluckers. These should be used regularly to remove the few hairs that insist upon growing out of the line of your brows.

The fine tooth end of your comb or a tiny eye-lash brush used on your eyebrows as often as you comb your hair will keep your arches constantly in trim and sleek and glossy.

Instrument for Curling.

Curled eyelashes seem longer and make your eyes appear larger, so science has helped us and produces a handy instrument for making your straight lashes curl. Vaseline or mascara is applied, then the eyelash curler is placed over the lashes, pressed tightly, and held for a few seconds.

To enhance the natural beauty of one's eyes, a touch of eye-shadow on the lids is most effective. A green cream eye-shadow applied lightly to the upper eyelids adds depth, brilliance and coloring to the eyes. It is blended on the upper lid only, from the inner corner outward to the end.

Take your face into consideration. You may have remarkable eyes. To make yourself more attractive, you must bring the rest of your face into relation to your eyes. In making up, let the eyes be the key to your personality. You should try out rouge and powder and lipstick until you find a color that keys to your eyes. You must experiment with your face the way an artist plays with the colors on his palette. It is an age-old beauty secret, that nature gave us our best color guide in our own eyes, whether they are gray, blue, hazel or brown.

Eyes are a guide in choosing the proper cosmetics and they are also an excellent fashion guide. Chic in clothes is just like chic in make-up, a matter of keying with eye-color. To every woman who wants to become more beautiful, the secret lies in your eyes.

If your eyes are your best feature you should play them up so they will help you to their finest degree. If they are not your best feature, you should help them make you more attractive.

Need Not Look Artificial.

It is generally believed that eye make-up looks "artificial," but this need not be so, for if skillfully taken care of, it may appear as natural as your eyes themsleves.

Eye treatment is not only beautifying, but also healthful, for it rests the eyes as a hot bath rests the body after a tiring day's work. For a quick eye relief, saturate cotton pads in chilled witch hazel and place them alternately over the eyes and allow to remain for five minutes. When resting, heat the wicth hazel and lie relaxed, with pads over the eyes. Use an eye cup and boric solution or weak salt and water solution when retiring and arising. If your eyes are to withstand severe strain or light, treat them with a few drops of boric acid just before going out.

There is on the market a paper liner which is similar in size to a rayon pencil and is made of stiff paper, lightly rolled. After the mascara, applied to the eyelashes, has dried, this liner is used to separate any lashes which might stick together. It draws a faint line around the lid, thus giving the eye a larger appearance.

HOBBY HORSES

By Rae Lewis.

"The time has come," the Walrus said,
"To talk of many things——"

And I have a strong conviction the Walrus was referring to all those things which may go into scrapbooks. The time has certainly come to talk of scrapbooks. You will be hearing about them again from time to time, because they are so closely tied up with many hobbies. There are hundreds of kinds and I hope, if you have never had one of your own, that you start you will start one immediately. If you don't care to keep one for yourself, try making a scrapbook of some special occasion for a friend. You will become so enchanted with the idea that you won't be able to stop after completing one.

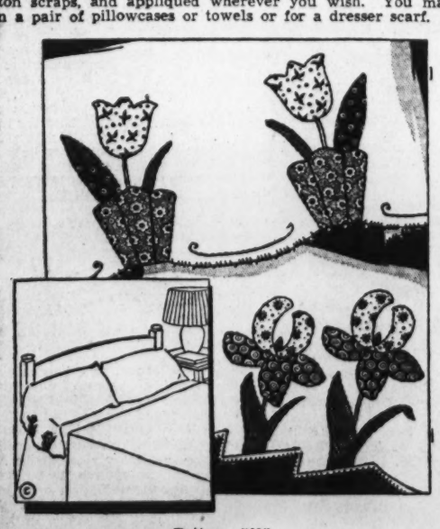
When Mrs. Reed Dolan was married, her mother made one of the most charming scrapbooks of which I have ever heard. Realizing that her daughter would not have had the time nor the opportunity, she gathered together everything pertaining to the wedding itself and the festivities which preceded it. Included were the news stories on the announcement, the showers and the ceremony; also copies of the invitation and announcement, bits of satin from the wedding gown and attendants' gowns and a slice of ribbon from the bridal bouquet and going-away corsage. Included, too, were pictures of the members of the bridal party. Newspaper pictures or snapshots would do. Mrs. Dolan's mother made her scrapbook in chronological order, using date lines from newspapers to head the different pages. In little cellophane envelopes were bits of rice, as well as a pressed flower from the wedding bouquet. For a scrapbook with white pages, tiny flat knots of pastel ribbons may be glued on the upper corners of each page.

This delightful idea may well be adapted to any special occasion in a friend's life, such as a graduation, or a new baby, or a birthday, or when one is going somewhere.

Gay Flowers of Cotton Scraps Brighten Household Linens

By Alice Brooks.

VIVID TULIPS—picturesque iris, blooming in applique along the borders of your nicest linens! What a gay effect, yet how easily achieved, for the simple flower patches are cut from your most colorful cotton scraps, and appliqued wherever you wish. You may want some on a pair of pillowcases or towels or for a dresser scarf. Delight your friends with gifts adorned this way. In pattern 5635 you will find a transfer pattern of two motifs 5¼ x 15 inches, two motifs 5¾ x 15 inches and the patterns for the applique patches; material requirements, color suggestions, illustrations of all stitches needed.



Pattern 5635.

To obtain this pattern send 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred) to The Washington Post, Household Arts Department, 259 West Fourteenth street, New York, N. Y. Be sure to write plainly your name, address and pattern number.

Eyes Best Color Guide

Black mascara is no longer in vogue but has been replaced by individual shades. Eye make-up should blend in with your personal coloring and with your clothing. Your eyes are your best color guide and should be treated so that they will add to your appearance. Eyes should be made-up to present a natural effect.

Designers Create Bewildering Line Of Gay Wallpaper

After long years of painted walls, wallpapers are being rediscovered and are being used effectively in any type or period room. Wallpaper designers have reproduced a bewildering array of patterns of all descriptions.

Color is particularly interesting to the creators of wallpaper. Gray is being used extensively, but in direct contrast to this, bright tones are among the favorites.

There are plenty of all-over patterns being used for design, but the separate motif is a first choice this season. There is a popular textured paper without any decorative motifs. It achieves a subtle feeling of the horizontal through its texture.

Motifs for wallpaper designs seem to be taken from most any subject, as cocktail glasses, yachts, dice and teapots. Certain papers have a distinct sense of humor.

Practically all of the manufacturers are making the wallpapers sunproof and waterproof. Homemakers are demanding durable papers.

First Two Hours of Slumber Found to Be Most Refreshing

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

AMONG the many letters received by this department a goodly number deal with insomnia. Some will relate that sleep refuses to come until about 4 a. m., following a restless, exhausting night. The rising bell rings inexorably, which means that these individuals have had but three or four hours of undisturbed slumber.

We can go without food far longer than without sleep. Observations on animals show that the reserve forces of their bodies are used up completely after five days of continuous wakefulness, even though an ample supply of food is always at hand. Deprived of nutriment, they can go on for 20 days or more if kindly Morpheus comes to the rescue.

It is generally agreed that the first two hours—the so-called beauty period—is the soundest and therefore the most refreshing. The level of alertness rises gradually as repose is prolonged. In fact, during the last hour there may be a sort of subconscious awareness of what is going on within the room.

Many years ago a German investigator performed a series of experiments in an effort to determine the intensity of sound needed to arouse a person fully. A ball was caused to fall from varying heights, striking upon a hard metallic surface with a resounding clang. At the end of the first hour it was necessary that the ball fall through 800 units of space, whereas after 2½ hours only 50 units were required.

There is no better rule for wooing the "sandman" than to follow the admonition of the New Testament to "take no thought for the morrow." After observing insomniacs for many years, one is led to the conclusion that if we could eliminate apprehension and worry entirely, the normal amount of sleep would come to most of us. But few have acquired the knack of relaxing completely. Test yourself and see how difficult it is—until practice makes perfect. This means complete surrender of the control of muscles of the entire body, including the neck, the face, the tongue, etc.

In discussing this question with a friend who had complained of lying awake at night, I asked him to check his ability to "let go." He reported later that a critical self-examination disclosed the fact that he was contracting the muscles of the eyelids tightly and holding the body in a fixed position. Of course he could not drop off; he was on an active tension although lying quietly in bed with the eyes closed.

But some will say, "I can't stop thinking, mulling over the events of the day—what he said, what I said, what she said, what I should have said, or why I didn't think of that." If thoughts race and can not be tamed, there is nothing better than a good book and a good light; the head and shoulders propped up in bed. The thread of the narrative will obliterate the current of thought by substituting a new set of ideas.

Sometimes disease and high blood pressure prove to be relentless enemies of tranquillity. In a few cases soothing drugs may be prescribed—not regularly, but occasionally. In such a situation the services of a skilled physician should be sought.

Interior Decorators Now Are Styling Rooms According to the Feminine Wardrobe

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Oct. 24.—The popularity of baby-adopting still seems on the increase, not only among the stars of the stage, screen and radio, but among many of my busiest business-women friends here.

ALICE HUGHES.

Only the other afternoon a top-notch advertising girl, Sarah Pennoyer, approached me with a glow in the eyes and grabbed me by the hand.

"Come right along with me to the Lenox Hill Hospital," she said, "and see Hank." I knew that Sarah had been married for a decade, and that her helpmate's name wasn't Hank, so I thought it wise to go along peaceably and investigate.

At Lenox Hill I duly beheld Hank, a mite two weeks old and under glass, through which we inspected him closely. Sarah has already adopted him, but she cannot have him for a few months, owing to the sensibly rigid rules and by-laws governing the adoption of infants. She says she chose Hank because he has red hair and blue eyes, and already she has his newly acquired life mapped out for a long time to come. Lucky Hank, I thought, as I watched him eating his fist in his blue and white bassinet.

For I feel that those successful business women are good mothers. For the first bit of his life, when his chief needs are eating and sleeping, Hank will have a first-rate highly trained nurse to attend to his wants. Then, when his emotional nature begins to appear, so will Sarah, and both will find joy in the meeting. She is happy now—and how happy she will be in a few months when his blue eyes light up at the sight of her!

More and more women I know, long immersed in workaday affairs, are feeling the need of small lives to include with theirs. And I'm sure the youngsters will get better than an even break before they plunge headlong into what the prayer book quaintly calls "this miserable and naughty world."

Well, another hoity-toity hotel "room" has opened, and must be duly chronicled, for it is probably the hoitiest, if not the toitiest, of the city's famous eating-and-drinking spots. This one is the "Iridium Room" of Mr. Vincent Astor's St. Regis, on Fifth avenue. The interior is mirror, metal and dusky pink—a background pit to set off the town's most luscious women and their wondrous clothes. It is also well lit, for restaurateurs are learning not to use those amber lights which drain a girl's face of make-up and turn her into what amounts to a hag or crone.

It was about as gala as such things come. I noted that Mrs. Vincent Astor wore a large beauty patch on the back of her neck. Faugh! Do Astors, even by marriage, have such vulgar things as boils? Ah, well, I suppose one touch of carbuncle makes the whole world kin!

Anna Roosevelt Boettiger wore a gold ribbon in her hair—which reminds me that everyone seems to wear some sort of hair decoration these nights. It may be a ribbon, a jeweled comb, or fresh flowers. One girl sprouted two huge purple orchids from the top of her head.

• • • •

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Speaking of headdresses, my Mad Milliner, John Frederics, has fixed me up a red velvet twist, something like a rooster-comb, which I use to top off a black taffeta dinner suit, and I haven't been hissed off the floor yet. In a few months the girls will be wearing these tropical fish, probably.

The expected novel note was introduced at the recent Noel Coward-Gertie Lawrence reception. A lady performed "swing music"—on the harp! We all applauded loudly, of course . . . Even if we style scouts and party snoops didn't read the papers or listen to the radio we'd know the Presidential campaign was blazing. Since every fashion show traditionally ends with a wedding number, this now takes the form of a "sunflower wedding" or a "rose wedding," according to the political predilections of the designer, manufacturer or shop.

• • • •

I can take politics or leave it alone, but by this time in a campaign I am good and darned sick of seeing every candidate's wife described as "a home-body." I wish some candidate's spouse would publicly announce that she gads about, plays bridge for money and is not above a nip with the girls now and then! . . .

• • • •

I'm always suprised and slightly thrilled to realize that the widow of President Benjamin Harrison is still very much among us, and one of our honored grande dames. Only the other day the D. A. R. entertained her in great state here.

Trend Today Turns From Harsh Lines

Textures Used in Home Are Echoed in Tints of Frock Materials.

Fashions in Furniture and Clothes Revert to Period Motif.

By Ethel Ehlen,
The Post Fashion Editor.

FASHIONS in furniture and fashions in clothes are reverting to period influences! Living today is a delightful merging of the old and the new, in modern interpretations to harmonize with current fashion trends. The return to femininity and elegance in the feminine wardrobe has inspired interior decorators to style their rooms accordingly. There is a decided tendency to do away with harsh lines, brilliant colors and extreme effects in interiors; to harmonize with subdued tones, soft contours and clinging vine types of costumes.

The late Georgian modernized room pictured—the charm of the old and the smartness of the new—is a lovely background for two accompanying frocks, reflecting Empire and Edwardian influences. Both exemplify swank and sophistication in the 1936 manner. The delightful textures and tones of the woods, upholstering fabrics and overdraperies are echoed in the textures and tints of the frock materials. The color theme of the living room is soft silvery green, ivory and browns; one frock is blue silk damask, the other green and gold silk boucle.

What the famous designers, Alix, Molyneux, Schiaparelli, Chanel, Creed, Hartnell, Mainbocher, Rochas and the rest, are to the twentieth century in fashions, Chippendale, Hepplewhite, Sheraton and their contemporaries were to the eighteenth century, the golden age of furniture designing. Chippendale was a carver who had a wonderful sense of proportion and delicacy, which he incorporated into his work; he evolved a style which carried his name to fame. Hepplewhite's designs were a revolutionary departure from his predecessor, Chippendale. He is best remembered for his shield-back chairs, the legs of which were square and tapered, terminating many times in the spade foot. Sheraton, the last of the great English masters, followed straight, classical lines, but was a master of cabinet making and inlay work.

Unusual Color Scheme.

Knotty pine woodwork, bordering wallpaper of Rococo design in beige and ivory on a silver background, distinguish the Georgian room shown here. The chosen tints are repeated in the details of the lovely room; silvered green over-draperies at the French windows on either side of the fireplace, the moderne figurine in green porcelain on the mantlepiece, banked by two delightful bowls of greenery, and the pine-framed mirror.

The two love seats are dusty salmon pink brocatelle with feather design in gold; the round end tables at the sides, are mahogany and the twin lamps, hand-cut crystal with deep ecru lace shades, stretched over ivory silk.

In one corner of the room, near a French window, is a kidney-shaped desk of mahogany with leather top; an interesting feature here, is the bookshelf sunk into the front of the desk. This is not only smart-appearing and extremely practical, but keeps the desk from appearing too heavy in a room of charm and modern delicacy. In the opposite corner, is a Queen Anne, red lacquered secretary, lined with antique green; an earlier age than the rest of the period-influenced pieces of the room. It is one of the highlights of the entire smart and lovely interior.

Lamps Enhance Room.

An easy chair of hand-tinted tapestry, tan background with conventional flower motif in green, rose and eggshell; drum-table with interesting reading lamp flaunting an alabastor base and skin-tex shade; occupy another corner of the room. A huge sofa covered with linen in natural tone, with flower pattern in rose, blue and tan, enhances the scene and adds a bright spot of color. In front of this is a clever cocktail extension table of mahogany; it may be lengthened to accommodate the service needed, and in the center, is a removable tray of metal.

Seven table lamps and three floor lamps furnish indirect illumination for this living room. The bases are in keeping with the modern-period influence, and the shades in soft tones of ivory. Cornucopia lights of arabesque on mahogany pedestals, flanking the fireplace give a quaintly charming touch. This attractive, modernized late Georgian room, is a splendid example of an unusual room, combining the old and the modern, in an ultra-smart, sophisticated, and at the same time, restful and livable interior.

CAPITAL FASHIONS

By Pattie Ellicott

One of the prettiest of the first fall costumes was worn by Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley, wife of the former Secretary of War, of shining black broadcloth. The full skirt banded in black astrakhan and the flairing coat encircled by a band of the same fur. The high collar of the coat is of astrakhan and the lower part of the sleeves are entirely made of this fur. A small black broadcloth turban of astrakhan completes the costume.

• • •

Mme. Fulvio Suvich, wife of the new Italian Ambassador, wore for one of her days in Washington a suit of black satin trimmed with fur. She wore a small black satin hat. Mme. Suvich also has a smart coat suit of gray tweed made with a fitted skirt and a closely fitted coat ending just below the waistline. With this she wears an ivory silk blouse. Her hat is a gray felt with a dented crown and a narrow brim.

• • • •

Mrs. Robert Clement Watson is wearing a smart one-piece wool dress of blue and gray figured material. This has a swing skirt tailored collar and long sleeves. With this she wears a blue felt high-crowned hat.

• • • •

Mrs. James Roosevelt, daughter-in-law of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, had on one day during her recent visit to Washington a one-piece black broadcloth with a band of fur about the hem of the skirt. A tiny collar of the fur carried out the new note. Her hat, a high-crowned one of brushed felt, with a long quill at one side of the crown.

• • • •

Mrs. Howard Vickery is wearing a smart fall costume of brown and bronze tweed made with a swagger coat and a pleated skirt. Her hat is of brown felt.

• • • •

Mrs. John Phillips Hill has a black broadcloth coat made in coachman style. Under this she wears a knitted suit in tones of purple and her hat is purple, with a silver quill.

• • • •

Mrs. James Clement Dunn chose for one of the evening parties last week a dress of dark blue silk net. This was made with a box jacket and a very long full skirt and short puffed sleeves.

Mrs. Bowler Hull is also wearing a dress of blue silk net, with tiny silver bow knots all over it. Mrs. Hull's dress has short sleeves and a very full long trained skirt. She wears a corsage bouquet of silver roses.

• • • •

Senorita Emra Castillo Najera, daughter of the Mexican Ambassador and Senora deCastillo Najera, looked very pretty at one of the parties for young people, in a rose moire silk dress made with wing-like, elongated shoulders forming very short sleeves; it flaunts a peplum bodice and a very long, very wide, circular skirt.

Single Breast Tuxedo Ready For Comeback

Diversity of Cuts Adds Variety to Evening Waistcoat.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 24.—It may be going out on a limb, like picking Knox College to beat Notre Dame in football, but our fashion prediction for the season is that the single-breasted tuxedo will come back to outsell the popular double-breasted model.

The tailors in town and the boys who make up the New York-after-dark fraternity aren't, at the present writing, in total agreement. But the Fifth avenue retailers, who get the volume business, say they can see the trend back to the single-breasted model. And stylists maintain that now everyone is wearing the double-breasted coat, the dressier men will pass it by.

We think men will revert to the single-breasted peaked lapel model, once the biggest selling model of them all. The best double-breasted model seen this month is that with the peaked or double-breasted lapel rolling to the lower of two buttons.

Waistcoat Diversity.

The shawl-collared jackets are high-style and should account for a large part of the season's volume. Another note to keep in mind when dressing for the evening is the trend toward single-breasted evening waistcoats. It is diversity of cut that will add variety to the evening waistcoat business. All may have the V open, but the changes are noticeable in the outline of the bottom and of the lapel.

"Evening dress obligatory" appears on more and more invitations, tickets, and night spot ads in town. Noticeable also is the tendency to go whole hog in the matter of evening wear—"tails," topper et al. Midnight blue is the leading color, of course. Two stud-hole shirts are general and the square or semi-blunted cuff, always deeply stitched, is best liked. Collars are high.

White buttonniers predominate. The red carnation has dropped in favor. It's been overdone.

Sneaking into the St. Regis, a society spot, and one or two other nighteries we were struck by the number of younger men going hatless. There apparently is a growing tendency to discard the silk hat. There were a number of black soft felts with bound-brim, and a few operas, but fewer silk hats than ever before.

Head Size Survey.

Notes on a clean cuff: A leading hat company has made a survey of the head-sizes of Manhattan's dramatic critics. Burns Mantle, Brooks Atkinson, John Anderson, Douglas Gilbert and Kelcey Allen all wear size seven . . . Walter Winchell and John Chapman require 7⅛ hatbands, with John Mason Brown leading the field with a size 7⅜ hat . . . the same company is putting out the new gun-metal topper . . . Vic Erwin, the band leader, took us to lunch and by dessert got around to admitting he had 33 suits . . . Art of Writing Letters Linked To 'Good Form'

Poor Letters and Stationery Make Bad Impression; Rules Are Listed.

By Margaret Wallace.

THE ART of letter writing is closely associated with good form. In Washington friendships are made with the great and the near-great who are here for a season and then perhaps at the other end of the world. The person who is proficient in the art of writing personal letters is apt to keep up friendships throughout the years.

No matter how lenient a friend or acquaintance may be to those who take an unreasonable pride in not writing letters or answering letters, either, this type of person never has a long list of friends, as does the person who abides by the rules of writing and answering personal letters.

But it is not only in writing and answering letters that friendship and social success progress. What is said in the letter, and how much it conforms to the tenets of good form, are important essentials.

One may pardon a friend who uses a slipshod method of keeping up a correspondence, but one does not admire this trait. A friend or acquaintance may make excuses for the writer who does not choose stationery carefully and not comment any more than they would on an unbecoming hat or an unpressed suit. But letters that do not make a good impression are as detrimental to the writer as a poor personal appearance.

Everyone likes to receive a friendly letter that sounds as though the writer were talking in person. They like bright, interesting letters. They also like to receive a well-phrased letter written on nice paper and in a nice hand. Through this medium they are apt to visualize the writer.

Misspelled words and ungrammatical phrases make a lasting impression and will always suggest the idea that the writers are not properly educated, no matter how brilliant and finished their conversation may be when they are present.

It is considered bad form by well-bred people to show personal letters to any one. The only exceptions being family letters and those of very intimate friends. But even in these cases it is often a mistake to thus betray a confidence. Letters written to one person are intended for their eye alone and people who have the habit of indiscriminate circulation of personal letters are guilty of a grave social error.

Gloria Vanderbilt, Lady Furness Sponsor 'Musical' Frocks Abroad

Capacity Crowds in London View Latest Creations of Society Twins.

By the Associated Press.

London, Oct. 24.—Gowns named after songs and appropriately designed is a new idea launched by the American Society twins, Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt and Lady Thelma Furness.

The gowns were designed by themselves in New York and bought by a fashionable department store where Queen Mary does much of her shopping. They were shown every day for a week to exclusive capacity crowds.

"We thought it would be a novel idea to name our frocks after melodies which have charmed audiences on both sides of the Atlantic," Lady Furness explained.

"We think women should wear gracious and becoming frocks, simple and free from exaggeration, and we design our clothes on these lines."

A feature of the models was the clever workmanship and novel ways of treating seams, sleeves and necklines, which gave a smart finish to simple styles.

The wedding gown, "Here's to Romance," created the greatest interest amongst Mayfair mothers, who were asking: "Will autumn brides be wearing wedding gowns of Chinese inspiration?" The idea is a new one.

Chinese Influence.

The mandarin tunic coat made from white satin brocade was fastened with silk braid frogs and showed a tube skirt below, slit at the side, the train being a continuation of the tunic. The conventional bridal headdress was replaced by a mandarin hat of stiffened white tulle, trimmed in front with a bunch of orange blossoms. Yards of tulle framed the face and trailed behind over the train.

"Belle of New York" was a pale green and gold lame Empire style evening gown, with little puffed sleeves falling off-the-shoulder and a very wide hem. Worn beneath was a rustling taffeta petticoat of the period.

A charming black afternoon gown was called "Spread It Abroad." It had a jabot front and high cuffs of apple green velvet embroidered like lace and fastened with little silver buttons.

"Lovely To Look At"—pretty as a picture, in fact—was a purple taffeta gown, cut on princess lines, with open-work embroidery around the wide hem. A matching design was worked around the cape collar that fell from an off-the-shoulder neckline.

Dinner Suit Simple.

A simply cut dinner suit called "Sophisticated Lady" was of black satin spangled with silver, which introduced the glitter that heralds the coronation season fashions. This dress and coat were cut on straight simple lines, with a bow trimmmg the neck.

The new concordant red velvet was used for the evening coat "Thanks a Million." It had the voluminous sleeves and long wide skirt that will be a popular fall choice.

Most alluring was a green glittering velvet evening gown with the new draped front, topped with a square white fox cape, called "I'll See You Again."

Velvet Has Proved Smartest Material

Paris Designers Feature Numerous Varieties.

Paris (U.P.).—Velvet has proved to be the smartest material of the year. It is shown in numerous varieties—velveteen, panne, lame, shaved to a flat, stubby surface or printed into a striped or plaid design. Black as is always the case in Paris is the favorite, although various shades of green, red and brown are almost as popular.

The new velvets are used for severley tailored suits to be worn under fur capes as well as for dressy cocktail suits worn with rich lame blouses. Velveteen is used for street dresses worn under fur-trimmed cloth coats as well as jacket suits worn with plaid woolen blouses.

BLACK OR WHITE for important evenings

Vogue says "You can't do better than invincible black." We agree—unless you wear white. Wear black or white and your dress will be the one he'll remember longest . . . and that you'll adore wearing the oftenest. Black or white—in a slim metallic sheath or a whirling flare of net. Black or white, sophisticatedly simple in velvet or just ingenue-ish enough in moire. Black or white—headed for the winter's big success. Black or white—you'll find it on smartest women where the music is the hottest and the laughter is the gayest. Of course you'll find your black and white at The Hecht Co.—featured in both the Better Dress Shop and the Young Washingtonian Shop.

New Post Home On Sylvan Site In Woodside

Is Located at 774 Dale Drive; One of Group of Three Houses.

Today a Washington Post model home will introduce another sylvan development presented by J. S. Gruver & Sons, represented by Waple & James, Inc.

The Post's exhibit dwelling is among the first group of three of an ultimate 350 houses to be erected in Woodside Forest.

Located at 774 Dale drive, principal thoroughfare in this wooded section, the display house may be seen by driving out Sixteenth street, or Georgia avenue northwest, to the traffic light at Silver Spring and turning right on Colesville pike and turning left at Mrs. K's Toll House Tavern.

The model home directs attention to the latest development in this section of North Washington.

Woodside Forest has many advantages to recommend itself to the prospective home buyer. The locality is densely forested with stately oak, elm and maple trees of advanced age. Every one of its lovely homes will be erected on wooded sites.

The field of the development lies between the Colesville pike and Georgia avenue, each of which arterial highways is served by regular bus transportation. Dale drive, a 60-foot roadway, bisects the community, one side of which fronts the impressive Sligo Valley Park. Characterized by a rural remoteness, Woodside Forest is adjacent to every urban convenience.

Within a short distance of the model home is a new elementary school built as an ideal institution of Montgomery County, Md. Nearby are the Argyle and Indian Springs Country Clubs and the progressive Silver Spring shopping center. All utilities are available to this rapidly growing community.

The largest junior high school in the county is within a few blocks of the model home. A new senior high school is being erected on the edge of the park, just a few blocks down Dale drive. There is a parochial school in the vicinity for training of pupils up to and including the second grade of high school. Two elementary schools are within easy walking distance. The way to each of them is free from traffic hazards. The University of Maryland is within 12 minutes' drive.

Sligo Valley Park furnishes a glorious environment for the new community. This reservation is 3 miles long and will contain 150 acres. In keeping with a policy of encouraging all wholesome outdoor sports, more than 30 tennis courts have been planned in the parks serving the area. In addition, half a dozen baseball and three soccer fields, numerous handball and basketball courts, various picnic grounds in beautiful groves, with many shallow wading pools for children, will be dedicated to the cause of health and pleasure.

Into the latest Post model home have been incorporated the many years of successful experience. Like other residences of the woodland colony it features, it embodies the most substantial construction and convenience of arrangement.

The way to its inviting portal, set in a dignified gabled arched facade of stone, is up a broad, deep, gently sloping lawn, studded with stately, slender shade trees. Of brick and stone construction, with slate roof, the central stone front is flanked by brick in effective contrast.

One enters a hospitabe foyer, with convenient closets, and is greeted by the sight of a graceful stairway ascending from the central hall. To the right of the latter is a spacious, comfortable living room, looking on to a bright sun room lighted by many full-length windows. At the left of the center hall is an attractive dining room with a maximum of wall space, and to the rear are the ultra-modern kitchen and den, the latter artistically paneled.

There is a garage with overhead doors to the side of the house. It is approached by a concrete runway and has an additional interior

Opening Rites Of 'My Home' Set for Today

City Officials Will Attend With Federal Housing and Civic Leaders.

Today an event which has been expectantly awaited by the local public will be the formal opening of "My Home for 1936," at 4848 Upton street northwest.

The contest from which this home resulted has been the subject of great interest, not only locally, but throughout the entire country. The contest was dealt with at length in the National Real Estate Journal of September, 1936.

Washingtons will remember the announcement by W. C. & A. N. Miller, developers of the Wesley Heights section, which includes Spring Valley and Westerleigh, that they would conduct a contest in collaboration with Woodward & Lothrop for the most popular type home which might be developed from the ideas of the general public, a home designed according to the ideas of laymen.

There were nearly 500 entries. Some of them were merely descriptions of the home of "hearts' desires" of various entrants. Others were scaled drawings worthy of finished architects. The committee of judges, consisting of Melvin C. Hazen, chairman; Irwin S. Porter, a former president of Washington Chapter, American Institute of Architects; Arthur B. Heaton, president of the chapter at that time; F. Eliott Middleton, then president of the Washington Real Estate Board, and Stewart McDonald, chairman of the Federal Housing Administration, selected the five designs which they considered most worthy.

Immediately upon selection of the winning designs, local architects, members of the institute's chapter, were employed to make finished drawings embodying in architectural interpretation the ideas submitted by the winning contestants and interpreted by the local architect selected in collaboration with the winning contestant.

Following completion of these plans, the sponsors, W. C. & A. N. Miller, employed Carmelo Aruta, a recognized modeler, to construct scaled models of the five designs. These designs were displayed for two weeks in an F street window of Woodward & Lothrop's department store, after which they were displayed for a week in the interior decorating department of the store. During the latter week ballots were cast by the pubilc to indicate the most popular of the five designs.

Fate then played a peculiar role in having chosen the design sub-

'Warren-teed' Homes Built In Ten Hours

Steel and Copper Houses Are Latest Triumph of Engineering.

"Warren-teed Homes" are attracting widespread interest. Modern materials make new building methods possible and construction of 10 new steel and copper homes in Montgomery avenue, just south of the East-West highway between Connecticut and Wisconsin avenues, in Bethesda, Md., is now well under way.

The average time for erection by four men of one of these innovations of modern engineering is 10 hours. Besides speed in erection, they offer many other worthy qualities.

The window frames are aluminum and double-hung. Crittall Manufacturing Co's latest design. R. Bates Warren, president of Warren-teed Homes, Inc., has endeavored to combine in these homes materials of

Hillandale Presents a Group of Homes

Post Staff Photo.

One of the seven new homes in Hillandale, the popular development of Merritt Lockwood, presented today for public inspection through the office of Realty Associates, Inc.

7 Homes Open For Inspection At Hillandale

Spacious Sites Offered Builders in Wooded Maryland Tract.

Advancing its program of promoting developments, Realty Associates, Inc., is now presenting the large Hillandale project in nearby Maryland and is emphasizing this latest activity by the presentation of an exhibition home there, opening today.

This beautiful tract of 500 acres with room for 400 homes is being developed by Merritt Lockwood and may be reached by going out Thirteenth street northwest into Piney Branch road and following that highway through Takoma Park to the project, located four and a half miles beyond the District line.

Of the 21 homes now constructed in this attractive section, 7 are now available. Their designs are pleasingly diversified and run from the English studio type, to the Cape Cod with first-floor bedroom and bath, and the American colonial. The houses range from six to seven-room structures with one and two baths. Their price range is from $8,750 to $10,250.

Site Elevated.

The display home is located on a high, delightful, wooded site on Parkman road, affording a sweeping view of Washington extending beyond the Washington Monument. The large lot with 195-feet frontage is filled with tall, stately shade trees of advanced age.

The house is striking with its impressive stone gabled entrance facade, the front on either side of the portal being in art brick, a slate roof covering the entire dwelling. There is an attractive porch with stone railing at the left of the entrance. The exterior trim is white.

The central entrance gives way to a welcoming foyer on one side of which is a convenient wrap closet. To the right is a cheery living-room with artistic open fireplace and opening onto a sun porch. To the left of the entrance hall is a first-floor bedroom and adjoining bath. To the rear of the living room is a bright dining room with "electric health kitchen" adjoining.

Games Room.

The basement contains a large paneled recreation room with open fireplace and ample space for garage, laundry, oil-burning heating and toilet units. Upstairs there are two bedrooms and a bath. One of the bedrooms is unusually large and of the master type. There is also a great deal of storage and closet space on the second floor. The purchaser of the home may select his type of wall paper.

The exhibit home, which will be open today and daily until further notice, is priced at $9,450. The development it features is one of the most distinctive in the environs of the National Capital. Its name is derived from the physical characteristics of its countryside, a beautiful succession of rolling uplands and wooded dells.

The Hillandale plan provides for home sites of an acre of ground and upward. The community is a restricted one and running water and electricity are included among its utilities. It will have a fine system of highways and some of the home sites are traversed by running streams.

The developer will construct homes according to the desire of the purchaser, or the latter may choose from a very comprehensive collection of designs. All of the homes will be of the electric kitchen type. Beginning yesterday, the locality is being served by a transportation service providing for 19 buses daily.

Insulation Urged On Hot Water Line

Whenever an automatic gas or electric domestic hot-water heater is used it should be remembered that all hot-water plumbing lines are a source of heat loss, and a major one, because of the considerable amount of pipe surface exposed to the air as compared to the volume of heated water in the pipes.

For this reason, just as it is important that the storage tank be insulated, it is also important that, wherever space will permit, the hot-water lines be insulated with any of the several good insulation materials now available on the market. It is probable that the insulation of the hot-water lines will do as much to make the operation of the water heater economical as will the insulation placed around the storage tank by the manufacturer or the installer.

Hot-water heaters may be installed and insulated under the Modernization Credit Plan of the Federal Housing Administration.

Stained Surface Work.

Stained surfaces are usually finished with varnish or shellac. Two or more coats are used, the number depending upon the wear to which the surface will be subjected.

IF YOU have delayed buying a home because of the uncertainty of the outcome of the election you may contract for the purchase of one of our seven-room two-bath houses at the present price of $7,950, and should the Presidential candidate you favor not be elected we will return your deposit and declare the contract null and void.

See the furnished exhibit home at 5535 Manning Drive by driving out Connecticut or Wisconsin Avenue to Bradley Boulevard thence west to Fairfax Road to houses.

Dedication of "My Home" Today At 3 P.M.

4848 Upton St.

WESTERLEIGH

It is the house that all Washington voted to be the best of hundreds of original designs submitted, and which we have taken a keen delight in building into reality, on that beautiful corner lot in the Westerleigh Community of Wesley Heights.

The building of the home in faithful compliance with the developed details of the architect is finished—and it has been completely furnished, consistent with the type of its design, by Woodward & Lothrop and

Will Be Formally Dedicated and Opened for Public Inspection Today—Sunday—At 3 P.M.

As a home it reflects the human interest of its designer; and into its construction has been put the master craftsmanship and high quality of materials which characterize Miller-built, and have made the homes in Westerleigh, Spring Valley and Wesley Heights nationally famous.

Whether or not you had a voice in the selection of the "My Home" design you surely will want an opportunity to participate in the dedication of this home, which expresses the ideas and ideals of so many and

Its Inception

The idea of the "My Home" contest was born of a desire to awaken in the public consciousness thoughtful interest in the possession of a home that would express one's own ideal and truly deserve the title which has been bestowed upon it — "My Home."

With that object we selected a fitting site in Westerleigh and asked the public to submit sketches of its ideas, offering the incentive of a cash prize of $100 for the plan for which the public should express its preference.

Hundreds of plans were submitted. A committee, headed by District Commissioner Hazen, selected the five which in the judgment of this committee, represented the most practical. In turn, these five plans were submitted to a committee composed of members of the Washington Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, and under the direction of Mr. Irwin S. Porter these sketches were developed into such shape that models could be made.

The sketch selected was the one submitted by Mr. William Tapp, whose picture appears in the insert above at the left. Mr. Leon Chatelain, Jr. (insert above at the right), was the architect chosen to develop workable plans.

The completed models were placed in one of Woodward & Lothrop's windows and the public invited to cast votes for its preference—and that is the home we have built. That is the "My Home" of the Washington public's choice.

Then we asked the public to give to Woodward & Lothrop ideas for furnishing "My Home." A cash prize was offered for the best thought suggested.

Thus, very truly, does the "My Home" we are dedicating today indicate both the public's deep interest in the subject of homes and very especially in the development of "My Home."

Dedicatory Program

This occasion isn't just a "display of an exhibit home." Its importance transcends all commercialism and partakes genuinely of the human interest which finds place in every human heart—the love for the family fireside.

In harmony with the sentimental importance of the event we have invited Roger J. Whiteford, prominent in Washington's civic and legal life, and Hon. Riley Stanton, in charge of the District of Columbia Branch of the Federal Housing Administration, to formally dedicate "My Home"—in the spirit in which it was conceived and the purpose which it certainly has achieved.

May we express our thanks to these gentlemen for their public-spirited co-operation. Also to the members of the Citizens' Committee, who made selection of the submitted plans and the Committee of the District of Columbia Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, who so willingly contributed their professional skill in preparation of the working models and specifications.

As you inspect the home, which you are invited to do, we are sure you will catch the human interest evident in every feature in the plan and design, and appreciate that we, on our part, have carried out the Miller traditional standard in construction and equipment.

We have included in this detailed equipment those appliances that are recognized as major factors to utmost convenience and facility—and, of course, the Carefree Comfort of Modern Gas Appliances, which we have adopted for every home in Westerleigh—Gas Heaters, Ranges, Refrigerators, etc.

Remember, you have a date to visit the "My Home" today, Sunday.

Baltimore Developer Listed to Address Session at New Orleans.

Creation of buildings that endure, and especially homes of such fitness and character, and under such neighborhood protection that they may have the long lives of the best houses of the past, will be a central subject before the land developers and home builders division of the National Association of Real Estate Boards at the association's annual convention in New Orleans the week of November 16-21.

Using many of our own early American buildings as examples of sound construction, John McC. Mowbray, of Baltimore, will address the division on this subject and cite factors needed in a house of today to give it its best chance for a long economic life.

Mowbray, president of the Roland Park Corporation, Baltimore, which developed Roland Park, one of America's most famous residential sections, is chairman of the association's committee on housing, and is a past chairman of its land developers and home building divisions.

Cyrus C. Willmore, St. Louis, Mo., president of the St. Louis Real Estate Exchange, as chairman of the division will preside.

Other speakers so far scheduled at the land developers and home builders meetings:

Hobert C. Brady, of Swope-Brady Realty Co., Wichita, Kans., and a past president of the Wichita real estate board, whose address will be on selling new homes that meet the needs of the present-day public.

Marland S. Wolf, of the Reynolds Corporation, New York City, will talk on "How Reynolds Corporation Helps Developers Sell Homes." The plan of the corporation is interesting in view of the importance of achieving modern distribution methods for building materials, to make way for as low costs as possible for the home buyer, and widen the group of families that can afford home ownership.

J. Harold Hawkins, New York City, architectural editor of McCall's, will discuss "The Homes of the Month." The home of the month is selected each month by the division, on the basis of its livability, practicality, and fitness to present actual needs. Its plans are reproduced in McCall Magazine where readers may see pictured monthly the current house and where they find a list of cities in which the house has that month been built.

At a special "Dutch Treat Dinner" of the division to be held on Wednesday evening, November 18, Herbert U. Nelson, secretary of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, will comment informally on the very active new home building now going on in some of the principal countries of Europe. He will speak from first-hand observations made during the past summer.

The equipment program lists all that goes into the modern home such as automatic heat, furring, insulation, caulking and weatherstripping. Unusual precautions have been taken to insure a dry basement. The English design of the house blends admirably with its wonderful setting. Through the handsome stone-front entrance reached by a double, metal railed stairway, there will go many admiring visitors today and through the days this house will be open for inspection.

Construction in Bronx Up 300% Over 1935

Building in New York City's Bronx district is just 300 per cent ahead of last year for the first eight months, according to a report in the New York Herald Tribune. The cost volume of building plans filed since January, the report states, was $44,842,211, of which $40,254,345 is for new construction. A recent survey showed that 57 new concerns have located in the Bronx during the year.

Nook Shelf Useful.

If the breakfast nook in a kitchen is crowded install a shelf on the wall above the electric outlet and paint or enamel it to harmonize or contrast with your breakfast-nook furniture. Such a shelf will give you a place to set the toaster during breakfast and will hold accessories between meals.

FHA System Aids Mechanic To Own Home

$100-a-Month Man Obtains Insured Mortgage for 80 Pct. of Value.

Springfield, Ill.—How the insured mortgage system of the Federal Housing Administration puts home ownership within the reach of all classes of people, particularly persons in the low income brackets, is clearly shown by the experience of Carl F. Meyer, of this city.

Meyer, a tractor mechanic, earning approximately $100 a month, recently moved into a new, modern four-room home built according to the standards of the Federal Housing Administration, at a cost of $3,100 and financed with an insured mortgage of $2,400. Representing 80 per cent of the value of the property, the mortgage will be paid off in 20 years by monthly payments of $20.06. This sum is approximately $8 a month less than he paid for a small, two-room apartment, and $15 a month less than he could rent a four-room house in the district in which he now lives.

Just as the Meyer home offers an example of the "pay yourself rent" idea, his building his own home is typical of young industrious Americans anxious to better themselves.

Since his home was completed, Meyer has helped to home ownership three fellow workers who, when they heard how he achieved home ownership on the insured mortgage plan, decided it was the chance they had been looking for. Hundreds of other people visited the home during its construction and upon completion.

"We formerly rented a two-room apartment close to town. But it was noisy and disagreeable. Our rent was $28 a month, which looked like a lot of money for the accommodations we had and the conditions under which we lived," Mr. Meyer said.

"After looking around we bought this lot, 40 by 160 feet, for $450. The location is a good one, semi-suburban; but best of all it is close to the shop in which I work. This in itself, over a period of years, means something, because I come home for lunch, and I have no transportation problem.

"About the time we had paid off the lot an architect who works for the same company agreed to design my house and told me of the Federal Housing Administration. So when the plans were complete I took them to the contractor.

"A short time later the contractor told me the plans had been approved by the Federal Housing Administration and that a commitment for an insured mortgage had been issued. The details of the deal were simple and understandable. I was to pay $20.06 per month for 20 years, and the Housing Administration would inspect the building as it went up to assure me of a good job. We lost no time in signing the papers.

"A lot of work remains to be done to grade grounds and sow grass and plant trees and shrubbery. Both of us like to work in the garden. We can do a little every evening, unless otherwise busy. It won't take long. Then we will have everything just as we want and like it. And these little things add to the value of the property, too."

'Village' Homes At Beverly Hills Prove Popular

Many Persons Selecting Houses in Permanesque Development.

More and more persons are selecting homes in Permanesque Homes Village, Inc., at Beverly Hills, Alexandria, Va. This development and The Post model home featuring it may be seen by driving over Arlington Memorial Bridge to Arlington Memorial, there taking the road to the left and continuing on past the Little Tea House on South Arlington Ridge road, or Mount Vernon avenue, along the ridge to Russell road, then turning right to Beverly Hills.

The Post model home is of brick construction and contains three bedrooms and two baths. It is located on the new Virginia boulevard and only 12 minutes' drive from the heart of Washington.

This exhibit dwelling is the latest in design and construction. Located in the rolling wooded acres of Beverly Hills, where there are 10 miles of bridle paths, this house has an artistically designed studio living room with beamed ceiling and unusual attractive fireplace with natural stone hearth. It has a bright, cheery dining room, ultra-modern kitchen with cocktail bar and is located on a very wide lot.

Permanesque homes are announced as one of the outstanding achievements of America during the past years. They are represented as moderate in cost and having the structural solidity and permanence of the skyscraper combined with a design and finish that are strictly residential.

These structures, built of the finest materials available, are some of the most interesting sights that Greater Washington affords. Their name signifies the permanent and the picturesque. They are referred to as the "New American Homes," built throughout like a modern apartment hotel and equipped with the same modern conveniences.

Representatives of the corporation remind prospective buyers that after a Permanesque home is purchased there are no thoughts of "extras" to burden them.

They have electric refrigerators, electric stoves, concealed radiators, automatic hot-water heat and constant hot-water supply.

Other equipment and improvements include natural stone fireplaces, all-tile bathrooms, Reynolds Ecod aluminum foil insulation, electrical fixtures and outlets, grading, landscaping and driveways.

The design of Permanesque homes is not fixed, but is constantly being changed and bettered as new thoughts are worked out in the corporation's architectural department and laboratory. The corporation maintains its own laboratory to test all materials and products before they are specified for its residences.

Winding Brook Adds to Beauty Of Model Home

Barnaby Woods Scene Attractive Both by Day and Night; Visitors Welcome.

A house and garden that are beautiful both by day and night are being shown today and daily by Thomas J. Fisher & Co., Inc., for the Barnaby Woods Developing Co., at 6608 Thirty-second place northwest, in that lovely section.

The garden, with its lovely pool, bridge, stream and rock wall, is beautified at night by concealed lighting cunningly and effectively placed to bathe the entire scene in a cool moonlight glow. This new and enchanting use of electricity is just one of the many features which make this model home so attractive.

A cool spring-fed brook winds gently through the entire width of the generous 80-foot lot and lovely sites and gardens border it on all sides. A rock pool, rustic bridge and the flowing stream enhance the natural beauty of the scene, bringing a touch of genuine woodland freshness to the very door of the house.

The residence with three bedrooms, three baths, study, maid's room, and attic is spacious and beautifully furnished with modern appointments and conveniences. The note of enjoyability and sociable living is carried out in the furnished recreation room with its open fireplace and portable bar.

In location and setting, this unique home is difficult to match. Home lovers are invited to see it by day and night. It may be visited by driving out Connecticut avenue to Nebraska avenue, turning right on Nebraska avenue to Utah avenue and continuing on Utah avenue to Barnaby street, then down Barnaby to Worthington street. Here, one turns right and follows the sign directing the way to the dwelling and garden.

The house, furnished by Hilda Miller, will be open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m.

Boom Fails to End Housing Shortage

The Des Moines Register reports that despite a 71 per cent increase in home building this year the housing shortage continues. Its report is based on a survey conducted in 74 cities by the Northwestern National Life Insurance Co.

In 58 of the cities, the Register reports, rents are increasing, with the advances ranging from 1½ to 30 per cent. Of four Iowa cities in the survey, Waterloo and Davenport report that residential building in 1936 is twice the volume for the comparable period in 1935.

Semi-Detached Novelty Shown In Brightwood

Samuel Littman Presenting Welcome Variation of Style in Dwellings.

A welcome variation in semidetached home styles is being presented in Brightwood at 723 and 725 Oglethorpe street northwest. Samuel Littman, the owner and builder of these two exceptional homes, has incorporated a lot of appeal and comfort into these, his latest efforts.

Both houses have six rooms, one with two baths, the other with two and a half baths. The recreation rooms are generously proportioned and keep the modern note of the entire house at the correct pitch.

These homes are in keeping with the former home values presented by Littman. Their construction boasts fine quality materials, and has been executed with a fine finish.

Another remarkable feature, resulting from a clever arrangement of entrances and outlooks, is the complete isolation of one home from the other. This, coupled with a carefully thought out floor plan, makes these houses a worthy addition to Washington real estate.

Coffey & Mason Present the First of 68 Homes to Be Built at Kilmarock

Kilmarock, a new development in Takoma Park, Md., will feature a new type of home that is sure to win instant approval. Presented today for the first time by the office of William M. Throckmorton, the homes may be inspected by driving out Carrol avenue, past the Sanitarium to signs on the property.

2 New Groups Plan to Attend Realty Parley

Ohio and Michigan to Send Trains to Convention in New Orleans.

Ohio and Michigan State realtor groups are the latest to plan special trains to annual convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards which will be held in New Orleans November 16-21. The Washington real estate board has announced it expects to have three or four special cars. The Washington delegation will leave on November 14 by train. The California State group is planning a special car.

The two special trains already announced as reserved to carry the Florida delegation are expected to be packed. This delegation will accompany Water W. Rose, Orlando, who is president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. Other groups also previously announced as planning special trains are: the St. Louis Real Estate Exchange and the Texas State group, including realtors from Dallas, Fort Worth, San Antonio and Houston.

Steamship to Sail.

It is expected that a large group of realtors from New England, New York and the northeastern section of the country will travel by water. The steamship, Dixie of the Morgan Line, is scheduled to leave New York at 5 p. m. on November 11 and arrive in New Orleans at 7 a. m., November 17, and arriving in New York on the return trip November 26. It will wait over three hours to accommodate the final session of the convention if there are enough realtors planning to return by that route. The Connecticut group suggests the possibility that informal group appraisal and sales discussions may be held on the boat en route.

The Detroit Real Estate Board states that a large group is already listed in its convention delegation. The Missouri group, including delegates from Kansas City and St. Louis, already has made hotel reservations for 122 persons.

Other Groups to Attend.

The Illinois State group, headed by the Chicago Real Estate Board, and the Kentucky group, headed by the Louisville board, already have a large number of advance reservations. Memphis, Tenn., reports that it is sending the largest delegation in years. The real estate board of Jackson, Miss., is planning to travel to New Orleans in a body, with an expected attendance of close to 100 per cent.

The Honolulu (Hawaii) Realty Board will send three delegates.

Among those from here who have signified their intention of, or who contemplate, attending are Mr. and Mrs. William C. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Morton J. Luchs, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Cafritz, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Throckmorton, Mr. and Mrs. Harold E. Doyle, Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Houghton, Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Rush, Mr. and Mrs. H. Clifford Bangs, Mr. and Mrs. William L. King, Mr. and Mrs. J. Wesley Buchanan, Mr. and Mrs. Ben T. Webster, John L. Weaver, Waverly Taylor, J. McKenney Berry, Percy H. Russell, Homer L. Phillips, F. Eliot Middleton, Frank S. Phillips, Karl E. Jarrell, Edward R. Carr, F. L. Sandoz, Thomas D. Lewis, Joseph A. Herbert, jr., S. S. Spruce, Leonard Downie, of the Home Owners Loan Corporation, and M. E. Hyman, of The Washington Post.

Cellar Doors Are Often Source of Heat Loss

Cellar doors are sources of heat losses generally overlooked. The sloping doors are particularly bad in this respect. Wherever they exist there should be an additional door at the foot of the stairs. Additions to the home may be made under the Modernization Credit Plan of the Federal Housing Administration.

Door With Two Leaves.

Frequently in order to swing the door in a small bathroom the fixtures have to be crowded into uncomfortable proximity. In such cases a door divided into two leaves and hinged like a screen so that it folds on itself will relieve the congestion.

Wall Murals Interest Younger Generation

The enthusiasm for wall murals is spreading to the younger generation. Millard Krisman and Winfield Stampfer, of University City, Mo., determined to paint a mural on the wall of their "garage-studio" after Millard returned from a trip to New York, where he was inspired by the Radio City murals.

Their mutual interest in animals decided the subject. After much research and many trips to the zoo, they have completed a mural which depicts both prehistoric and present day animals. It required two years to complete it.

Furniture Style Now Is Leaning To Mahogany

British Classic Motifs Reproduced Today in Good Authenticity.

The British people, tiring of the long period of styles introduced by the four great furniture masters, turned to the more severe classicism during the nineteenth century, which resulted in a trend now designated as English Regency. This design has little decoration other than some painted motifs, but the outlines are gracefully balanced and adaptable to reproductions in dining room furniture, particularly the chairs.

The refinement of the Napoleonic styles in France transformed the style into what is known as French Directoire and appeared after Napoleon had been exiled to the Isle of Elba. Following the fashion of mahogany instituted in France by Napoleon, the Directoire period has all the charm and beauty that French Empire furniture lacked. The pieces are smaller, more graceful and less adorned than those which preceded them.

More Attractive.

During the period of Napoleon, there appeared in young America an Empire style adapted after that of the French Empire. However, the designs created in this country were considerably more attractive than those of its sister nation. The pieces were smaller, with flowing outlines and simple decorations. In producing the Empire style in America, our cabinetmakers depended, for decorative effects, entirely upon the deep tones of the rich mahogany finish, which was highly polished and formed a characteristic of the style. It is significant of the ability of American cabinetmakers that the Empire style as created by them has never been out of fashion since its introduction in this country during the early part of the nineteenth century.

German furniture, as a general rule, is heavily decorated with carving, massive in outline and clumsy in proportions. However, during the early nineteenth century, there was introduced into that country a style so lovely that it stands out as a great achievement in furniture artistry.

Known as Biedermeier.

The style is known as Biedermeier. The name was given the pieces in derision, after the man Biedermeier, who was known to strip his contemporaries of all their pompousness and dignity, and it came to mean literally that it was stripped of its ornament and left almost naked in its structure. However, Biedermeier furniture was destined to live longer than any other style created by the German cabinetmakers. The style is distinctly a mahogany period in furniture, attracting beautiful veneers for its decorative effect and casually ornamented with dainty brass embellishments applied to the surfaces.

All of the foregoing classic styles are widely reproduced today in excellent authenticity. They perform services in the bedroom, dining room and living room of hundreds of contemporary American homes and represent a number of reasons why the mahogany styles are today's leaders in popular choice.

Mirror Panel Feature Of Model Apartment

A model apartment on display at one of the better known furniture houses in New York has a wide mirrored panel on one entire wall, surrounding the fireplace and extending to the ceiling. The vivid shades used in the room's decorations are reflected harmoniously.

The redecorating of homes may be financed under the modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration.

Lower Ceiling Common Now In Large Area

In most of the northern portions of the country ceiling heights have been brought down from the 10 to 12 foot elevations that our Victorian forebears cherished. The realization that all that space is useless waste and the reversion to the simple Colonial types of architecture have restored the proportions of rooms to those of that early day.

In some sections, the South particularly, the high ceiling still prevails. There are several reasons for this: the feeling that this extra space makes the rooms cooler, the lower cost of building, the absence of need to figure the heating charges as a prominent item of household expense, and the tradition of the stately old mansions of ante-bellum days.

While the psychological effect of great spaces above is to create a feeling of coolness, actually, unless that space is properly drained of its heated air by high windows or vent flues, it merely serves as a place to store up hotter and hotter air, which, in turn, heats the ceiling and the floor above. Any space more than 12 inches above the heads of the windows, unless ventilated, is of no value for cooling purposes.

If the heads of the windows are 7 feet above the floor line—which is well above the heads of most people—then a room with an 8-foot ceiling is really better than one with a 10-foot ceiling. In small houses the general proportions will be much more pleasing with this lesser height.

finest quality that will insure low upkeep cost to the ultimate owner.

At the same time, he is keeping in mind the trend toward more moderate prices. These homes average $7,350. All of the homes will be heated with Chrysler Air-Temp gas air-conditioned heating plants. The baths will be featured by Brigg's Beautyware colored fixtures, including the "non-skid" tub.

The homes are of the bungalow type and are fully insulated. The wall sections are 3 feet wide and 8 feet high, made of strip steel by the Berger Manufacturing Co., a subsidiary of the Republic Steel Co. These sections are covered with insulating material known as thermosote and the outer covering is 24-ounce copper, which is placed on the frames by Copper Homes, Inc., a subsidiary of Kennecott Copper Co.

FHA Office Sets Record.

Los Angeles, Calif.—The Southern California district office of the Federal Housing Administration received an average of 49 applications for insured mortgages a day during the week ended August 22. This was a record week for the office.

'Portfolio' Tells Detail History Of Mortgages

Article in FHA Circular Covers Developments Over Many Centuries.

The history of the mortgage and mortgage lending system is traced from the beginning of time in an article in the Mortgage Portfolio, issued by the Federal Housing Administration.

The article points out that the development of the mortgage has been a relentless crusade for justice to both lender and borrower. The first record of a mortgage comes from the Bible. Ancient Jewish laws provided for them. They were given without regard to distinction between personal and real property. This distinction was later developed by the Romans.

Originally the lender took possession of the thing mortgaged, but gradually it became the practice to leave the borrower in possession, contingent upon the payment of the debt. These early mortgages contained contractual agreements of any nature which the parties involved saw fit to include.

Because hard-pressed borrowers were being driven to make any sort of an agreement, the law began to impose certain restrictions. The old Anglo-Saxon form of mortgage was really a pledge. The lender took possession of the property, and the profits were applied to the curtailment of the debt. The borrower had the right to redeem at any time.

Lenders soon became unwilling to accept this type of security because of the difficulties in disposing of the property, due to the continuing right of the borrower. The ensuing reformation was violently reactionary, containing the condition that unless the mortgage was satisfied at a certain time the estate became vested in the lender without right of redemption.

The injustice in this agreement was quite apparent, but the courts were powerless to give relief. Thus equity came about and gave relief when the law failed. The King, after many appeals had been made to him, delegated an individual called a chancellor to act for him, and the acts of the chancellor came to be known as equity. Gradually there were established separate and distinct courts of equity. Foreclosure became the ony means by which the lender could divest the borrower of his equity of redemption.

As soon as the principle was established, however, creditors began to attempt its invasion, and a bold decision of equity was made that the creditor could not preclude himself from his right to redeem. Eventually the court favored an amendment which allowed the use of disinterested parties as trustees of the land until the debt was paid or the property conveyed to the lender.

Today the lender is considered as having no more than a security interest, with the ownership of the land remaining in the borrower, subject to this interest. This doctrine has been adopted by every jurisdiction in the United States, though technically a few States still cling to the common-law theory.

The newest innovation in the mortgage field is the insured home mortgage, introduced under the terms of the national housing act.

Chas. Williams HEALTH HOME

There Are 7 Homes in This New Group Just Completed

Hillandale, created two years ago, won instant approval from homeseekers who wanted city conveniences, fine homes and ample ground with country surroundings. This new group of 7 homes, open for inspection today, offers a wide variety of architecture to choose from.

6 to 8 Rooms

1 and 2 Tile Baths

The home illustrated above is an amazing example of what a fine builder can do when given a real opportunity. A center hall, all-brick home containing 7 rooms, 2 baths, recreation room and built-in garage. The floor plan is particularly fine. Living room is extra large and has a large fireplace and adjoining porch. There is a first floor den, dining room and electric kitchen. The three bedrooms and 2 tile baths are large and bright. The smart recreation room has a fireplace. There is an oil burner, laundry tubs and basement lavatory and toilet.

Savings Groups Increase Part In FHA System

Insured Mortgage Loans Show Gain of 216% in Eight Months.

Savings, building and loan associations nationally have increased their participation in the Federal Housing Administration's Insured Mortgage System 216.2 per cent since the first of the year, it is announced. This compares with a gain of 167.5 per cent for all participating institutions in the same eight months.

From January 1 up to September 1, 1936, these associations brought their total of home mortgages accepted for insurance by the Housing Administration from $22,474,034 to $71,052,396.

In the same period the associations increased their share of the grand total of mortgages accepted for insurance from 15.5 per cent to 17.1 per cent.

Steady Gains Made.

Steady gains throughout this year so far have been made by savings, building and loan associations in their number and in their percentage of all institutions approved as mortgagees, for the purpose of making insured home mortgage loans.

At the beginning of this year the Housing Administration had approved 8,046 private financial institutions (exclusive of branches) as mortgagees, of which 1,636 or 20.3 per cent were savings, building and loan associations. At the beginning of September, 9,339 institutions (exclusive of branches) had been approved as mortgagees, of which 2,126 or 22.8 per cent were savings, building and loan associations. This represents an increase of 30 per cent for the associations in this period, compared with 16 per cent for all approved institutions.

The percentage of mortgages accepted for insurance for new construction is higher for savings, building and loan associations, than for the total of all institutions, according to records of the Housing Administration. Of the grand total of mortgages accepted for insurance, 37 per cent have been for homes partly constructed or to be constructed from plans at the time the mortgage was accepted, while 45 per cent of mortgages made by the associations have been for such new construction.

Robert Saunders Offers New Home

An outstanding new home at 615 Georgetown road, in Bethesda, Md., is announced by Robert L. Saunders. It is priced at $9,450 and may be secured on terms to suit. It is open daily.

It is an all-brick detached home with six unusually large rooms, one bath, attached garage, large porches and is situated on a lot with 100 feet frontage and beautiful shade trees.

This "electric kitchen health home" may be visited by going out Wisconsin avenue to the Bank of Bethesda and bearing left on Old Georgetown road six blocks to the home.

Throckmorton Offers Homes In Kilmarock

Four Houses in New Group of 68 Are Presented for Inspection.

A new group of homes in Kilmarnock is being presented today by the office of Wm. M. Throckmorton, realtor, for Coffey & Mason, owners and builders. Kilmarnock is a close-in, restricted subdivision of fine homes in a beautiful wooded section of Takoma Park, Md.

The group presented comprises the first four of eight homes to be built and is featured by an exhibit home of six rooms and two baths in Anne street, Takoma Park, Md., furnished by Hutchison, Inc., and open today and daily.

These moderately priced homes equipped with modern gas appliances may be reached by going out Thirteenth street northwest and continuing on Piney Branch road to Cedar street; right on Cedar street to Carroll avenue and continuing on Carroll avenue to the Kilmarnock signs on the left.

The homes contain from five to seven rooms and one to two baths. They have large living rooms with wood burning fireplaces; two large bedrooms and tile bath, stepdown dining rooms, kitchens, laundries, servants' rooms and baths. There are separate boiler rooms with automatic gas heat.

Dust Factor in Varnishing.

Freedom from dust is important, especially in using varnish or enamel. If any particles of dust settle on the surface before it is entirely dry, an unsatisfactory finish may result. For this reason fine furniture finishing should not be done out-of-doors or on a porch.

Dunigan Presents New Home Group

Featured by an exhibit home, furnished by Hutchison, Inc., and draped by John F. Ligon, at 51 Hamilton street northwest, a new group of "electric kitchen health homes" is being presented by D. J. Dunigan, Inc.

They are all-brick homes on one of the highest elevations in the city. Each has seven large rooms, heated and paneled recreation room, detached garage, cedar-lined closets, oak floors, hardwood trim, colonial brass fixeures, large cellars, kitchen and dinette, double laundry trays, servant's toilet, coat closet with full length mirror, wrought iron rails on stairs, new type radiators, two or three colored tile baths with shower, rock wool insulation, Bryant gas boiler and many electric outlets.

The Dunigan Corporation has several floor plans. The homes are on deep lots extending to paved alleys and are priced at $9,250 and upward, on terms.

A Planned Community of Fine Homes Protected By Sensible Restrictions

Whether you build or buy a home in this park-like community, your investment is secure for many generations.

Here is permanent protection against the encroachment of commerce, traffic dangers and the many other influences that have destroyed the value of less fortunate communities.

And too, you will appreciate the controlled environment where your neighbors are folk such as you yourself would choose.

Adhering to a strenuous building and improvement program, this summer, Westmoreland Hills is well worth visiting. Especially so, these October days when the wooded valleys and knolls are painted in brilliant colors.

Stop at the office on the Circle and we will gladly take you on an inspection trip. Or, if you prefer, our Home Planning Department is at your service to assist you in selecting a site or planning a home at no obligation.

Out Massachusetts Avenue to Westmoreland Circle, at the District Line. Office and entrance are on the Circle.

Realtors Need Faith in Selves, Luchs Declares

First Class Opens Session In Southeastern U. With 90 Present.

At the recent opening session of the real estate course being jointly sponsored by the Washington Real Estate Board and Southeastern University, Morton J. Luchs, first vice president of the board and vice president of Shannon & Luchs Co., discussed the "Fundamentals of the Real Estate Business." More than 90 attended and Dr. James A. Bell, president of Southeastern University, reported that enrollments had exceeded expectations.

In outlining his subject, Luchs stressed the importance of education, personality and honesty to persons entering the real estate field and told how through the efforts of local real estate boards and the National Association of Real Estate Boards, the real estate business has been elevated to the plane of a profession under which realtors throughout the country conduct their business under a code of ethics.

"Choose your business or profession as early in life as possible and once your mind is made up, you can and will succeed if you are in earnest with yourself," Luchs said. "You must create confidence and faith in yourself as you go along, because only if you possess confidence in what you are doing can you create it in the minds of those with whom you come in contact and with whom you want to do business. To be a success in the real estate business, or any other business, you must begin at the bottom, acquiring and accumulating knowledge, and from this knowledge you will do sound planning and sound analyzing of facts incidental to your business."

Joseph A. Herbert, jr., was counselor and discussion leader.

The schedule of the classes follows:

October 26, discussion and problems. November 2, "Business Properties—Sales and Leasing," Carl G. Rosinski. November 9, discussion and analysis of small business property. November 16, "Renting and Property Management," Francis A. Murray, vice president H. G. Smithy Co., realtors. November 23, discussion and problems. November 30, "Settlements and Titles," Edgar M. Mayne, vice president, Real Estate & Columbia Title Insurance Cos. December 7, discussion and preparation of settlement statements. December 14, "Appraisal Methods," Joseph A. Herbert, jr., president Joseph A. Herbert & Sons, realtors. January 4, discussion of model appraisal. January 11, "Financing Real Estate Transactions," G. Calvert Bowie, vice president H. L. Rust Co., realtors. January 18, discussion and analysis of project for loan. January 25, "What the Real Estate Broker Should Know About the Law," Roger J. Whiteford, counsel, Washington Real Estate Board. February 1, "Home Building, Design and Costs," Waverly Taylor, president of Waverly Taylor, Inc., realtors. February 8, discussion of home building problems and materials.

Members of the board who desire to attend individual lectures may do so upon the payment of $5 for each lecture.

Architects' Paper Praises FHA Work

The recent announcement by Federal Housing Administrator Stewart McDonald that the average mortage insured by the Housing Administration for the first six months of 1936 was $4,001 "is evidence that FHA is achieving its primary goal", according to an article in the American Architect and Architecture.

Through this announcement, the article continues, the Housing Administration gives proof that, "despite rising real estate values, FHA is making it possible for potential low-cost-home owners to procure mortgages and that these same people are grabbing at the chance."

Discussing Mr. McDonald's comment on the rapidly increasing general interest in low-priced homes, the article stated:

"Looking for the reason behind the operative builder's comparatively rapid return to prosperity, it becomes immediately apparent that the Federal Housing Administration must be given the lion's share of the credit. There is no occasion for surprise, therefore, when a survey of 1,200 operative builders and real estate salesmen in 22 cities discloses that this group is highly complimentary to FHA.

Building in Rome, Ga., Setting New Record

Pay increases for 2,800 textile-mill workers is not the only good news in Rome, Ga., this week, according to the Atlanta Journal. The Rome Fire Department, which also handles the building permits, reports "a steady increase in building activities for 1936, with indications the year will break all records." The nine-month total for 1936, according to Chief Clerk Roy Underwood, amounts to $318,651, the first time since 1930 that building permits in Rome have exceeded $300,000.

Walter L. Funderburk, sales manager of the North Washington Realty Co., is back at his office after illness.

Milton F. Schwab, sales manager for G. F. Mikkelson & Son, developers of Beechwood and Highwood, has returned from a recent fishing trip.

HERBERT

A remarkable sales record has been made by Waple & James, Inc. Up to October 1 that corporation had made 142 sales for the nine months, representing a valuation of $1,000,227.22.

More than 71 assignments have been made in the real estate course opened by the Washington Real Estate Board and Southeastern University. Among the faculty and lecturers are President James A. Bell, of the university; Joseph A. Herbert, jr., class counselor; Charles J. Rust, executive secretary of the Washington Real Estate Board; Morton J. Luchs, vice president of Shannon & Luchs Co. and first vice president of the Washington Real Estate Board; Carl G. Rosinski; Francis A. Murray, vice president of the H. G. Smithy Co. and second vice president of the Washington Real Estate Board; Edgar M. Mayne, vice president of the Real Estate and Columbia Title Insurance Cos.; G. Calvert Bowie, vice president of the H. L. Rust Co.; Roger J. Whiteford, counsel of the Washington Real Estate Board, and Waverly Taylor, president, Waverly Taylor, Inc., and a director of the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

Henry J. Robb has been visiting at Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Leon Chatelain, jr., 726 Jackson place northwest, received notice recently that he has been approved for a senior membership in the Society of Residential Appraisers, national organization devoted to the development of higher standards of practice and sound appraisal methods. Notification came through George W. West, Atlanta, national president. The board of governors of the society, 15 men representing home financing, appraising and academic interest in residential property from many parts of the country, must give their approval to each person applying for membership.

CHATELAIN.

Senior members represent the highest classification now attainable in the society. Mr. Chatelain was admitted to this rank on the basis of his experience with residential property and his reputation among his fellows in the business. Five years of appraising experience on residences is a prerequisite to this ranking.

The local man is now in line for attainment of the title, "Fellow of the Society of Residential Appraisers," the first of which honors will be given next year. A candidate for this classification must be a senior member of the society for two years and have seven years experience in the field before he is eligible to take the written examinations required. Since there are no seniors of longer than a year's standing, it will not be possible to create "fellows" until 1937, it is explained by Mr. West.

Because of his new connection Mr. Chatelain will be brought into immediate and close contact with all of the latest developments in the technic of arriving at the proper value of homes, since the society is constantly directing research which will aid in the solution of many problems of home value encountered in the past. The group, which has headquarters in Chicago, gives special attention to home appraisals for mortgage lending institutions.

F. C. Hines, sales director for William H. Saunders Co., Inc., is a charter member of the Society of Residential Appraisers.

The October "Home of the Month," of the land developers and home builders division of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, designed by H. T. Lindeberg, architect, leaves the traditional behind. The house, complete plans for which are presented in McCall's for October, has two flat roof-decks for living purposes, reached from all upstairs rooms. The garden terrace is approachable from both the dining room and the multi-use room. Glass bricks are used for interior decorating effects rather than just because glass bricks are new. The house is functional, livable and modern.

Employment Shows Gain.

The United States Department of Labor reports that the employment index in the paint, varnish and lacquer manufacturing industry is 112.9 per cent for July 1936, which is an increase of 4 per cent over the same month a year ago. The pay roll index is 160.4 per cent, or an increase of 12.9 per cent over July 1935.

Treating Wall Board.

New wall board must have all nail heads, joints and cracks filled and sanded before being painted. The wall board is then ready to be sized and primed.

Blue Room for Formality.

Blue-painted walls are cool, restful and make an excellent background for a light room that aspires to a certain amount of formality in its treatment.

Automotive News

For the first time since the building of automobiles became a quantity production proposition, the wishes of the future owner as to what he would like in the way of a motor car are being incorporated in the 1937 cars soon to be announced. Heretofore the motor car has been a compromise machine, problems of manufacture as well as necessity for radical changes in design each year having made it necessary for the builders to consider the composite owner rather than the desires of the individual buyer.

Already some of the new cars are on the street and in other cases dealers have them in their warerooms and, though not supposed to show them until announcement time, the desire to take their friends behind the scenes has overcome the factory wishes in the matter. Those who have seen or driven the new cars now in Washington are all in accord that in 1937 the automobiles, one and all, will be bigger and better. Though prices have not been announced in but one or two cases it is generally agreed that they will be lower when the improvements in beauty, comfort and performance are taken into consideration and it would not be surprising if in cases they are not actually lower in dollars and cents.

Opening of the New York Automobile Show on a Wednesday instead of on a Saturday night, as had been the custom since the date of the first automobile show some 30 years ago, will be, to say the least, an innovation. The show will run through until a week from the following Saturday night. In all there will be 34 makes of passenger cars on display in addition to trailers. Washington's automobile show, as do 22 others in the country, will open on November 14 and continue through the following week.

H. J. Klingler, president of the Pontiac Motor Co., presided at the Washington zone dealer luncheon and sales meeting held at the Mayflower Hotel last Friday. In all there were in the neighborhood of 200 dealers, sale managers and salesmen in attendance. Sales plans for the coming year were discussed as well as a pre-showing of the new cars. This was one of 30 meetings that are now being held throughout the country in advance of the public announcement of the new cars. H. H. Grothjan, Pontiac zone manager for Washington, presided at the meeting and introduced Mr. Klingler.

Lee D. Butler, Inc., have taken the agency for the Travelodge, Pierce Arrow's new tourist trailer. This is the first trailer to be designed and built by an automobile manufacturer, Pierce Arrow Motor Car Co. The design of this trailer gives many evidences of automobile engineering experience. For instance, the framework is all-steel, welded into one complete bridge structure. This insures unusual strength and contributes much to its safety feature. A new type of independent wheel suspension is utilized to provide maximum riding comfort. Regardless of road contour or surface, the body of the trailer rides on an even keel, free of side sway and twisting.

W. T. Agee, zone manager for Oldsmobile, will be host to his dealers in this area at a meeting and luncheon tomorrow at which time plans will be discussed for the selling year of 1937. The meeting will be held at the Belasco Theater, while the luncheon meeting place is to be the Washington Hotel. C. L. McCuen, president of the Olds Motor Works, will explain the factory plans for the coming year, while R. L. Myers, regional manager, will discuss the sales problems.

For 1937 the new Dodge line of automobiles will consist of ten body styles—business, rumble-seat and convertible coupes, 2-door sedan and 2-door touring sedan, 4-door sedan, 4-door touring sedan and convertible sedan, 7-passenger sedan and limousine. The bodies of the 1937 cars are entirely new; they are of all-steel construction including roofs which are integral with the remainder of the bodies. In addition to insulating the bodies themselves, a decidedly novel method of body mounting has been adopted. It is by means of chassis outriggers equipped with rubber spools through which the chassis and body are prevented from being actual metal-to-metal contact.

Chevrolet dealers from the Washington area will gather in Baltimore on Thursday for their annual sales meeting and preview of the 1937 automobile.

Cadillac and Le Salle dealers from the Washington territory will gather at the Mayflower Hotel today to discuss their plans for merchandising the 1937 line. The meeting will be under the direction of R. L. Newton, assistant general sales manager of the Cadillac Motor Car Co.

'MyHome' Opening Will Occur Today

mitted by William F. Tapp, who had temporarily abandoned his ambition of becoming an architect and who, immediately upon receiving the cash prize, enrolled in a Washington school of architecture.

Leon Chatelain, jr., Institute member, the architect, in interpreting Tapp's design produced a beautiful set of drawings and after a brief ceremony, at which were present officials of the District government, Housing Administration and civic leaders, ground was broken and the house begun. Since that time the building has steadily progressed until now it is ready for formal dedication to the public today.

While the house was under construction, Woodward & Lothrop erected a model of the living room in their interior decorating department in order to demonstrate what could be done with a room of that size and proportion. During the display of this furnished living room, the sponsors of the original contest held a further contest for interior decoration of this room.

Out of the several hundred entries, the interior decoration committee, consisting of Mrs. Howard G. Nichols, president of the Washington branch of the University Women's Club; Mrs. Wilson Compton, member of the building committee of the Y. W. C. A., and Mrs. Lynn R. Edminster, of the house decorating committee of the American Association of University Women, selected the design and color scheme submitted by Mrs. L. M. Pettis, who will today receive the award for her winning design.

Now everything is completed and today "My Home for 1936" will be opened for inspection by the citizenry of Washington. While the doors will be opened at 10 a. m., a dedicatory exercise will be held this afternoon at 3 o'clock. There will be present at these exercises officials of the District government, Federal Housing Administration, presidents of various civic associations and a small list of invited guests. These exercises will be conducted from the porch on the west side of "My Home," and after the brief dedicatory program those invited will make an inspection of the home and its furnishings.

Thus will come onto the Washington market "My Home of 1936." The house is of English provincial design, with two decorative front gables, beautiful rear elevation, featuring a large bay window which takes in the entire exterior wall of the dining room and leads to a paved terrace.

The contest is said to be the first of this type ever held, inasmuch as it gave expression to the laymen's ideas of what should be contained in a home of his own choosing. The success of the contest and wide interest shown by the public not only in the design of the house but in the interior decorative treatment, have demonstrated to the sponsors, W. C. & A. N. Miller, the desirability of the continuance of this type of competition.

The sponsors have determined that there shall be a "My Home for 1937," concerning which announcement will soon be made. It is to be hoped that the many Washingtonians who entered in the last contest will do so again and that an annual reward of as great merit may be a feature of the Washington program of housing. It is also to be hoped that the same close co-operation will be repeated in the coming contest by those members of the architectural profession who may be invited to participate.

Michigan Park Model Homes Win Approval

House Sponsored by Post Priced Under $10,000; Type Is English.

City approval has been expressed of The Washington Post model group of homes in Michigan Park.

The group is the product of the veteran building firm, Jerome S. Murray Co., Inc., and is presented by Paul P. Stone, realtor, long associated with residential development, founder of the beautiful Woodridge Gardens project and now successfully operating in the Hillcrest section.

In a price range under $10,000 the houses in the new group offer the best in construction and equipment as well as the utmost in convenient arrangement and beauty of design. Located in the 1300 block of Allison street northeast, they focus attention on this attractive community. Their location is a delightful, cool elevation in a pleasant neighborhood built up enough not to be isolated but free from the congestion of older localities. The exhibit home is at 1323 Allison.

Of stately English-type architecture, the group consists of eight semidetached structures of brick and stone construction with slate roofs. The unusually deep lots, which are triply-terraced in front, give to these dwellings an effect of dignified height in keeping with their high general location, which affords a widespread vista extending for miles over the Northeast section.

The impressive fronts of the residences are bisected by towering chimneys of stone on either side of which the roofs slope gracefully over large double, front windows, lighting the large and comfortable living rooms, with their hospitable fireplaces set in corner angles.

Likewise, on either side of the central chimneys are cool, inviting porches with metal trellised pillars, which lead to the front entrances, which open into foyers with convenient cloak closets. Back of the living rooms are dining rooms with ample wall space and graceful buffet alcoves, and back of these are bright, sunny breakfast rooms adjoining modern kitchens. The homes have concealed radiation.

The location of this group is within easy reach of schools, stores, churches and transportation.

Terraplanes, Hudsons Break Forty Records

'37 Stock Cars Establish New Marks for Speed and Endurance.

Forty official stock-car records for endurance and sustained speed over long distances have been broken by the 1937 Hudsons and Terraplanes on the Bonneville Salt Flats, Utah, under supervision of the contest board of the American Automobile Association, according to word received here by J. T. Powell, Washington zone manager.

This is the first time that a company has established new models as official performance and endurance record holders before announcing the new cars to the public.

Long-Distance Records.

Included in the records is the unlimited class closed-car record for 24 hours, captured by the Hudson, and the unlimited closed-car record for 1,000 miles, broken first by a Terraplane brougham and then smashed by a Hudson. The 24-hour record captured by the Hudson betters one set in 1934 by a high-priced, ultra-streamlined car.

Besides the 24-hour mark, every time and distance record for closed cars, regardless of size or price, was broken by the Hudson, from 500 to 2,000 miles and from 6 to 24 hours. This includes nine official unlimited closed-car records.

Besides the unlimited records, Hudson broke 23 class C closed stock car records. This class includes all cars with pitton displacements up to 305 cubic inches, which takes every American stock car regardless of price or size. These records were for 10 to 2,000 miles, and for 1 hour to 24 hours.

Stamina Stressed.

In addition to the 1,000-mile unlimited record, the new Terraplane broke seven class C marks. No attention was given to the short parint records, but only to the long-distance marks, run to emphasize the stamina and reliability of the cars, rather than stressing speed primarily.

The rigid requirements of the American Automobile Association contest board demand that cars participating in record attempts be chosen by association officials from factory production lines. The Hudsons and Terraplanes which made the 0 new records were selected by Detroit representatives of the contest board. After being turned over to these officials, the cars were torn down for complete inspection and checking against company blue prints to establish absolute proof that they were stock cars.

Bonneville Salt Flats is a broad expanse of level, hard-packed salt deposits. The Hudson and Terraplane records were made on a circular track laid out on the salt beds so that all records were made with and against the wind, as required by the American Automobile Association.

Home Construction In Detroit Up 250%

The dollar volume of home building in Detroit during September, according to the Detroit News, is 250 per cent ahead of September last year. What seems more impressive, however, is the fact that for the first time in the history of Detroit home building accounts for 75 per cent of all construction in that city. The figures were prepared by the department of buildings.

Modern Thatched Roof Made of Indian Reed

Those who have longed in vain for a thatched-roof cottage may now take hope. A modernized thatched shingle is being produced that gives all the charm of Ann Hathaway's cottage. It is made of Indian reed, attached to an asbestos shingle. Gutters are unnecessary with this roof as the thatch absorbs the rain as it falls and dries out slowly afterward.

Capital Is Fifth In Construction For September

New York at Head of List; Heavy Gain Reported Over Nation.

Washington remained in fifth place on a list of 128 leading cities in estimated cost of building construction for which permits were issued in September, compiled by the United States Department of Labor and made public recently. New York, as customary, headed the list for the month with new building valued at $17,708,645. Los Angeles was second with new construction having a valuation of $7,675,154; Chicago, third, with $7,019,700, and Detroit fourth, with $4,306,811. The local figure was $3,690,627.

While building construction activity in September, as measured by the value of permits issued, showed a seasonal decline of 12.6 per cent, it showed a rise of more than 84 per cent, as compared with September, 1935, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins reported.

"The decline in the value of permits issued in September, as compared with August, was attributable entirely to the construction in public buildings," she said. "If private building is taken by itself, the value of permits issued showed an advance of 1 per cent during the month.

"Compared with the same month of last year, all types of building construction show pronounced gains. The value of new residential buildings registered an increase of 111 per cent, the value of new non-residential buildings gains 19 per cent, and the value of additions, alterations and repairs increased 21 per cent.

"During the first nine months of 1936 permits issued for buildings in cities with a population of 10,000 or over were valued at $907,924,000. This represents a gain of 71 per cent over the first nine months of 1935. The value of new residential buildings for which permits were issued during these months amounted to $451,078,000, an increase of $254,087,000, or 129 per cent. The value of new non-residential buildings advanced 49 per cent, and the value of additions, alterations and repairs to existing structures, 33 per cent."

The percentage change from August to September in the number and cost of buildings for which permits were issued for each of the different types of construction in 1,455 identical cities were issued for each of the different types of construction in 1,455 identical cities having a population of 2,500 or over, is indicated in the following tabulation:

Change from August to September, 1936: Type of building.	Number.	Est. cost
New residential	— 0.6	—12.6
New nonresidential	+13.1	— 8.3
Additions, alterations and repairs	+ 5.8	—17.4
Total	+ 5.8	—12.6

The percentage change as compared with September, 1935, is shown in the table below for 758 identical cities having a population of 10,000 or over.

Change from Sept., 1935, to Sept., 1936: Type of building.	Number.	Est. cost
New residential	+76.9	+110.7
New nonresidential	+37.6	+ 19.4
Additions, alterations and repairs	+15.7	+ 30.9
Total	+27.9	+ 64.3

There was an increase of 102 per cent in the number of family-dwelling units provided in these 758 identical cities comparing September, 1936, with the corresponding month of the preceding year.

The increase in the number of family-dwelling units provided for by permits issued during the first nine months of 1936 as compared with the first nine months of 1935 is given below:

Change from first nine months in 1935 to first nine months in 1936: Type of building.	Number.	Est. cost
New residential	+91.1	+132.2
New residential	+36.4	+ 46.5
Additions, alterations and repairs	+ 9.6	+ 23.1
Total	+27.7	+ 71.2

The data collected by the Bureau of Labor Statistics include, in addition to private construction, the number and value of buildings for which contracts were awarded by Federal and State governments in the cities included in the report. For September, 1936, the value of these public buildings amounted to $13,185,000; for August, 1936, to $32,515,000; and for September, 1935, to $9,314,000.

Permits were issued during September for the following important building projects: In New York City—in the Borough of the Bronx for apartment houses to cost nearly $1,250,000; in the Borough of Brooklyn for apartment houses to cost nearly $900,000; in the Borough of Manhattan for apartment houses to cost over $1,400,000; in the borough of Queens for apartment houses to cost nearly $2,300,000; in Syracuse, N. Y., for a school building to cost $400,000; in Kokomo, Ind., for a sewage plant to cost over $300,000; in Battle Creek, Mich., for factory buildings to cost $450,000; in Detroit, Mich., for factory buildings to cost over $400,000, and for store and mercantile buildings to cost over $360,000; in Pontiac, Mich., for a factory building to cost $350,000; in Dayton, Ohio, for factory buildings to cost $300,000; in Washington, D. C., for apartment houses to cost nearly $1,000,000; in Miami Beach, Fla., for apartment houses to cost nearly $400,000; in Long Beach, Calif., for school buildings to cost over $300,000, and in Los Angeles, Calif., for apartment buildings to cost over $450,000, and for school buildings to cost nearly $2,400,000.

Shelves Add Utility To Wide French Doors

If the wide vista a French doorway affords spoils your room, the remedy employed by one homeowner may be effective. Half of the opening was fitted with a set of narrow shelves for books and pottery.

Improvements may be built into your home with funds obtained from a private financial institution that holds a contract of insurance with the Federal Housing Administration.

Life of Homes Is Made Longer By Fall Painting

Federal Funds Available for Modernization on Credit Plan.

Early fall is an ideal time for exterior painting of houses and other property. The hot summer months have dried out the wood, putting it in perfect condition for painting. The modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration makes funds available for work of this type.

Surveys made throughout the country show that hundreds of thousands of houses have reached the point where the old paint job has ceased to protect. The open pores of the siding, porch surfaces, window frames, and steps are like a thirsty blotter ready to soak up whatever comes along. A good paint job will find and cover these exposed surfaces with an attractive, moisture-resistant surface, preserving the wood and preventing an expensive repair bill later on.

The coming of winter makes a well-painted exterior for the house almost as necessary as extra clothing for the family. Severe weather alternating with thaws plays havoc with unprotected wood. The various incidentals of a paint job are also important in preparing for the cold season. Reputtying the windows, fixing leaks in the roof, replacing rotted sections of wood, and other operations that should accompany a complete job of painting will make the home snug and right, ready for the worst that old Boreas can bring.

Building Trades Association Reports Big Gains During 1936

Survey of Employers Conducted in 44 States and 40 Key Cities Shows 90 per Cent Advance in Nine Months Over Volume in 1935.

Building volume the nine months ended October 1 shows an outstanding gain over the 1935 comparable period, says E. M. Craig, executive secretary of the National Association of Building Trades Employers. This news is taken from a recent survey made by Robert D. Steele, the association statistician, of 44 States and 40 key cities. Residential construction tops all other building types.

Construction totals of 44 States the first nine months of 1936 mark up a dollar value of $2,212,634,899 as compared to $1,285,755,808 in the 1935 period, a gain in excess of 90 per cent.

The following tabulation gives the comparative nine months' dollar values and issued permits in 1935 and 1936 along with each city's order of rank.

Aside from Buffalo and Kansas City, all other cities show appreciable gains above the 1935 period. Dayton, with 363 per cent, has the largest increase over the nine months of 1935.

New York again leads in financial volume, $155,843,000. Los Angeles is second with $45,829,918; Detroit, third, $31,749,549; Washington, fourth, $25,109,876. Chicago, second largest city in America, with $14,126,560, holds seventh position.

Although the New York home total is for eight months, they are also leading in home building with ground broken for 21,352 homes since January 1. Los Angeles is second with 5,133. One and two family dwellings are included in this figure. Detroit is third with 3,073; Philadelphia, fourth, with 1,499, and San Francisco, fifth, with 1,361. The Chicago 1936 total was 607 homes. The like 1935 period was 272 homes. It is estimated that over 200,000 Nation-wide new homes will be under way by the end of 1936. While considerably short of a normal year's output of 500,000 homes, it is far above the last five years.

On issued building permits, Los Angeles leads with 22,330. Milwaukee is second with 18,259; Cincinnati, third, with 13,873, and Detroit fourth, with 12,602. Chicago occupies twenty-fourth position.

An apartment and hotel shortage exists at Miami Beach, Fla. This winter playground lists 33 hotels and 84 apartment buildings started since January 1. This community says an influx of skilled building labor from all over the United States is working there and the major portion of their building activities is being done by private capital. Atlanta, Cleveland, Dayton, Des Moines, Detroit, Duluth, Little Rock, Louisville, Milwaukee, San Francisco and St. Paul report apartment shortages accompanied with rapidly rising rents.

On the Pacific Coast rent increases have taken more of a rebound in relation to other scattered country-wide sections. Despite residential upturns ranging up to 25 per cent in Los Angeles, Seattle and other Far-Western cities say their construction gains do not begin to measure up to demand.

In analyzing 1937 building prospects all cities predict that next year will show a substantial improvement over 1936. Underlying building improvement forces, they point out, continue strong and are genuine.

Twenty cities report a shortage of certain building crafts. Duluth complains of a bricklayer shortage and Kansas City a scarcity of bricklayers and ironworkers; Des Moines, a decided shortage of all skilled labor due to WPA. New York estimates 53,000 building mechanics now engaged on Federal projects within its borders.

Craig says one deplorable aftermath of this prolonged construction stagnation is that when construction swings back to normalcy a shortage of skilled building help cannot be averted. How large this will loom is a guess, but it is certain that an alarming lack of competent building help will be impossible to recruit to keep abreast with the gigantic backlog of neglected construction types.

Aside from lack of trained apprentices, deaths, etc., Craig believes many mechanics in the upper middle-age bracket have abandoned their tools for all time. He ascribes two reasons. One is that the mechanic of 50 years, or over, is reconciled to the advantages of steady employment in other business fields over seasonal work in the building industry. The other is that these mechanics, due to slowing up tendencies descending upon them in the autumn of life, are skeptical of their physical abilities to do a fair day's work in competition with the younger element. Compared to 1929 when 1,500,000 building craftsmen were employed, Craig estimates this number is thinned down to less than 1,00,000 workers available at the present time.

While wage demands on collective bargaining rates continue unabated, it is the unanimous belief of contractors that this unstable situation could be largely remedied if the building trades for a definite period of time would agree to a voluntary reduction. This assurance, they also aver, would release a flood of building orders held in abeyance by prohibitive building costs that would be surprising and would result in more days of employment and higher earnings on a yearly average for mechanics when compared to present wages coupled with less working days.

Canadian Firm Studies Real Estate Valuations

Toronto, Canada.—The North American Life Assurance Co. is compiling information regarding methods of appraisals and valuations of real property. It has requested a copy of the Federal Housing Administration's Underwriters' Manual, following the recommendation of its system by Architectural Forum.

Red's primary use is as an accent color, particularly in rooms that receive little sunlight. As such, it should be used sparingly and with neutral backgrounds.

Handrails on Stairs Prevent Accidents

All stairs should have handrails. Too often with stairs that descend between walls the handrail is omitted. If such is the case in your house, one should be installed before someone falls and breaks a leg. Such improvements can be made with funds obtained under the Modernization Credit Plan of the Federal Housing Administration.

Lily Pool Curb.

A concrete curb may be placed around a lily pool if desired. In places where a pool is shaded, many builders place boulders and rocks around the sides. Whatever type of pool is selected, the owner will find it helps to improve the appearance of the home garden.

New Furniture Motif Created By California

Trend Follows Mexican Styling, Popularity Spreading East.

By Jean Scott.

Los Angeles Calif.—New and distinctive furniture inspired by early California and interpreted in terms of today's comfort, practicality and livable charm, is gaining great popularity on the West Coast and is also invading the rest of the country.

With a hand-hewn look in its authentic Mexican forms, antique wood finishes, colorful textiles and hand-wrought iron details, it breathes the spirit of hospitable haciendas and yet fits harmoniously into all types of modern homes.

Some of the chairs have leather seats—others fiber ones. Colorful tile is sometimes introduced in the tops of cocktail tables. Wrought-iron is used to embellish tables, chairs, sideboards and chests of drawers. Leather is also used as a decorative medium.

The finishes of the furniture are of especial interest. "Mexico white" is one of the most popular. Its antique look is achieved by the wood grain showing through the lacquered white finish. "Smoke tree," the name of another of the attractive finishes, is a dusty brown—the tone of the desert smoke trees in autumn. Then is also "straw ivory," a pale yellow. Old wood has a very dark, weathered look, like driftwood. "Smoky maple" is dull and dark, like antiqued maple. "Fiesta" is the gayest of all, with its brilliant hand-painted decorations in typical Mexican style.

But the new and unique California furniture does not draw entirely on Mexico for its inspiration. There is the furniture with the nautical note, for instance—white painted beds with clear blue accents, with headboards and footboards laced with rope. Then there are the double-deck bunks, which can be converted into sturdy, good-looking twin beds.

Southern California has a way of daring to be itself. Now that winter is coming, instead of conceding to tradition and setting about to make houses less frivolous in mood, California homemakers are deliberately planning to keep and refresh the easy charm, the spirited color so characteristic of the Southwest. Color schemes for interiors are airy and light-hearted. Walls are being painted in dusty pastels, coral and turquoise, to give staccato accent to deep blues, plum, browns and eggshell furnishings.

Children Need Separate Room For Home Study

Quiet Place to Do Work Will Help Keep Up Marks, Experts Declare.

Parents who are disturbed by the low school reports of their children might look with advantage into the "home-work environment." If a child attempts to study in the same room with his elders, he is too apt to be interested by their conversation or occupation for successful results.

If the radio is turned on, it is impossible for him to concentrate sufficiently on his work, and the ringing of the telephone or door bells add to the distraction. A child needs a special place, preferably outside his sleeping room, for study. Quiet is essential. A convenient place for books, writing, or drawing is needed and in a room where there are as few distractions as possible.

Neutral wall tints, few pieces of furniture, freedom from outside noises, and, above all, adequate light, both natural and artificial, all contribute to peace of mind that is necessary for satisfactory study and potential high marks.

In some homes it is possible to arrange for a desirable study in the attic. The basement where oil or gas is used for fuel also affords an excellent place for a desk and all the accessories for undisturbed work. Sometimes a porch may be altered to suit this need. Funds for this work may be obtained under the modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration.

There are frequently outside causes and extenuating circumstances that are responsible for low marks, and perhaps some parents, not realizing the handicaps under which their children study at home, should share the blame.

Driveway Lamps Urged Even in City

It is often difficult to locate a driveway unless it is marked in some manner. Of course, it is more difficult in the country, but many urban residences also have drives which are not easy to locate at night.

Attractive lamps may be placed at the entrance. These may be placed on gate posts or on special standards erected for the purpose. The name or street number of the residence can be cut out of a flat metal piece and used in the shade for the light. If properly designed this will add to the attractiveness as well as the usefulness of the lamps.

The lights need not be bright. On the contray, a soft glow is preferable, and will satisfactorily serve to make the dimensions of the drive.

Four-Color Combination Makes Attractive Room

An attractive living room can be developed by using chartreuse green, aubergine deep green and white as the color keynotes. Chartreuse for the painted walls, aubergine for the rug and the upholstery in one chair. White for the window curtains, the ceiling, the lamps and several pieces of the furniture—some of the white chairs to be upholstered in the deep green. Mahogany pieces can be introduced effectively in such a room.

Good Furniture Craftsmanship Is Easily Seen

The quality features of good furniture are not always among the "hidden values." Particularly in case goods, such as dining room and bedroom furniture, the approved cabinet-making methods may easily be seen.

In buying a dining room or bedroom suite, the purchaser would do well to ask to see the full frame construction of the cabinet pieces, such as the sideboard, china closet and server. She should ask to be shown the dovetailing feature of the drawers and the fitting of the doors to their frame. Dust-proof interiors of the drawers may be seen without difficulty and represent one of the features of quality products. Mirrors and their frames are visible as to their craftsmanship and any experienced salesman may demonstrate their production.

Only in upholstered furniture is it difficult to distinguish a well-made piece from that of an inferior product. The surfaces, frames, etc., may be, to all appearances, a quality product but the purchaser must take the seller's word for the stuffing of the chair.

Lights Needed on Stairs.

Stairways, especially those leading to basements or attics, should be well lighted. The use of electric switches, conveniently located, may be the means of serious accident prevention.

Realty Notes

by Herbert U. Nelson

Secretary, National Association of Real Estate Boards.

For the first time since the final quarter of 1928, home building has again become the largest single class of new construction—topping both nonresidential building and public works. This it used to do by a wide margin in predepression years. It is a happy augury that just at this time, when the building of homes in considerable numbers is reopening, we should have a strong movement for the preservation of our old buildings of historical and architectural value, and a decided public interest in the quality and charm of the homes of the past that have survived.

What is more, we have begun to do something about them, in a systematic way.

The largest piece of work of the kind is the record of existing buildings of historic interest now being made by the Federal Government with the active co-operation of the architects of the country. This survey covers not only homes but public buildings, some industrial buildings, and bridges and other structures that are significant in the history of our architecture, and in our American social history. Pictures of these old structures, and data about them, are being collected under the National Park service of the Interior Department and with the co-operation of the Library of Congress.

Cover Distinctive Types.

The completed records that have been made and catalogued for public use so far cover distinctive types of building for past periods in 40 of our States. The list includes a number of log buildings, many an old stone house, one sod house, at least, the Southwest's adobe, and many and many a sturdy frame house, some of them almost as old as white settlement in America. An example, not the oldest of these frame houses, is the Bowne house, in Flushing, Long Island, built in 1661.

With the search of old records, to verify the history of these houses, the romance of the life that has gone on within them is being brought again to light, and newspapers are acquainting people with what is being rediscovered about the structures in their own communities. It adds something to our sense of the permanence of home values, for example, to learn that the old John Bowne house has remained in possession of various members of the family of its builder throughout its 275 years, and is today the residence of two of John Bowne's direct descendants.

Brown University, in preparing for Rhode Island's tercentenary, has done a real public service by preparing models of the State's historic houses for exhibit over the State. Cleveland's chapter of the Institute of Architects has done something similar to show the people of their city houses that have endured.

We build something valuable into our communities when we keep the structures that have architectural worth as well as when we keep those irreplacable because of their historical meaning. And in thinking of them we will get some direct sense of what is good and satisfying that we may well carry over into today's homebuilding.

The building of one-family houses for sale is increasing somewhat more rapidly than is the building of such houses by individuals for their own use. This is one of the ways in which we are getting back to normal.

During the depression new home building, so far as there has been any, has been to a greater extent than is normally the case by individuals building for their own use. But under ordinary conditions a large proportion of our homebuilding has come to be for people who would rather see their house completed before they choose it. In the first nine months of this year, Dodge Corporation figures show, dwellings built for sale again exceeded, slightly, in number the dwellings built for owners' use. Dwellings erected by operative builders in the first nine months of this year show a 166 per cent increase over the number for 1934. Dwellings built by individuals for their own occupancy show a 146 per cent increase over the number so built in 1934.

We may measure the growing pressure to bulid by this figure: Rents on single family houses in metropolitan centers for the first time for years are now within 10 per cent of the 1926 level. Rents for apartments on the other hand are still little more than half the 1926 rates.

Cement Advised For Iron Cracks

Cracks and leaks in cast iron can be repaired with iron cement. This comes in the form of a fine powder. Mixed with water, it forms a thick paste. Blend it well, for water and powder do not mix readily.

The cement must penetrate the crack. For a pipe, radiator or other work which must be water tight, use a slender tool for widening the crack to a width which will permit the proper penetration of the cement.

Force the cement into the crack and pack it by hammering with a flat tool. If there is considerable pressure in a pipe, reinforce the mended section with a hose clamp such as that used on water connections of an automobile engine. If there is a possibility that the crack may extend and become longer, drill holes at each end and fill these with cement.

Solid Foundation.

If concrete or masonary steps are to be installed, be sure the ground on which they are to be placed is solid and not recent fill. Filled ground settles over a long period and the steps will settle with it.

Simple Setting Declared Best For Furnishing

Plain Background Urged if Your Furniture Is Elaborate.

A simple background is effective in almost any type of room. If the furnishings are simple, a plain background is necessary, and if the furnishings are elaborate a simple background shows them off to advantage.

One home owner obtained insured modernization funds from a private financial institution which held a contract of insurance with the Federal Housing Administration and set about making the living room of a recently purchased house suitable for the family furniture.

Walls were covered with a rough plaster, in a sand color. The ceiling was beamed. A composition floor covering resembling tile was laid The mantel was removed from the fireplace, giving a modern effect. Yellow brick was used for the hearth.

Between fireplace and window, book cases were built in, but the opposite side or the fireplace, near the door leading into the hall, was untouched. Wall brackets were placed over the fireplace, to provide adequate illumination for the painting which was hung there.

The furniture for which this room was planned was of the Jacobean type. Sofa and easy chair were upholstered in a copper velour, with a barrel chair done in gold and an occasional chair in blue. Bright blue and green were used as color accents.

Neighborhood Unit To Meet Tonight

A city-wide meeting of Neighborhood Council will be held next Thursday at 6:30 p. m. at the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K streets northwest. Dr. Edouard C. Lindemann, national social work authority, will speak on "Functions of the Neighborhood Councils for Community Planning."

These Neighborhood Councils are organizations of prominent people banded together to utilize to the greatest advantage facilities within their localities. There are seven such councils operating at present, organized into a federation of which Dr. Thomas W. Gosling is chairman

The councils are modeled on a similar group which started in Los Angeles, Calif., and met with considerable success in eliminating undesirable conditions. The Washington councils have brought to the attention of the public undesirable conditions existing in the Nation's Capital.

Major Indices Show Steady Business Rise

Retail Sales Retarded in Week by Mild Weather.

New York, Oct. 24.—"Lack of extension in one or two factors failed to disturb the general upward movement of the leading industrial indices," Dun & Bradstreet say today. The weekly review adds:

"Lifted close to the record high of mid-September by an increase of 0.09 per cent, electric output was maintained above 2,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours for the fifteenth consecutive week, and the advantage over the 1935 sendout broadened to 16.5 per cent. Production of bituminous coal was enlarged by 3.7 per cent, and by 12.6 per cent from the 1935 tonnage. With the flow widened by 52,350 barrels, daily average gross production of crude oil was 235,000 barrels in excess of the official calculation.

"Mild and inclement weather in some parts of the country was not conducive to the widening of retail distribution this week, particularly in seasonable apparel. In wholesale branches, on the other hand, volume was well sustained by the growing re-orders, which revealed the inadequacy of stocks to cover present consumer demand, and the mounting commitments for the Christmas shopping period.

"Steel operations eased 1.7 points from the six-year high of the previous week, but at 74.2 per cent of capacity was above last year's rate for the thirty-seventh-straight time. The uninterrupted rise since mid-September carried freight carloadings to a new six-year peak, and marked the fourth successive week that the number has been more than 800,000."

Copper Output Abroad Likely To Be Raised

Present Curtailment Is 15 Per Cent, Against Original Cut of 30%.

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—London advices to metal circles today said foreign producers of copper who are members of the curtailment agreement are giving active consideration to another increase in production. If another increase is ordered it will be the fourth step-up in output since August 1.

At the present rate of operations, curtailment is only 15 per cent against an original decrease of 30 per cent a little less than a year and a half ago, when the agreement was entered into. The net gain in output per month as a result of various increases in production was estimated to be roughly 10,000 tons.

The unusual situation created by the buoyancy of the foreign market, with advances in prices to a top of 10.20 cents a pound against a 9¾-cent domestic level, has drawn increasing interest in trade and producing circles.

At 10.15 to 10.20 cents a pound, it was pointed out, producers in the United States can sell copper in the foreign market and get the equivalent of 10 cents a pound or slightly better on the basis of Connecticut Valley delivery.

There are some who hold that buoyancy of the foreign price is not predicated upon buying of copper for actual consumptive needs, although it is admitted generally that copper going into industry abroad is the best in a great many years.

Outlook Favorable.

Outlook for the industrial metals is encouraging, with zinc and particularly lead in line for near-term price rises, according to the F. & B. Industries Service, a fortnightly survey of 28 industries prepared by Fenner & Beane, members of the New York Stock Exchange.

With world copper stocks at new recovery lows, prospects for higher copper prices are also favorable, the report states. Domestic copper consumption during September rose to approximately 76,000 short tons to compare with 44,450 tons in September, 1935, representing the largest taking of copper during that month since September, 1929, the survey shows.

$271,000,000 Issues Effective in August

During August 62 registration statements, covering issues of approximately $271,000,000, became effective.

Eleven registration statements were suspended during August; three by stop order and eight by withdrawl.

Stock Prices Maintain Level As Trading Volume Shrinks

Motor, Oil and Utility Shares Are Firm; Strength of Sugar Issues Features Bond Market; French Franc Weak.

By Frederick Gardner.
Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Oct. 24.—The stock market tried a few feeble passes and end runs today but finished back on the starting line. Both buying and selling plays were apathetic throughout, notwithstanding the continuance of bridge earnings and dividend stimulation. Most brokers were of the opinion many traders held to the shelter of sidelines pending outcome of the Presidential election.

A few oils, utilities, motors and specialties emerged with moderate gains. Numerous leaders in other groups either slipped back or held at their final quotations of yesterday. Transfers totaled only 619,180 shares against 1,152,860 last Saturday.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was unchanged at 71.1. Of the 718 issues changing hands 276 advanced, 250 declined and 192 were unchanged.

Oils in Demand.

Texas Corporation moved up ½ to a new top at 45¾ on estimates of the company's chairman 9-months' profits would approximate $3.02 a share compared with $1.83 for all of last year. Fractionally advanced also were Shell Union at 27½; Skelly, 35⅞; Standard of N. J., 68¼, and Standard of California, 39⅞.

The sharp upturn in profits of Electric Power & Light Corporation helped to bolster utilities. This stock ended up ⅛ at 15⅛. Among others ahead in this group were Consolidated Edison at 47, Commonwealth & Southern 4, and American Water Works 27¼.

A few aircrafts stepped forward on further hopes of purchases from the British. Douglas was up ¾ at 73⅞, and Boeing was slightly higher at 29⅛.

The most active stock of the day was Vadsco Sales, up ¾ at 2⅛. Others on the gaining side included General Baking at 16⅛, Tennessee Corporation 7⅛, Chrysler 127¾, Continental Baking "A" 28¼, Anaconda 46¼, Hoffman Machinery 18¼ and Consolidated Film at 5⅛.

Bendix was off a point at 29¾, and lesser declines were registered by Bethlehem at 71½, American Can 125½, Westinghouse 148, North American 33⅛, Yellow Truck 33⅛, Peerless Motors 2⅜, Santa Fe 80 and N. Y. Central 46¼.

The French franc broke on further political fears and a cloudier Spanish war scene. Wheat at Chicago was up ⅛ to ½ cent a bushel and corn improved ⅛ to ⅝. Cotton yielded 15 to 35 cents a bale.

Sugar Bonds Strong.

Wide gains by sugar company bonds flashed brightly in a dull bond market today. Demand for these issues in the past few days has lifted them sharply and they now stand at the highest levels in many weeks. The inquiry for sugar issues, trading circles said, developed as a result of the improved statistical position of the industry together with the hope of producers that quotas for the commodity will be extended another year.

Camaguey 7 per cent certificates gained 2½ to 23½, a new high for the year and Vertientes certificate 7s rose 2¼ to 23½, also a new 1936 high. Francisco certificate 7½s added 2 at 84⅝ and Manati 7½s gained 1⅝ to 62⅛.

Rail issues moved indifferently and finished the session little changed. New Haven 4s of 1951 lost 1½ to 19½, Great Western 4s dipped ½ as 43¼ and Southern Pacific 4½s lost a little ground. Santa Fe 4s, Delaware & Hudson 4s and Southern Railway 4s improved fractionally.

Utility and industrial bonds were generally quiet and little changed. Several exceptional moves were registered, including Warner Quinlan 6s, up 4 at 45½, and New York Railways income 6s, up 1½ at 54.

U. S. Governments were inactive and clung to narrow trading ranges with closing prices little changed. Foreign bonds likewise failed to attract much trading, and sold off a little as bids were withheld.

The Associated Press averages for the various groups were unaltered except that for ten foreigns which dipped .1 of a point to 70.4. Turnover totaled $5,487,000, face value, compared with $7,424,000 on the preceding Saturday.

German Decree Halts U. S. Tobacco Imports

By the Associated Press.

As a result of a German decree prohibiting further barter contracts, the Commerce Department reported yesterday exports of American tobacco to Germany "have been rendered virtually impossible." During September arrivals of American tobacco at Bremen totaled only 411,400 pounds, compared with 1,280,730 pounds in September, 1935. In 1935 Germany ranked as the fourth most important foreign outlet for American tobacco.

Dividend Changes.

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—Favorable dividend changes this week numbered 46 compared with 52 in the preceding week, Standard Statistics Co. said today. There was only one unfavorable change, the same as the week before.

National Cash to Give Bonus for Christmas

Dayton, Ohio, Oct. 24 (AP).—Approximately 6,000 employes of the National Cash Register Co. learned today that the firm at Christmas time will pass out its first special bonus, in sums ranging from $25 to $35.

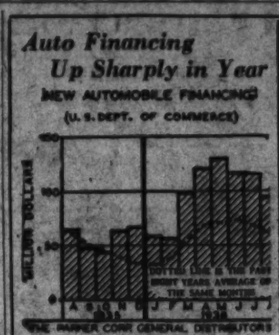
All workers on the pay roll for 30 days prior to November 1 will be eligible, an announcement issued through the employes' council said. Office and factory workers except executives and foremen will receive the gift, a basic $25, with one dollar added for each year of service to ten, or a maximum of $35.

General Motors Corp. Merges Sales Units

New York, Oct. 24.—Alfred P. Sloan, jr., president, General Motors Corporation, made the following announcement today:

"For the purpose of accomplishing important savings, as well as to simplify the corporation's corporate organization, certain subsidiary companies which heretofore have sold certain individual products as their sole function will be dissolved and their activities grouped together in one corporate entity, which has been organized for the purpose and styled General Motors Sales Corporation. The specific selling activities formerly handled by each such separate sales company will hereafter be handled by correspondingly designated divisions of General Motors Sales Corporation."

Auto Financing Up Sharply in Year



Boston, Mass., Oct. 24.—Financing of new automobiles declined seasonally in August, but gained 45 per cent over a year ago. The new cars purchased on time payments in August totaled 160,000 with an average loan of $587 on each car—$32.00 more than the average loan in August of last year. In addition, 207,000 used cars were purchased on time with an average loan of $256.

Curb Irregular In Dull Trading

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—Small gains and losses co-mingled in the curb market today as trading activity dwindled perceptibly. Utility shares tended to slip a little lower, while oils moved ahead slightly. The mining list veered a little in each direction with gains a trifle more extensive. Aviation stocks moved off a bit.

Mueller Brass rose 1⅛ to 43 for one of the more spectacular swings. Humble Oil was the principal gainer in the petroleum group, running ahead ¾ to 86¼. Others to advance a little included Lord Ltd., American Cyanamid "B," Pie Bakeries and Sunshine Mining.

Transactions totaled 190,000 shares compared with 264,000 last Saturday.

Security Offerings $84,778,735 in Week

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—More new security issues were offered this week, but the money involved dropped to $84,778,735 from $172,310,252 the preceding week and $146,769,490 in the comparable week last year, a compilation by Poor's Publishing Co. showed today.

The number of issues rose to 38 from 30 the week before and 28 in the 1935 period. Fifteen were stock issues amounting to $26,741,735, compared with nine totaling $2,884,252 in the preceding week and five involving $5,584,490 in the 1935 week.

Transit Revenues 4.96% Over Year Ago

New York, Oct. 24.—Revenues for the transit industry for the week ended October 17, based on telegraphic reports received from a representative group of transit operating companies, showed continuing improvement over last year.

Transit Journal's revenue indicator stands at 104.96, which represents a gain of 4.96 per cent over the corresponding week in 1935. For the week ended October 10 the indicator was 108.78.

Wheat Prices Rise in Chicago, Decline Abroad

December at 1.14⅞ With Corn Also Moving Upward.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 24.—Showing independence relative to price downturns abroad, wheat in Chicago tended upward today. Contrary to action in the Liverpool market, wheat traders here took their cue mainly from overseas warlike advices. Chicago sellers of wheat were in a minority the greater part of the day.

Wheat closed firm, ⅛ to ½ above yesterday's finish, December, 1.14⅞-1.15; May, 1.13¾-1.13⅝; corn, ⅛ to ¼ up; December, 94⅜-94½; May, 90⅛-90¼; oats, unchanged to ⅜ higher, and provisions varying from 2 cents decline to an equal advance.

Chair Designs Of Hepplewhite Still in Demand

Famous Shield-Back Motif Lends Self to Numerous Modern Adaptations.

Among the most popular reproductions from the "Golden Age of Furniture Design" of the late eighteenth century in England are the shield-back chairs introduced by George Hepplewhite.

Little is known of the personal life of the man whose name was to become immortal in the homes which followed him down the path of the ages. He was born in Cripplegate, but no date is recorded of his birth. He executed many contracts for the distinguished Robert Adam. For this reason, perhaps, many of Hepplewhite's designs resemble those of his contemporary.

Adam undoubtedly introduced the famous shield-back chair motif, but Hepplewhite established it and improved upon it so that it became his principal chair back and seldom again appeared among Adam's designs.

No more graceful structural detail appears in any of the historic designs than the shield motif. The arms of chairs were gracefully swelled, a difficult feat in cabinetmaking of that time. Built of solid mahogany, daintily carved with conservative floral motifs, such as the husk, honeysuckle and rosette, these chairs were at the same time conservative yet decorative. Hepplewhite also used the Prince of Wales feathers to an unusual extent, always gracefully flowing into the structural members of his pieces.

Today Hepplewhite's designs are widely reproduced in dining room, bedroom and upholstered living room furniture. Among the latter, the French influence is predominant, making them harmonious with three or four divergent period styles placed in the same room.

Many Preservers For Wood Used

There is a variety of methods for the preservation of wood which is subjected to abnormal weather conditions and, in some localities, attacks by insects.

The effectiveness of any good wood preservative is measured largely by the depth to which the preservative penetrates. There are various ways of applying preservatives, but the most satisfactory means is by impregnation under pressure, and by the use of pressure the penetration is subject to control. The amount of preservation may be varied to suit the different requirements. This results in an economical use of the preservative material.

Preservatively treated wood may be tested for penetration. Creosote oil is indicated by a dark discoloration, and can be determined by taking a sample at a point free from imperfections. Zinc chloride and other colorless preservatives can be tested with chemicals.

Preservatives will not make weak timbers strong nor restore strength to timber which has been partially destroyed by decay. It should be applied to sound wood after it is cut and framed, in order that all exposed parts may be treated. If some cutting after treatment is unavoidable, hot creosote oil may be applied to the exposed surfaces.

Green Paint Often Mars Flower Pots

Many years ago some one started to apply green paint to garden furniture, window boxes, trellises, garden walls, flower pots, etc., and since then green paint in a variety of shades has been used indiscriminately. It can be one of the worst colors for use as a background for shrubs, flowers or vines.

There is such a variety of the natural shades of green. There are pale yellow-greens and deep black greens. These lose their value and usually clash with the green paint. Even highly colored flowers seldom show off properly against this background.

White, or a very light tint of some color makes the best background for planting. A proper study of the relationship between the garden furniture and the type of planting should be made and the color for the furniture be applied to enhance the general effect of the garden.

Integrity

A few things in the world bear a mark of quality beyond dispute, Sterling on your Silver, the Karat mark on Gold. The Signature of an Original Masterpiece. The American Re-Roofing Co., Inc.'s name over a period of time has come to stand for that same high degree of excellency. That same guarantee of genuine quality founded on integrity. Perhaps you pay a few dollars more for certain materials we handle, but you pay more for sterling than for plated ware, more for solid gold than for filled things of sterling. Quality costs more, but it gives you more lasting enjoyment. We are Johns-Manville deferred payment contractors.

Student Government System of Montgomery High School Held as Pattern

30,000 Used Summer Play Centers Here

Ballou Reports Success of First Season to School Board.

Attendance Indicates an Enthusiastic Response to New Activity.

More than 30,000 boys and girls attended summer playgrounds operated by the public schools this year, Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, reported to the Board of Education last week.

The figure, he said, indicated an enthusiastic response to the opening of the new playgrounds, and directors reported that general objectives were achieved. The attendance would have been larger, he said, if more parents and children had been familiar with the activities at the beginning of the season.

The board last June authorized the opening of ten summer playground centers, five in white divisions and five in colored divisions. Plans for conducting the centers were drawn up by directors of the vacation schools in co-operation with heads of the departments of health and physical education, and the director of the Community Center Department. The playgrounds were active from July 1 to August 31.

Publicity Needed.

Attendance at the five white centers was as follows: S. J. Bowen, 1,268 (boys and girls); Force, 1,226; Maury, 4,554; Peabody, 2,484; Petworth 1,946. And in the colored playgrounds it was: Cook 3,058; Deanwood, 4,367; Garrison, 3,703; Giddings, 7,218, and Sumner, 1,176.

The attendance at some of the grounds would have been larger at the beginning if some publicity had been given in the schools before the closing of school in June, Dr. Ballou reported.

"Delay in procuring supplies handicapped several centers during the opening weeks," he added. "This, however, was not the fault of the officers in charge of the work. The decision to open these playgrounds was not reached soon enough to anticipate fully the purchase of necessary supplies.

"Out of experiences this summer, officers and teachers will be in a position to plan and prepare for the work next summer in ways that will guarantee a more efficient and satisfactory operation of the play centers."

No Competition.

The superintendent reminded the board that the school playgrounds were established to meet the recreational needs of children not fully met by the municipal playgrounds and the community centers; to provide more adequately during the summer for the health and physical needs of children by activities that would keep children off the streets, and to comply with the requests of school patrons that the grounds of certain schools be made available for their children under competent direction.

Centers were chosen that would not be in competition with centers operated by the District Playground Department, the superintendent said.

Activities on the several grounds included baseball, basketball, volleyball, tennis, horseshoes, dodge ball, handball, sewing, paper cutting, jacks, miscellaneous games and stunts.

Miss Jean Kelly Elected To 2 Wellesley Offices

Miss Jean Kelly, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Kelly, of Chevy Chase, has been elected senior vice president of Severance Dormitory and a member of the senior executive council at Wellesley College.

Post Staff—Burrus.

The student court of the Ricard Montgomery High School in Rockville, Md., has drawn Nation-wide attention to its method of solving the school discipline problem. All cases of student law violation come into the court over which the three judges (above) preside. Roland Banks (center) is chief justice and Mary Margaret Wilson (left) and Helen England (right) are associate justices. Defendants and witnesses are sworn in by Lois Bragg, court clerk, as shown in the picture at right. Jack Clark is the witness about to testify. Stewart Nicewarner, a defense attorney, in the picture just below, questions Sergt. Milton Clogg, of the school patrol, about his knowledge of the case.

Roosevelt High Honor Students Get New Posts

Outstanding Pupils Are Chosen for Training in School Offices.

Honor students at Roosevelt High School and outstanding boys and girls in special fields of school activity were chosen last week for training positions in the school bank, library and the offices.

Outstanding students in the business practice department at Roosevelt High are selected every semester for special training in school banking, under Mrs. Kate Outwater. With 2,000 students, depositing and withdrawing money daily, the account sometimes runs into the thousands.

The officers chosen this year are Lawrence Richardson, president; Sarah Kaufman, vice president; Morton Brill, head bookkeeper; Dorothy Carter, cashier; Herbert Mingin, assistant bookkeeper; Mary Shockey, assistant bookkeeper; Jane Thoma, assistant bookkeeper; Howard Nortion, and Stephen Edmunds, assistant bookkeepers; Aubrey Connelly, teller; Pearl Oshinsky, secretary, and Eleanor Lewis, secretary.

Honor pupils are chosen for special training as assistants to the faculty in various lines of work.

The librarian, Miss Margaret Davies, has appointed as librarians Mildred Kienle, Alice Hodge, Rae Rogers, Thelma Lewis, Katherine Spear, Marie Taylor, Marion Mahoney, Jeanette Ciarvechi, and Sylvia Sherman.

Dr. Howard, the head of business training in all the high schools, has selected for his secretaries the following: Frances Artley, Eleanor Brasse, Betty Christopher, Florence Fleming, Elinor Fraser, Ruth Freehafer, Nettie Gerstein, Gloria Grau, Carolyn Halloway, Ann Morris, Beatrice Skinker, Eleanor Voith, Margurite Ward and Evelyn Yazge.

Allan Davis, principal at Roosevelt High, has invited R. M. Warren and his Rifle Club to spend October 24 at his camp. The boys recently elected the following officers: Manager, Jack Rosenberg; coach, John Schultze; scorekeeper, Julius Mivisosky; secretary and treasurer, Irwin Jaffe.

Georgetown Washington Club Plans Full Season of Activities

The Washington Club of Georgetown, which bridges the gap between the day and boarding students at the College of Arts and Sciences, is planning a busy season under the energetic leadership of Joseph Dawson, newly elected president.

In earlier years at the Hilltop the few day students were forced by circumstances to lead a campus existence almost entirely apart from the resident student body. Except in isolated cases when individual day students were conspicuous in athletics or class activities, their friendships and interests were centered mainly off the campus.

Then the Washington Club gave the day students an organization of their own and the steady increase in college enrollment from Washington in recent years added to the influence of the day students. Development of intermural activities also gave momentum to increased membership in the Washington Club until now it is probably the largest single group in the university.

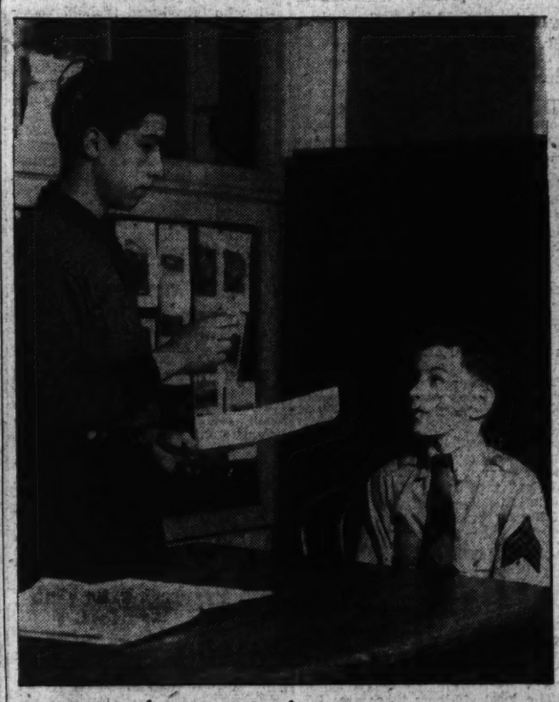
This year with approximately one-third of the total enrollment at the college recruited from the Washington area the club is looking forward to a more active program than ever before. They are fortunate, also, in having as their faculty moderator the Rev. Stephen R. McNamee, S. J., a Washingtonian, who has a personal interest in the activities of the local students.

In addition to Dawson, the newly elected officers are Carlton Gartner, vice president; George Fleury, secretary; John Flynn, treasurer; Arthur Marsh, corresponding secretary, and William Gwynn, who serves as director of publicity. All of them with the exception of Flynn, a sophomore, are members of the senior class.

The first thing the club did this year was to raid the freshman class, the largest in recent years at the Hilltop. There were more than 50 freshmen eligible for membership in the Washington Club and with few exceptions they have all joined.

The club already has held its initial tea dance in Copley Lounge on the campus to welcome freshman members. These dances will be given a regular place on the schedule of club activities. A committee consisting of Paul Mehren and John Gwynn and Carlton Gartner, who is in charge of social functions for the club, are preparing for a Thanksgiving dance to which alumni and local students in other departments of the university will be invited.

Dances during the holidays, commencement week and outings in the country are other phases of social activities being planned.



C. U. Students Stage Contest This Morning

Sophomores to Defend Tug-of-War Championship Against Freshmen.

Sophomores and freshmen at Catholic University will fight it out on the tug-of-war line today.

The annual skirmish between the undergraduates will begin at 10:30 o'clock this morning in the stadium. The president of the sophomores will lead his classmen against the campus newcomers. Charles P. Johnson is chairman of the event, which will consist of three tugs.

A championship goes to the winner of two out of the three contests. According to tradition the sophomores will be the champs. The freshmen in all the history of this annual contest have only won one victory—that went to members of the present senior class when they were first-year men.

Each member of the losing team gets a ducking under a powerful fire hose turned on them by the winners.

Joseph M. Murphy, registrar of the university and director of the bureau of public relations at the Catholic University of America will address the New Jersey Scholastic Press Clinic which will be held under the auspices of the department of journalism of Rutgers University, New Brunswick, N. J., on Saturday, October 31.

Parents at Wilson Will Study Need For More Teachers

The need for more teachers in the District public schools and methods to obtain more books for the school library will be studied by special committees of the Woodrow Wilson High School Home and School Association.

Paul M. Williams, president, announced the investigations as an important part of the association's program for the coming year at a meeting last week.

Members of the association heard talks by Charles E. Bish on supervised study and home work, by Norman Nelson, principal; Mrs. F. C. Creighead on parent study groups, by H. K. Bosley, and by E. M. Webster, who appealed for community participation in association activities.

Educators Over Nation Request Details of Plan

Court of Justice Is Outstanding Feature and Has Power to Decide Guilt or Innocence and Fix Punishment.

By Jay Walz.

The Richard Montgomery High School in Rockville, Md., has worked out a student government system so complete that educators from every section of the country are writing for the details.

The "student court," a feature of the organization for self-rule, was described in an article by Prof. Harry Newburn, of Iowa State University, published in the October School Executive, and Principal L. Fletcher Schott has been receiving many letters of inquiry as a result.

Last week he got one from the dean of girls in Central High School at Riverside, Calif. The writer wanted to know how the play was working out.

After three years of operation, Principal Schott thinks the system is working fine. He believes the school is carrying student government to its logical conclusion, and that it is doing a good job of preparing the boys and girls for citizenship.

The Montgomery school has a junior republic, which functions through a government modeled after that of the United States of America. It has everything from a constitution to a supreme court. There are legislators, policemen, prosecutors, justices. It is ready to meet almost any situation that arises in school. It has, as student government schemes go, an unusual amount of power to act.

Was Organized In 1933.

The principal says the whole setup was organized in 1933 by a group of seniors and teachers and himself.

"It was our idea," he said last week, "to give students much of the responsibility for their own conduct. The reason is this: Student disapproval is more effective than faculty disapproval. A student, reprimanded by a teacher, is sometimes a hero in the eyes of his classmates. But if his fellow students frown on him, that's different. He can't take it so easy."

Many schools have student government, but few have this Rockville feature, a court that hears and passes on all violations of student laws.

Roland Banks, a senior, is the present chief justice of the court. Helen England and Mary Marguerite Wilson, two juniors, are his associates. Before these three every violator must appear to plead his case, and if found guilty, submit to the sentence, providing, of course, it gets the approval of the principal.

In carrying through this due process of law there are not only judges and defendants, but patrolmen, summons bearers, prosecutors, and a battery of defense attorneys. There are even examiners to pass on the bar qualifications of the "lawyers". (You have to know the Junior Republic constitution through and through to pass the bar exam.)

Court Record Interesting.

The court record makes interesting reading, and gives you the best idea of what the court does.

There was the recent case of Defendant B. B. He was arrested by Patrolman Bobby Pumphrey on a charge of "eating in the halls." He pleaded guilty, received a verdict of guilty and this sentence: "The grade of the defendant's citizenship will be lowered one point."

That's a steep punishment, as citizenship rating counts at the school and it is meted out sparingly. Principal Schott, however, let this sentence stand. He approved it.

Then there is the case of the defendant C. P., who was "arrested" on a charge of "assaulting a patrolman." He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to "clean the tennis court until 4 p. m. every day this week."

Principal Schott vetoed this sentence. "We have no right to order a student to do manual labor," he explained to Chief Justice Banks afterward. "We have a lot of disciplinary power, but not that. The only way we can subject the defendant to this punishment is with his own consent."

So Defendant C. P. comes up for a rehearing this week, and he will be asked if the sentence is agreeable.

"I don't see why it won't be" commented Chief Justice Banks. "I think C. P. would rather do some work outside than have to stay in—and do nothing.

Girl Finds Leniency.

A girl was brought before the court for "creating a disturbance in Columbus Day assembly" last week. She was given a suspended sentence "to remain after school until 4 o'clock for two days."

On a charge of "coming up the wrong stairs and not going back when warned," a boy student was hailed into court. But the case was dismissed when the judges learned the defendant had an injured foot.

For "disobeying a patrolman" John —— was booked for a court appearance. But the case was postponed "until next court session at the request of his (John's) mother. She said that John had to take her to the Union Station."

Thus the court functions and makes its influence felt.

Do the students, the "citizens," like it?

"They co-operate to the fullest," answers Mr. Schott. "Of course, we like to feel that the conduct of the school is improving right along, so that there is less work for the court to do. But at any rate I am sure the system gives the boys and girls a sense of obligation, and a respect for the rights of other students."

The court is expected to use its discretion to make the punishment fit the crime. Otherwise the penalties might be pretty severe—from the upright "citizen's" point of view.

Some of Penalties.

Here are some of the penalties: A lower grade in citizenship—"to be applied with great discretion and only with the approval of the principal;" an explanation of wrong doings and an apology to the school at assembly—"to be used in severe cases;" deprivation of all honors for the year—"to be used in severe cases only;" taking away some honors for a certain length of time "not less than one month;" barring from assembly building for a length of time

Studebaker Urges the Citizen to Investigate Schools During American Education Week

John W. Studebaker, U. S. Commissioner of Education, wants American citizens to celebrate American Education Week, November 9 to 15, by investigating "one of the largest businesses in which he is a stockholder with voting power."

"So frequently we take democracy for granted and forget that this public business belongs to us," he said, "We find things going on which we do not fully understand or approve, and then we speak as if some force outside the community of citizens had control of our schools."

If the schools, in some instances, are not being operated at top efficiency it behooves the stockholders to discuss the situation in parent-teacher groups and civic forums, commented the commissioner. They should try to find the way to express their votes more intelligently in selecting members for their boards of education and of holding these public servants to account.

Dr. Studebaker described the public schools as basic instruments of the people for the achievement of that intelligent understanding of personal and public responsibilities which will enable a democracy to function.

"If any person, group, vested interest or clique is manipulating the public business for private or group advantage, the remedy is collective action," he asserted. "During American Education Week each American stockholder in the great public corporation of organized learning is urged to see for himself how the business is being conducted and to find out how he may use his influence to improve the general commerce of ideas."

American Education Week is observed each year to inform the public as to the needs, aims, and achievements of the schools. The Office of Education co-operates with the National Education Association and all local, State and national organizations in sponsoring this Nation-wide observance.

Capt. Bobby Pumphrey, center, who heads the high school patrol corps, goes over a case with Judson Beaver, a private, at left, and Clements Oden, first lieutenant. According to the law enacted by the school's legislature, the patrol boys have the power to bring students, charged with law violation, before the student court for hearing. In most cases the patrolmen come into court with the defendant to serve as witnesses.

General Examination System Is Instituted This Autumn at Yale University

Educator Believes Method Will Stimulate Thinking

Final Tests of Work Over Two or Three Years Added as Graduation Requirement Will Integrate College Courses, Dr. Angell States.

By G. Frederick Mullen.

New Haven, Conn., Oct. 24 (U.P.).—Seeking to encourage a genuine mastery of some one field of work, to stimulate systematic thinking, and to challenge intellectual independence, Dr. James Roland Angell is instituting in Yale University this fall one of its most important educational changes.

With the beginning of Yale's 236th year in the fields of higher education comes the inception of a system of general examinations, which will begin with the class of '37, for the students in Yale College, and for students in certain courses in Sheffield Scientific School, and the Yale School of Engineering. Until this year, a student in the undergraduate schools selected his major field of study in his sophomore or junior year, and earned his degree by accumulating during his college years the proper number of credits for separate courses.

Tests to Be General.

Under the new plan, examinations will not deal with any particular courses, but with the general field involved and with such immediately related fields as may be properly included. There is added to the numerical requirement an examination in the major field at the end of a student's senior year as a final test of his work over a two or three year period.

A student studying the development of the American banking system, for example, as the core of a major in the department of economics, would be expected to have some knowledge of the corresponding historical and political developments. In facing the general examination, much of the necessary material will have been accumulated from reading which he would do on his own initiative and from other courses aside from the formal courses taken.

Commenting upon the new system and the aims of the university in inaugurating it, Dr. Angell said:

"In contrast with the piecemeal methods heretofore generally in vogue, whereby a student on passing a course could forthwith forget it and leave it behind, he must under this system integrate effectively a considerable portion of his final two years of college work.

The educational advantages of this method over those at present in use are quite unequivocal."

Supervision to Be Close.

Each student will form his schedule of work under the system on his major subject in consultation with the department concerned. Definition and supervision of the departmental examination will rest with the department.

The change was heralded by undergraduate opinion. The Yale Daily News, undergraduate organ, at the time the change was voted by the faculty, said in its editorial columns:

"The step is as ambitious and promising for the future as it is significant in itself. And the spirit in which the decision was made will have to be maintained long after the first rush of enthusiasm has paled. That it will be, that it will bring about one of the greatest educational advances Yale has ever made, we are confident. Our congratulations have already been extended to the faculty. To the Class of 1937, too, they are due—but they cannot go unmixed with envy."

Law Students Choose Cusick For President

Washington College Class Elects McKinley to Succeed Self.

Henry B. Cusick was made president of the evening division class of 1937, and William H. P. McKinley was chosen to succeed himself as president of the evening division class of 1938 at class elections last week at the Washington College of Law.

Cusick has been active in school and class work since entering Washington College of Law in the fall of 1934—class treasurer in his freshman year; member of the executive committee in the junior year; censor in the Mussey Law Congress during the past year; and now chairman of the "cases" committee, and in addition is at present chancellor of Sigma Nu Phi Legal Fraternity.

Cusick was also the winner of the college gold prize for the highest average in the freshman year.

Other Officers.

The following officers were elected to assist Cusick in guiding the class of 1937 during its final year: Daisy E. Hicks, vice president; Florence M. McGee, recording secretary; Charlotte S. Million, corresponding secretary; Ralph T. Carpenter, treasurer, and Arthur Donovan, sergeant at arms. Henry A. Schweinhaut, newly appointed special assistant to the Attorney General, will continue as faculty advisor.

McKinley has been active in college functions. He is also a member of the Mussey Law Congress and Sigma Nu Phi Legal Fraternity. He is ably supported by the following: Walter T. Parker, vice president; Rose Cohen, recording secretary; Frances J. King, corresponding secretary; W. Floyd B. Wood, treasurer, and Woodruff Younge, sergeant at arms.

Admitted to Bar.

O. Keith More, a member of the class of '37, and Joseph Wayne Hill, '38, were among the successful applicants for admission to the Iowa bar, the examination for which was given at Des Moines on October 6, 7 and 8. Another member of the class of '37, James H. Thomas, of North Carolina, was among the successfull applicants for admission to the bar of his State.

Oliver Wendell Holmes Chapter of Sigma Nu Phi Legal Fratenity held the second of its rush events last evening when it entertained members and rushees at a dance held at the college. Faculty members attending included Dean Grace Hays Riley, Maj. J. Garfield Riley, Dr. and Mrs. Edwin A. Mooers and Mr. and Mrs. George Stoner

This scene shows art students in the life class at Corcoran School of Art, which this month began its fiftieth season of art instruction. There are day and evening classes this year, and the subjects include drawing, painting, sculpture, composition, and a course in the history of art. Directors reports the largest registration in the history of the school.

Epstein Named Art Instructor

Washington Post Employe Chosen on Columbia Institute Staff.

Alvin Epstein, head of the copy department of The Washington Post, has been made an instructor in commercial art at the Columbia Technical Institute, Paul J. Leverone, principal, announced yesterday.

Mr. Epstein received his commercial and fine art training in schools in Baltimore and Philadelphia. He has had many years practical experience in the art rooms of newspapers and other business organizations in New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia and Washington.

At Columbia Institute he will specialize in the instruction of commercial illustrating and will bring to the students of Columbia Tech's commercial classes an intimate knowledge of the everyday work done in the copy and art rooms of a newspaper.

Instruction in the school's commercial art courses includes visits to the art rooms of The Washington Post, where students may obtain first-hand knowledge of the practical application of their studies.

Dr. Lewis Appointed To Columbia Faculty

Psychiatrist Takes Post in Medical School.

Dr. Nolan D. C. Lewis, formerly professor of clinical psychiatry at George Washington University, has been appointed professor of psychiatry at Columbia Medical School. President Nicholas Murray Butler announced last week.

A graduate of the medical school of the University of Maryland, Dr. Lewis was professor of experimental pathology at George Washington University from 1920 to 1924, and professor of clinical psychiatry until 1935. He lectured on psychiatry in the Naval Medical School from 1919 to 1935.

Dr. Lewis succeeds Dr. Clarence O. Cheney, who resigned, as executive officer of the department of psychiatry in the school of medicine and as director of the New York Psychiatric Institute. He was associate director of the Neurological Institute from January to September of this year, and was appointed to the Columbia medical faculty in July as professor of neurology. He resigned from that post September 1.

"not less than one month;" a recommendation to the principal for suspension "to be used in severe cases only;" an order to stay in after school—"to be used ony in minor first offenses;" an order that the defendant correct and pay for damage done; an order to leave the school grounds or building at 3:20 p. m. for a period of one month or longer.

"We try to discourage the use of the 'staying after school' penalty," said the principal, "That's against good educational psychology. The school isn't supposed to be a prison—hence it shouldn't be made a punishment to keep a youngster in after school hours."

Prof. Newburn, in his article for "School Executive," a publication which reaches school officials throughout the country, described the Rockville student court as a good method of dealing with some pupils.

"Those pupils who are having difficulty with faculty members, students or school regulations—in other words the pupils presenting disciplinary problems, should be located and treated," he wrote.

Forney Reese Joins Phil Hayden Faculty

M. Forney Reese, widely known Washington actor and dramatic coach, will head a dramatic branch just added to the Phil Hayden Dance Studios, Dupont Circle.

Mr. Reese has played several important dramatic roles. In Washington he is particularly well known for his work with the Arts Club Players and the Shakespeare Society. His productions at the Maryland Theater in Baltimore last winter, in which he was both director and player, were notable, and one of them, "Sailor Beware," was taken on tour after a four-week run.

The dramatic course has been added to the school's curriculum because of many requests for that kind of instruction, according to Mr. Hayden. Registrations for Mr. Reese's classes are now being taken, and further information about the training to be offered may be obtained at the studios.

George Washington Alumni Association Will Stage 1936 Homecoming Celebration at Thanksgiving

West Virginia Game, Ball and Rally Features of Festivities.

George Washington University's 1936 Home-coming will be staged at Thanksgiving time this year, officials announced last week.

The celebration will center around the George Washington-West Virginia football game at Griffith Stadium, Thursday afternoon, November 26. Other events will include the home-coming rally on the afternoon preceding the game, the home-coming ball on Thanksgiving night, and several features to be announced later.

Charles S. Baker, president of the General Alumni Association of the university, has announced the appointment of Hugh H. Clegg, of the law class of 1926, assistant director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice, as home-coming chairman.

Mr. Clegg has called a meeting for tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock, at room 5245, Department of Justice.

Home-coming is held under the auspices of the General Alumni Association, with the co-operation of the university administration and the student body, offering once each year the opportunity and the incentive for alumni to return to the campus. Invitations are issued to the university's 16,000 graduates in all parts of the country, and to former students and other friends of the university.

Twenty-five students of the School of Medicine who have qualified through high scholastic standing have been named to membership in the Smith-Reed-Russell Society. Qualifying for active membership were Edwin N. Brady, Benjamin Chester, Benjamin Crosby, Eugenia Cuvillier, Armand Gordon, Samuel Hillman, Daniel Jaffe, Sister Lippits, Wilkins Manning, John Madden, Cecil Rudner, Lawrence Thomas, Sister Tummers, Henry Weintraub, Blanche Widome. Those who qualified for associate membership were Lester A. Barnett, Paul Dickens, Warren F. Draper, jr., James M. Friedman, Charles Edward Law, George Macatee, jr., William Russell, Russell C. Payne, Warren Rapee and U. Vincent Wilcox II.

The Smith-Reed-Russell Society is named in honor of three eminent medical scientists whose contributions are universally recognized and who successively held the chair of bacteriology in the George Washington University School of Medicine during the period from 1886 to 1910. These men were Theobald Smith, noted for his work on tuberculosis and Texas cattle fever and for his discovery of the use of vaccines; Water Reed, conqueror of yellow fever, and Frederick Russell, who introduced typhoid vaccination.

George Washington University sororities will pledge their new members on Tuesday. Rushing, which opened October 4 with the Panhellenic tea, closed Thursday when all of the chapters held their final parties. Sororities represented by chapters on the campus are Alpha Delta Pi, Alpha Delta Theta, Beta Phi Alpha, Chi Omega, Delta Zeta, Kappa Delta, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Phi Mu, Phi Sigma Sigma, Pi Beta Phi, Sigma Kappa, and Zeta Tau Alpha.

Hugh H. Clegg Is Named Chairman in Charge of Arrangements.

Political Orators Take Stage On A. U. Campus Next Thursday

Sidney Sachs and Odel Rosen Are to Make Speeches for the Candidates at First Student Forum of the Year.

Political speeches will ring through the American University campus this week as the issues of the campaign become the subject of forum discussion.

Several addresses will be given at the first student forum Thursday afternoon in Hurst Hall.

Sidney Sachs, president of the student government, will preside. Charles Steward will speak "against Roosevelt," and Odel Rosen will direct his remarks "against Landon." The program starts at 12:40 p. m.

To further plans for the proposed American University Club, to include both men and women, a meeting of prospective members has been called for November 11, 8 p. m., at the Wesley Heights clubhouse. A committee representing both the college and the downtown center of the university is in charge of organization, headed by Dr. Wesley M. Gewehr, professor of history. On his committee are Dr. Emery E. Olsen and Dr. Cathery Hudson, of the downtown center; Dr. A. B. Potorf and Miss Ruberta Olds, of the college. The Faculty Women's Club has virtually disbanded and will become a part of the proposed new club.

Dr. Gewehr opened the Foundry Forum last Thursday at 11 a. m. at Foundry M. E. Church for discussion of "present-day problems." Next Thursday he will discuss "The Place of Parties and Elections in American History."

The 1936 Aucola has received first-class honor rating in its class in the sixteenth all-American Critical Service for scholastic yearbooks conducted by the National Scholastic Association, it was announced last week. Official wor came to Maynard Eicher, editor of last year's Aucola. Plans for this 1937 Aucola already are being made under direction of Raymond Wrenn, editor. Jane Getz will be editor in charge of literary department, with Ruth Butrick, Patricia Paxton and Franklin Bartle assisting. Others on the staff are Joe Masi, associate editor; Herwil Bryant, assistant; Everett Palmer, sports editor, and Dan Hild, business manager.

Dr. Joseph M. M. Gray, chancellor of American University, and Mrs. Gray will entertain at their annual reception to members of the university faculty Wednesday evening at the chancellor's home on the campus.

Dr. John E. Bentley, professor of education and psychology, has been honored by having his recent book, "Problem Children," recommended by the Book-of-the-Month Club. The book includes material collected by Dr. Bentley during ten years' work at his summer classes at the University of Colorado. A new book by the author, "Superior Children," will be off the press in the spring.

Dr. C. H. Leineweber, professor of German, has just had his new book of poetry, "Liebe und Tod," published by Gutenberg, Milwaukee.

The Student Christian Association is planning a Halloween party for Friday night.

Freshmen rules, which were rigidly enforced this year, were declared "off" for the rest of the season, following a lively series of informal contests of various kinds last week. Freshmen have doffed their green, in the form of tags, hair ribbons and "dinks," tiny caps. Kimber Shoop, athletic sophomore, was chairman of the freshman rules committee.

National U. Club Is Reorganized

Philippine Columbian Unit Hears Paper Read.

Th Philippine Columbian Association of National University was reorganized at a meeting of all-Filipino students in the school Friday night.

Leon D. Frigillano, who called the meeting, will announce the new officers this week.

Dr. James F. Couch, professor of science and philosophy in the school of economics and government, read a paper on the Society of Arcueil last week at a meeting of the History and Science Society of Washington.

It was announced the election of officers of the senior law class will be held Tuesday. Nominations are now being received.

Seven From D. C. Area Enrolled at Cornell

Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., has enrolled seven Washington students for this year. The group joined a freshman class of 1,500 at the opening of the fall term last week.

The local students there are: Edward Laurence Griffin, 240 Whittier street northwest; Edward Stanley VanBrunt, jr., 3626 Davis street northwest; Catherine VanLiew Mattoon, 101 Cedar avenue, Takoma Park, Md.; Ruth Margaret Myers, 400 Cathedral avenue; Elisabeth Wolcott Oleson, 4444 Linnean avenue northwest; Catherine Birney Strong, 3440 Thirty-fourth place, and Julia Juicheng Sze, 2001 Nineteenth street northwest.

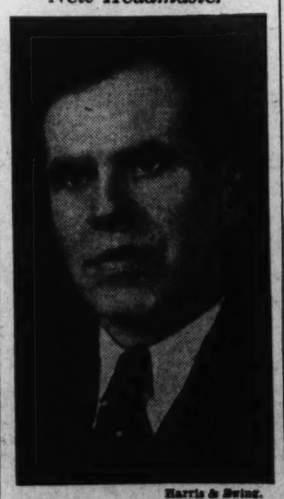
7 Get Commissions At Charlotte Hall

Seven Washington boys received commissions in the cadet corps at Charlotte Hall School Charlotte Hall, Md., according to an announcement from Maj. William A. Stephens, commandant.

The cadets are: W. D. Boles, captain; R. G. Bradley, lieutenant; O. T. Williams, first sergeant; C. H. Baldwin, N. J. Cunningham, D. D. Hull, and C. H. Rhoads, corporals.

One hundred and seventeen boys are at present enrolled for the present school session, which is the school's 163d year of operation.

New Headmaster



Harris & Ewing.

Oscar Bulanger is the new headmaster at the Nelson School for Boys. A graduate of St. Anne's University of Nova Scotia, and a former student at the University of Maine, Bates College and Muhneburg College, Mr. Bulanger comes here from the Allentown Prep School, where he was head of the romance language department.

Radio, Civic Education Funds Allotted by U. S.

Secretary Ickes Sets Aside $443,000 to Continue These Projects Through June, 1937; Will Add Ten Public Forum Centers.

Further assistance to the development of two important educational frontiers—civic education for adults and education by radio—is to be furnished by new grants of emergency funds.

For the continuation and expansion of civic education through public forum centers, $330,000 has been allocated to the United States Office of Education, Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, announced last week.

The Office of Education in turn will transmit the money to superintendents of schools who are organizing forum centers for the demonstration of new methods of practical adult education for citizenship.

To continue the experiments and demonstrations in technique necessary for successful use of radio for education, the President allocated $113,000.

Will Add Ten Centers.

The new funds will make possible the addition of ten public forum centers. Previous grants made possible the ten centers now being operated by school authorities in the following places: Portland, Oreg.; Orange County, Calif.; Colorado Springs, Colo.; Sedgwick County, Kans.; Minneapolis, Minn.; Pulaski County, Ark.; Hamilton County, Tenn.; Monongalia County, W. Va.; Schenectady County, N. Y., and Manchester, N. H.

The grant for educational radio demonstrations will permit the continuance of the educational radio project through June, 1937. In eight months this project has shown how public educational agencies can successfully use radio in the service of education.

The five programs presented on coast-to-coast networks at the invitation of the National Broadcasting Co. and the Columbia Broadcasting System have achieved outstanding records. More than 50,000 letters from appreciative listeners have been received by the project in the last 3½ months. At present the mail from listeners exceeds 6,000 letters per week. Five programs now on the air are "The World Is Yours," "Have You Heard," "Answer Me This," "Education in the News" and "Safety Musketeers."

Other programs for network and for local use are under consideration.

Is Real Economy.

"These funds permit the Federal Government to give leadership and effective assistance to two educational developments of greatest importance to the future of the people of the United States," said United States Commissioner of Education J. W. Studebaker today. "Civic education through public forums promises to be one of the most effective social inventions for the improvement of self-government. It is real economy to discover practical methods of civic education through public forums because civic education can save our adult people from unsound, and hence expensive political decisions.

"Since the inception of mass communication by radio, our people have been hoping that radio could be used in the service of education. Some promising efforts have been made, but broadcasters and educators alike agree that much remains to be done. Broadcasters have declared that education by radio is practicable within the present framework of our broadcasting system. Educators, on their part, have discovered that producing successful programs is a far more complicated process than it first appeared to be. With funds for continuation of the radio project, the Office of Education is not only discovering successful methods by which education can take the airways, but itis also discovering methods of organization and financing educational broadcasting which agencies of education can follow.

"In addition to its network demonstrations, the radio project will create an educational script exchange service to aid local educational groups in delivering good programs at the requests of local stations. By cooperation with the radio work shop of New York University, the project will aid in training individuals competent to handle the difficult techniques of writing and producing educational radio programs.

"There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that radio will become one of the most powerful constructive forces for the education of our people if we devote adequate attention to the development of truly educational programs."

U. S. Program, Tourist Interest Revive Prosperity of Olden Days in the Virgin Islands

Cruise Ships Spur Sales Of Products

Federal Rehabilitation Plan Enables Natives to Help Selves.

Co-operative Tripled Mail Business in Past Year.

The history of Uncle Sam's Caribbean possessions extends far into the romantic past. Over the Virgin Islands have flown at various times the flags of Britain, France, Denmark, and lastly, the United States. Pirates and privateers, preying on the rich traffic of the Spanish Main, talked their prey from the beautiful coves of the islands. Here the slave trade once flourished, and here pirate raids were succeeded by bloody slave insurrections.

St. Thomas was once the center of the American slave trade. In days of the sailing vessels, St. Thomas, the capital of the islands, was an important port of call for ships' supplies. Virgin Islands sugar, bay rum, and the famous St. Croix rum were shipped to distant ports. When the day of the sailing vessel had done, St. Thomas became an important coaling point. However, its importance as a colony steadily declined and when the United States took over the islands in 1917, they were, to use a phrase of former President Hoover, "an effective poorhouse." Now the 22,000 inhabitants of the islands are enjoying an economic renaissance.

Tourists Increase Sales.

When the great fleet of cruise starts its annual invasion of Caribbean waters during the next few weeks, natives of Uncle Sam's Virgin Islands look forward to a banner year in the sales of their products.

Gayly colored needlework and baskets and exotic tropical jellies are becoming more popular with American continentals and, as a result, the business of the Virgin Islands Cooperative in St. Thomas is steadily increasing. Sales of these products reached their peak during the last fiscal year, Gov. Lawrence W. Cramer has announced, and the increase of tourist travel to the islands indicates even larger sales during the coming year. The popularity of the co-operative's goods with visitors is reflected in the tripling of its mail order business. Much of this business comes from continentals who have been charmed by the fine embroidery, products of native woodworkers and basket weavers, hooked rugs, and other handiwork brought home by returning travelers.

Co-operative Prospers.

The co-operative, originally established with aid from the Federal and local governments, is one of the many ventures sponsored by the Interior Department to help make the islands self-sustaining. The co-operative is prospering; not only is it operating without any subsidy but it has repaid a government loan which helped establish it. At the last quarterly meeting directors of the institution voted a 3 per cent bonus to all native workers who turned in more than $5 worth of work during the fiscal year.

Native women are encouraged to supplement the family income by so-called "pick-up" work in the home. This part-time work during the last year brought one worker $389—a princely sum in the islands where living costs are far lower than on the continent. Workers do not have to wait until their products have been sold to obtain payment for them—they are paid at the time of delivery to the co-operative.

Total sales of the co-operative for the year were $26,213—a considerable increase over the $23,371 of the previous year. This increase was registered although several large retail outlets in the United States had to be abandoned because the co-operative is not able to produce in quantities large enough to sell through department stores. Tourist ships, coming to the islands in increasing numbers, are responsible for the greatest part of the increase.

Skilled Workers.

Natives of the island use their skill in embroidery on fine linen napkins, table cloths, handkerchiefs and towels. Familiar island scenes worked by the needle include natives with their quaint baskets balanced on the head, the omnipresent little donkeys, the palm trees waving along the beach at St. Croix, the tower of Bluebeard Castle Hotel at St. Thomas.

French-speaking natives of "Chacha town" in St. Thomas make attractive beads of seeds, and work tortoise shells and sea shells into small attractive gifts. Bay rum—a product of the islands—is distributed in attractive wicker-bottle containers. Swizzle-sticks for mixing the famous virgin island rum beverage are very popular with tourists, while every departing tour ship has its cargo of big straw beach hats, and baskets woven by natives. Mahogany is a product of the Virgin Islands and efforts are being made to revive cabinet-making through the sales outlets offered by the co-operatives.

After sampling tropical fruits, visiting palates are eager to bring back the preserved fruits sold in the co-operative. On the list are guava and papaya jellies, chutneys of mango and cashew nuts, and the delicious marmee au rum—a sauce with "a stick in it" which makes ice cream more appetizing.

Napoleon's Home on St. Helena Now Is Stop on World Cruise

Tourists to Visit Grave Deposed Emporer Chose for Himself and Restored House in Which He Lived for Six Years of Exile.

Jamestown, Island of St. Helena. When the Cunard White Star round-the-world Franconia reaches here January 29, six hours will be devoted to viewing the town and countryside where Napoleon spent an exile of six years.

Immediately upon landing the tourists will proceed to Longwood, the house where Napoleon lived, a long one-story building with a peaked roof, high enough for attic bedrooms for servants. The house is partly of mortar and has been restored as it was when the deposed Emperor of France lived here.

In this house Napoleon was virtually a prisoner, guarded night and day. He was allowed walks about the countryside, but if he strayed too far an alarm bell rang out, calling him back. The bell station still exists.

During one of his rambles Napoleon came upon a spring beneath a great cypress tree which overlooked a peaceful valley. Many times he returned to the place. He grew to love the spot and finally asked that when death came that he might be buried here. Napoleon died on May 5, 1821, and was buried in the space which is now surrounded by an iron fence. The body was removed to Paris October 15, 1840.

It was in Longwood that Napoleon wrote:

"I closed the chasm of anarchy and put an end to chaos. I cleansed the revolution of the filth it had accumulated. I ennobled peoples. I stabilized thrones.

"My fame does not rest upon my 40 victorious battles. Waterloo will wipe out the memory of so many victories. What will never pass away is my book of laws (the Code Napoleon).

"I should have died in Moscow. Till then my fame was undiminished.

"I should have gone forward sooner at Waterloo.

"Nothing but my martyrdom can save my dynasty.

"It is my wish that my ashes be laid to rest on the bank of the Seine, in the midst of the French people I have loved so well."

Dying, his last word was "Josephine," the woman he never ceased to love, even though, for reasons of state, he divorced her.

Visitors to Government House may read these two notations, but one day apart, in the record book there:

"May 4, 1821—The good ship Waterloo arrived."

"May 5, 1821—Died: Napoleon Bonaparte."

It is related that on the last page of Napoleon's copybook, used when he was a schoolboy in Corsica, where he was born, these words are written in his own handwriting:

"St. Helena, an island in the South Atlantic; British possession."

St. Helena lies 1,200 miles west of the coast of Angola, Africa, and about twice this distance east of Brazil. It is in practically the same latitude as Mozambique.

The Port of Liverpool.

One of the chief reasons for Liverpool's becoming a great port is that it possesses the only deep-water haven on the west coast of England. There are 6½ miles of docks on the city's side of the Mersey and 9½ miles on the Birkenhead side.

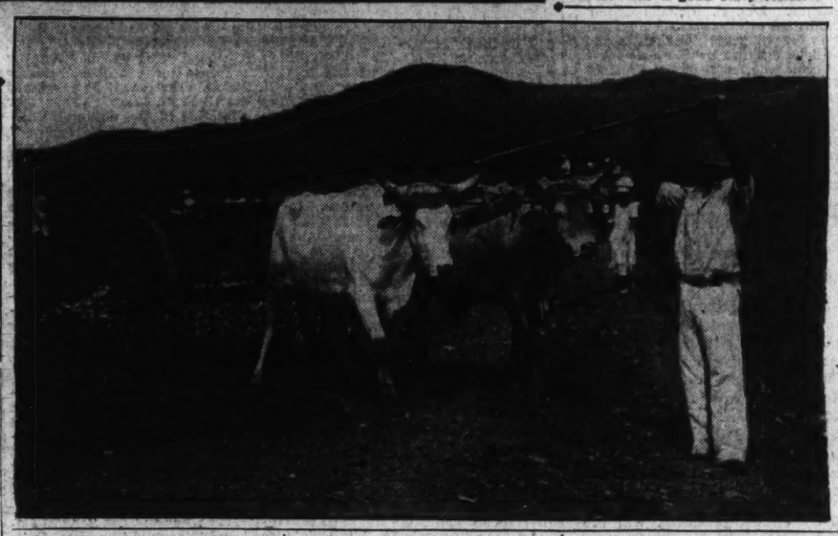
Eaton Assumes Cavalier Post

Will Manage Hotel at Virginia Beach.

Virginia Beach, Va., Oct. 24.—Roland Eaton, well known in hotel circles along the Atlantic seaboard, has arrived at the Cavalier to assume his new duties as managing director. He succeeds Sidney Banks, who resigned this summer to form his own operating company.

L. H. Windholz, president of the Cavalier Hotel Corporation, announced that the 1936 summer business was the best in the ten years the hotel has been in operation.

Mr. Eaton has had wide experience in the management of Florida resort hotels. Educated at Dartmouth and Cornell, Mr. Eaton is a member of Beta Theta Pi, and Ye Hosts, honorary hotel society at Cornell. He also is a member of the American Hotel Association, the New England Hotel Association, the Florida State Hotel Association, the Hotel Greeters of America and the Southern Hotel Association.



Miami Building Boom Hits New Record for 1936

Figures Exceed Peak Set in 1925. Resort Awaits Annual Tourist Season.

Miami, Fla., Oct. 24.—More than 6,000 additional housing units have been added to the Miami area's facilities for accommodating the 1936-37 horde of winter tourists, according to J. B. Sullivan, State hotel commissioner, who has surveyed the extensive plans being made for welcoming more than 2,500,000 visitors to "America's Riviera."

In Dade County, which embraces the City of Miami and several surrounding communities, building permits issued since last April called for the erection of more than 100 new apartment houses with approximately 3,000 rooms. Meantime, 33 new hotels, ranging from residential hotels to de luxe structures, will have added more than 2,500 units to the district's accommodations.

Miami's sun-seekers who are already beginning to deploy along the banks of Biscayne Bay do not see the dramatic trappings of the 1925-26 Florida boom time, but statistics of the Miami building department show that the wave of residential building which has been sweeping over the district since last January 1 has exceeded in volume the peak figures for the first eight months of that fabulous year, 1925.

Mother, Daughter Ask Richard Dix To Finance Tour

New York, Oct. 24.—Cook's New York office has just received a dispatch from Hollywood concerning a fan letter received by Richard Dix—from a woman in the Middle West asking if he would please finance a Cook's tour for herself and her 18-year-old daughter. Her assumption was that the girl's chances for a well-to-do marriage would be at their best during such a trip, whereas the supply of eligible young men in their small town was exhausted.

John Strong, of King Features Syndicate, reporting the incident, says that while Hollywood stars receive some strange requests, this one is generally conceded to be one of the strangest.

Columbus Voyage Prompted by Polo's Stories of the East

Marco Polo's story-telling ability was really responsible for the discovery of America.

In 1270, more than 200 years before the voyage of Columbus, Marco Polo went to China with his father. They went by the overland route through Armenia, Palestine, Persia, and so on to China. It took them three years to get there. They stayed in China 16 years.

Marco ruled the city of Yang-Chow for three years.

When Marco returned he told wonderful tales of the Far East, of gold, jewels, silks, and fabulous riches of all kinds.

All Europe buzzed with his stories, incredulous, yet eager to obtain the silks, the jewels and the gold.

In order to impress their friends with the great riches of the East, the Polos gave a great banquet. In the midst of it they ripped open their garments, and out fell hundreds of jewels and much gold.

Then Marco Polo wrote a book about his travels. It set the imagination of the world on fire. It started people thinking on the possibilities of the Far East.

This overland route was very long, difficult and dangerous. A sailing route around Africa and through the Indian Ocean was almost equally hazardous. The great question for centuries was a short route to the East.

Columbus, believing the fantastic idea that the earth was round, sailed west to reach the East Indies and discovered the West Indies—all because Marco Polo was a good story-teller.

Arabian Bluebloods Entered In Cairo Season Opening Nov. 1

Track Events to Attract American Sportsmen and Tourists; His Majesty's Cup Race One of Feature Events on Program.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cairo, Egypt, Oct. 24.—Descendants of the most famous stables of Egypt and Arabia, including blood lines from which Man o' War and other world famous racers were developed, will be seen in action by American sportsmen and tourists in Cairo this winter.

Announcements made by the Heliopolis Racing Club and the celebrated Gezira Sporting Club show a total of 48 days of racing on the two courses, from November 1 until March 29, 1937, when the meets close with "His Majesty's Cup" race.

Both clubs, well known among American and European sportsmen as presenting the finest Arabian breeding stock to be found in the world, are under the patronage of King Farouk I of Egypt. It would be hard to find an American racing stable of note that does not include among its sires and dams a pure-blooded Arabian horse from stock developed during the Cairo racing season.

Although Egyptian stables as highly esteemed among the sporting fraternity as that of Prince Mohammed Ali will be represented at the forthcoming meets, many breeders of Arab horses on a smaller scale are expected to compete. European bred horses also will be entered, but in separate classes, and they will race within their own class.

The Cairo racing season has for generations attracted the socially elite of America, England and Continental Europe.

Among the Egyptian and British notables who will be seen during this coming winter are King Farouk I of Egypt, Prince Hassan Toussoun, the Baron Empain, Sir Miles Wedderburn Lampson, Prince Omar Toussoun and Prince Mohammed Ali, the world's foremost authority on Arab horses.

Principal races include the Heliopolis Cup, the Al Mossat Grand Prix, the Christmas Handicap, the Baron Empain Gold Cup, the Egyptian Stakes, the Newmarket Handicap, the Prince Kemal el Dine Memorial Challenge Cup, the Egyptian Government Race, and ending with His Majesty's Cup Race.

The Coliseum.

The Coliseum, in Rome, recently repaired by the Italian government, was begun by Vespesian on the site of part of Nero's famous Golden House, and inaugurated by Titus in A. D. 80. It consisted originally of three arcaded stories of stone and an upper gallery, originally of wood, which was rebuilt of stone in the present form some time in the third century. The Coliseum probably seated between 40,000 and 50,000 people. It is elliptical in plan, with its long axis 615 feet and its short axis 510 feet; its arena, 281 feet long and 177 feet wide. Its total height to the top of the third-century stone screen wall is about 160 feet.

Daughters of American Revolution to Mark Two Historic Anniversaries This Week

Chapters to Celebrate Navy Day on Tuesday

District Sending Delegation to Metropolis for Rites Marking Fiftieth Anniversary of Statue of Liberty's Presentation.

District of Columbia Daughters of the American Revolution will observe two historic anniversaries this week marking events in the development of American liberty. They will formally recognize Navy Day on Tuesday, when they will participate in the annual Navy Day exercises at the John Paul Jones statue in Potomac Park under the auspices of the Military order of the World War.

During the ceremony, following a concert by the Marine Band, Mrs. Charles Carrol Haig will place a wreath on the statue honoring John Paul Jones, the first officer to receive a commission in the United States Navy. The National Society D. A. R. will be represented by Mrs. Vinton Earl Sisson, national chairman of the national defense through patriotic education committee. Mrs. William D. Leetch and Mrs. T. Franklin Stewart will form the color guard.

MRS. CHARLES CARROL HAIG, State regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution, who will participate in both the Navy Day exercises and the anniversary of the dedication of the Statue of Liberty in New York.

Wednesday the District D. A. R. will be represented in New York at the fiftieth anniversary of the dedication of the Statue of Liberty by Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, State regent. She will attend the program to be held at Bedloes Island, where Mrs. William A. Becker, president general, will have a part in the ceremony and will be a guest at the official banquet. The Ambassador of France, M. Andre de Laboulaye, will be the speaker.

The State Officers Club, District D. A. R., held its annual dinner last night in the Mayflower Hotel. Miss Lillian Chenoweth, president and State vice regent, gave the address of welcome.

Many social events mark the calendar of D. A. R. chapters for the coming week. Col. James McCall Chapter is entertaining this afternoon at a Silver Tea in the home of Mrs. Claude Allen Cook, 8 Baltimore road, Silver Spring.

Continental Dames Chapter will have a reception honoring the State regent, Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, and other State officers, on Friday in the home of Mrs. Edmund K. Fox. Presiding at the tea table will be the past vice presidents general from the District, Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins, Mrs. David D. Caldwell and Miss Helen Harman, and the past State regents, Mrs. William B. Hardy, Mrs. Harry Colfax Grove and Mrs. George Madden Grimes.

Monticello Chapter received in honor of Mrs. Samuel B. Woodbridge, State librarian, on Friday.

Federal City Chapter will give a dinner in the Fairfax Hotel Thursday at 6 p. m., followed by the regular monthly business meeting. The regent, Mrs. C. Viola Fellows, will preside.

An increased number of chapters are coming to the fore in national and District D. A. R. activities. Among these is the Susan Reviere Hetzel Chapter, represented in the national society by Mrs. Gertrude J. McPherson, national vice chairman of the filing and lending bureau, and Mrs. William T. Clark, national finance committee, and in the District by Mrs. Geoffrey Creyke, State chairman of the D. A. R. Magazine, and Mrs. Ryland C. Bryant, State vice chairman of genealogical records.

Patriots Memorial Chapter will meet November 10 at the home of Mrs. Alexander G. Hamilton, 7615 Fourteenth street. Ida Chamberlain Scheduled to Talk At A.A.U.W. Club

Against a background of ancient Chinese art treasures, Miss Ida Hoyt Chamberlain, composer, pianist and soprano, will give a lecture-recital in costume at the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women, November 16, at 4:45 p. m. She will present excerpts from her composition, "The Never Ending Wrong," a series of tone pictures based on Chinese music collected during her five years of residence in the Orient.

Miss Chamberlain will open her program with the reading of "Pagoda Wind Bells," an original poem. It will be followed by vocal and instrumental numbers from her symphonic poem, inspired by the ancient Chinese classics of the famous golden age, "The Never Ending Wrong," by Po Chu-i, and "An Emperor's Love," by Li Po.

The compositions will be presented in colorful period costumes of the T'ang dynasty. She will appear as a noble lady, a Manchu princess, a bride and the Empress Tai Cheng, in rainbow skirt and feather jacket, designed especially for the heroine of her story.

In recreating Eastern music for Western instruments, as Miss Chamberlain has done for the first time, she had to devise a system of her own which she calls the "Ori-occident scale and interval system of music." She is the first person to take down in musical notation the plaintive melodies of ancient Chinese rituals, which are sung in the temples and have been handed down from mouth to ear for centuries.

In the East, critics have said her development of Chinese music into a new art form is comparable to the operatic reform of Wagner and the modernists led by Debussy. Before returning to America she presented her tone pictures to large audiences in the outstanding cities of China and at the American Embassy in Pekin. Sir Granville Bantock, noted English composer, has invited her to make a concert tour of England with him next year.

Before going to the Orient to take up residence with her brother, Culver B. Chamberlain, for 15 years American Consul in China, the artist had sung extensively over the radio and had had her musical romance, "The Enchanted Isle," presented at the Lyric Theater in New York. Emilio Roxas, accompanist for Martinelli in his recent concert here, was her coach and accompanist.

Mrs. William M. Sweet and Mrs. Alexander Rosenblum, of the Ladies Auxiliary of the District of Columbia Dentists Society, who are planning a luncheon and bridge party.

The entertainment will be held at the Thomas Circle Club tomorrow. The money will be placed in the fund for furnishing free night dental clinics.

Moose Lodges to Honor Director, Senator J. J. Davis, on Birthday

Mooseheart Alumni Committee Plans Entertainment Tuesday Evening; Columbia Chapter to Hold Card Party Thursday.

Tuesday, the members of the Moose lodges and the chapters of the Women of the Moose will celebrate the birthday of the director general of their organization, and founder of Mooseheart, Senator James J. Davis.

Mooseheart is a city established for orphaned children of members of the order. Spreading over more than 1,200 acres, the city cares for nearly a thousand orphans, who are housed in cottages, each of which is "adopted" by a lodge of the organization as its personal charge. The children are educated and taught one of the 45 vocations offered in the curriculum. The library at Mooseheart has been contributed by the members throughout the country at annual book showers.

In the fall of 1930 a child research was established at Mooseheart under the sponsorship of the Women of the Moose and, under the direction of Dr. Martin L. Reymert, noted psychologist, has earned wide recognition as the result of its studies on the care and training of children. The national advisory council for the Mooseheart Laboratory for Child Research includes a number of outstanding educators from the leading universities of the country.

The Mooseheart alumni committee of Columbia Chapter, of which Past Regent Mrs. Grace Clark, is chairman, with the Mooseheart committee, headed by George Edelman, have planned an open meeting and entertainment which will be held Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock at Moose Hall, 1414 Eye street northwest. Dr. Reymert will speak on the work of the laboratory and John Meikle, a member of the board of governors and a graduate of Mooseheart, will speak on Mooseheart and its founder.

The social service committee of Columbia Chapter is sponsoring a card and bingo party at the home of the assistant chairman, Mrs. Mary Miller, 506 Eighth street northeast, Thursday evening at 8 o'clock.

Director Russell B. Martin, at a meeting of the entertainment committee and board of officers Tuesday night, announced a Halloween ance in Moose Hall, 1414 I street northwest, from 9 to 12 p. m.

Dorcas Marks Lodge Founding

Two of Four Survivors of Charter Membership Speak at Meeting.

Dorcas Rebekah Lodge, No. 4, I. O. O. F., celebrated the thirty-eighth anniversary of the institution of the lodge at I. O. O. F. Temple, 419 Seventh street northwest, recently. Two of four surviving charter members who are still affiliated with the lodge, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Lohmar spoke.

Mrs. Lohmar was the first warden of the lodge and Mr. Lohmar the first inside guardian. W. W. Millan, who was the grand master of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia at the time Dorcas Lodge was instituted on October 17, 1898, was present and told of the institution of the lodge.

A letter was read from Mrs. Mattie Nicholson, who was the noble grand of the lodge at the time it was instituted. Mrs. Nicholson and her husband, who are charter members of Dorcas, are still affiliated with the lodge although they have resided for over 30 years in Enid, Okla.

The closing feature of the program was a candlelight service. A circle was formed in the center of the lodge room by 38 members bearing tall flower tapers alternately green and pink, the Rebekah colors. Each candle was held by a member who affiliated with the lodge during the year represented.

When the circle was formed, the candle for the year 1898, which was held by Mr. Lohmar (charter member), was lighted by Mr. Millan, godfather of the lodge, and each of the other candles were lighted from the candle of the preceding year. When all candles were lighted, the lights of the room were turned out and those in attendance sang "Happy Birthday to You." Refreshments were served including a huge birthday cake with 38 candles.

At the meeting of Dorcas Lodge on November 5 several candidates will be initiated.

American Legion Adds 6,600 Veterans to Membership Rolls in Washington Region in 1936

Most Successful Period Of Department History

Thirty-Two Posts Now Chartered Here; Eight Exceeded Quotas Set for Current Year; Sergeant Jasper Largest of All on Roster.

The Department of the District of Columbia 1, American Legion, has just closed the most successful year in the history of the organization since its inception shortly after the World War, with a total of 6,600 members enrolled during the past year. This was the largest ever attained in this department of the American Legion.

At present there are 32 posts in the department, and eight of them exceeded their quotas as set up at the start of the year. They were George Washington Post, with 196, against a quota of 186; Lincoln Post, 264, against a quota of 245; George E. Killeen Post, 58, against a quota of 46; James E. Walker Post, 241, against a quota of 181; Stephen P. McCroarty Post, 100, against a quota of 81; Fort Stevens Post, 448, against a quota of 425, and the United States Department of Agriculture Post, with 235, against a quota of 103, while Belleau Wood Post had a quota of 16 and turned in 16. The Second Division Post accomplished the same feat with a total of 81.

Sergt. Jasper Post, the largest in the city, although not reaching quota of 1,005, turned in a total of 703, and nearest rival was the Costello Post, with 634. This is the third successive year the Sergt. Jasper Post has attained the largest membership in the department, and in accordance with the specifications set up at the time of the award of the Spafford Cup the post was awarded permanent possession, having won it three consecutive years for having the largest enrollment.

The department commander, Horace W. Lineburg, has set a total of 7,600 as a goal for the coming year.

Throughout the country the legion enrolled a total of 953,115 for the past year and have already turned in an advance membership of 80,297 for 1937. This greatly exceeds the mark of only 21,495 enrolled at the same time a year ago.

Many important trophies were awarded the several posts in the field of membership during the year, and Al Shrugue, the chairman of trophies and awards, has been busy for the past month presenting these. But two cups remain to be awarded. These were both won by the Police Boys' Club Band and were awarded for the best boys' band and the best nonmilitary band appearing in the recent department convention parade. These will be presented at appropriate ceremonies in the near future by Department Commander Horace W. Lineburg, who will present them in the name of the American Legion to Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of the Washington Police Department, who will receive them on behalf of the Police Boys' Club Band.

At the invitation of Commander J. F. Curtin, of the Laurel Post of the Department of Maryland, Department Commander Horace W. Lineburg and his entire staff, attended by the guard of honor and many members of this department, took part in the joint installation of the officers of the Laurel Post, George G. Meade Post, Marlboro Post and the Glenburnie Post held at the Laurel National Guard Armory on Friday evening.

The principal speaker of the evening was Dr. Charles S. Richardson, of the University of Maryland, who spoke on "Americanism vs. Communism," before a gathering of more than a thousand legionnaires and their friends. A reception and dance followed in honor of the department commander of Maryland, J. Bryan Hobbs, who is a member of the Laurel Post, followed.

During the week just past, the department commander and his staff have installed the officers of the Quentin Roosevelt Post, Bunker Hill Post, Stanley Church Depue Post, James E. Walker Post and the Government Printing Office Post.

This Tuesday at noon the members of this department will participate in the annual Navy Day exercises to be held at the John Paul Jones Monument at which time the department commander will place a wreath at the statue in the name of the Legion.

The regular monthly meeting of the department executive committee was held in the board room of the District Building on last Thursday evening. Many committee reports on the recent Cleveland convention were received at this time.

During the month of November two important national business sessions will take place at national headquarters in Indianapolis, Ind. The first of these will be the annual fall conference of the new department commanders and adjutants and will be held on November 15, 16, and 17, at which time they will receive their instructions for the coming year. This department will be represented by Department Commander Horace W. Lineburg and Department Adjutant Thomas Mason, jr.

The second will be held on November 19 and 20 when the national executive committee will meet to outline the Legion's 1937 program. This will be fashioned after the mandates of the recent Cleveland convention.

Sergeant Jasper Post.

The Sergeant Jasper Post has again attained the honor of being the largest post in the department of the District of Columbia as was the case during the two preceding years. Because of this the post was awarded the Spafford Cup for permanent possession.

Post Membership Officer William P. Kershner already has turned in to the department headquarters more than 100 new 1937 cards and the post has received a fine start toward again being the largest post.

At the next meeting to be held in the near future the post commander, Fred Money, will announce several appointments for the coming year.

Quentin Roosevelt Post.

The new elected officers of this post were inducted into office at the meeting of the post held in the Potomac Boat Club on last Monday evening. As has been the custom for many years, the ceremonies were conducted by the department commander and members of his staff.

A large number of members were in attendance and a goodly number of 1937 cards were secured, while a number of new applications for membership were also received.

Following another yearly custom, the post voted to pay the dues of the members of the squadron of Sons of the American Legion sponsored by the post.

After the close of the meeting refreshments were served in the club rooms.

James Reese Europe Post.

A special meeting of this post was held at the residence of Harvey Bean on Saturday, October 17, when extensive plans for the reorganization of the drum and bugle corps were made. The post is also organizing a marching club of more than 60 members, while a squadron of Sons of the American Legion will also be sponsored by the post during the coming year.

These will represent the post at the national convention to be held in New York City in 1937, at which time it is hoped the drum and bugle corps will have their new uniforms.

Invitations have been sent out by the post for the Follow Me celebration to be held on Armistice Day, November 11, at the Elks Home, 301 Rhode Island avenue northwest.

Bunker Hill Post.

The installation of officers of Bunker Hill Post, No. 31, was held at the Admiral Club on Tuesday evening. Department Commander Lineburg and his staff conducted the installation of the following officers: Commander, Grover W. Tribble; first vice commander, Mack Myers; second vice commander, Herbert F. Audas; third vice commander, William Leo Collins; adjutant, L. J. P. Fichthorn; finance officer, William A. Hans, and sergeant-at-arms, Thomas Charles Baisden.

The newly installed commander announced the following appointments:

Chaplain, the Rev. R. C. Fitzgerald; judge advocate, Russell M. Brown; historian, John R. Weitzel; Americanism officer, Zeb T. Hamilton; senior color bearer, Charles Harry Bair; junior color bearer, Tony David Simons; quartermaster, Chester J. Wolf; surgeon, Dr. H. J. Hocking; graves registration officer, Charles C. Wolfel; child welfare officer, Raymond A. Eichhorn; civics relations officer, Grover W. Tribble; building committee officer, J. Fred Chase; employment officer, Nicholas Ward Guthrie; athletic officer, Robert R. Spriggs; sons of legion officer, Ralph H. Thrasher; uniform officer, Thomas Popham Royston, and publicity officer, L. J. P. Fichthorn.

The principal speakers of the evening were Commander Lineburg, First Vice Commander Roland W. Phillips, Second Vice Commander Mrs. Helen Opitz, Third Vice Commander Ray L. Zwinglas, National Executive Committeeman Joseph J. Malloy and National Historian Thomas M. Owen, jr.

Retiring Commander Thad A. Bean was presented with a past commander's medal and a past commander's ring.

The officers of the L-31 Club, composed of the wives of members of Bunker Hill Post, announce that all arrangements have been completed for the fall dance, to be held at Beaver Dam Country Club on Saturday, November 28, 1936, for the benefit of Bunker Hill Post, No. 31. The chairman of this dance is Mrs. Lillian Bean.

Lincoln Post, No. 17.

The executive committee of Lincoln Post, No. 17, American Legion, authorized the holding of a dance in November for the benefit of the annual Christmas party given by the club.

Commander Rudolph Blick, chairman of the Sons of the American Legion, is making arrangements for the meeting of his squadron to be held Friday evening. Election and installation of officers, will take place at this meeting.

The list of appointments for chairmen submitted by Commander Emery was approved by the executive committee. They were Dr. H. D. Shapiro, membership; Rudolph Blick, Sons of the American Legion; Ernest Campbell, athletic officer; Nick Chaconas, civic relations; C. D. Verhines, Americanization officer; Charles G. Rainbow Group To Hold Dance

Reception, Ball Is Planned December 5; O. A. Jackson, Ticket Chairman.

The members of the District of Columbia Chapter, Rainbow Division Veterans, are completing plans for their nineteenth annual midwinter reception and dance, to be held December 5, in the Cafe de la Crystallerie, of The Broadmoor.

Oscar A. Jackson is chairman of the ticket committee.

The latest appointments of vice chairmen for the dance include the following: Refreshments, Paul A. Demonet; prizes, Francis O. Sexton; entertainment, Maj. Ivy Pelzman; patrons, Homer S. Patterson; patronesses, Cecil J. Wilkinson; floor, Winfield Scott Lynn; door, Maj. Herbert J. Bryson; floral, James E. Daly; and transportation, Walter E. Fillman.

The general chairman, Bentley Mulford, has received word that Sharon C. Cover, national secretary of the R. D. V., will head a large group of Michigan Rainbowers coming by motorcade from in and around Detroit to the dance.

President William H. Kay at the last meeting of the local Rainbow Chapter appointed Winfield Scott Lynn as chairman of the memorial committee.

The next meeting of the chapter will be in the form of a dinner-meeting, to be held in Schneider's Restaurant, 427 Eleventh street northwest, November 18.

The Federal Diary

By Samuel Lubell

Registered U. S. Patent Office.

Uncle Sam, Businessman.

Every once in so often you read of a bank suddenly finding itself in some strange business because of someone's failure to pay a debt—and so you can imagine the varied lines of business into which Uncle Sam has been flung in enforcing the national bank act.

You could run through the classified section of the telephone directory and feel certain that Uncle Sam's receivers have had a try at virtually every sort of enterprise listed, from Atlantic City hotels to Chesapeake Bay oyster beds, Pennsylvania coal and iron mines, cotton plantations, laundries, second-hand automobile agencies, baby carriages, artificial limbs, and even to putting churches on a sound financial basis.

Wherever possible, of course, the receivers try to liquidate the bank's assets as quickly as possible, but quite frequently it would be foolish to throw a particular piece of property on the market, and the receiver has to go into the business. In one Western State, for example, the bank receiver foreclosed on a 100,000-acre ranch, stocked with 18,000 sheep and 6,000 head of cattle. An experienced livestock operator was hired to keep things going. He did so for three years, shearing 22,000 sheep each year and averaging a wool clip of 174,000 pounds annually. At the close of the third year the ranch was put on a profit-making basis and sold.

Oyster beds that came into the hands of an East Coast bank receiver offered a similar problem. Not only were the oystermen unable to pay their debts, but a severe storm almost destroyed their beds. To sell the beds then would have meant virtually wiping out the debt, and so the receiver set about, with the best scientific advice, to rehabilitate the beds.

In 1932, when a Chicago national bank suspended business it owned a one-story bank building about 13 miles from the Loop district and valued on its books at $132,000. Rejecting an offer of $40,000 for the property, the receiver decided to alter the building, and leased part of it to a chain drug store on a 15-year annual lease. With the drug store on the property the offer was jumped to $110,500, at which figure it was sold.

The list of business adventures of Uncle Sam's receivers could be continued without end, for in the past three years the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency has had almost 1,700 receiverships under its wing. Of these 484 have been liquidated and about 1,200 still remain. Although the receivers exercise a good deal of personal discretion for many decisions, they must obtain the approval of the Comptroller and more than 1,000 letters a week are handled by the division of insolvent banks.

Not all of Uncle Sam's business adventures have had a happy ending but how good a set of businessmen his receivers are can be seen from the fact that ever since the passage of the national bank act more than 70 years ago the creditors of liquidated banks have received an average of 93 cents on the dollar.

Shaw on Spoils.

Defending the Administration against "spoils" accusations, John Arthur Shaw, past president of the A. F. G. E. and father of the new N. A. F. E., writes in to suggest that "those of us who have served satisfactorily for three years in non-civil service jobs have proved our worth and should receive appointments in the civil service on passing non-competitive examinations."

Mr. Shaw goes on to say:

"There have been charges galore that the merit system was debauched by the present Administration when they decided that most of the new employes would be chosen without regard to civil service laws and regulations. As a matter of fact the executives of the Civil Service Commission knew that they could not meet the emergency in the short time that might have been allotted to them. It takes about six months to advertise, prepare, hold examinations, examine papers and make appointments under our present civil service procedure. When the first of the emergency units was organized, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the Civil Service Commission was called upon to suggest competent civil service eligibles for appointments. They were not in a position to furnish the required number of clerks and as a result the AAA found it necessary to appoint persons without regard to civil service regulations.

"In other words we were faced with an emergency equal to the one of 1917. We had no time to wait for a system that takes six months to operate, so had to appoint without regard to civil service laws. As a matter of fact, however, I firmly believe that we obtained a better class of employes by the "pick and choose" method than we should have under the system of picking those who passed the highest examination in seventh grade subjects. I also firmly believe that politics played as little a part in these emergency appointments as it does in civil service reappointments—perhaps less."

James S. Taylor, associate director of the division of economics and statistics of the Federal Housing Administration, will speak on "Private and Publicly Aided Construction" tomorrow night in the next of the series of construction trend discussions being sponsored by the Washington Chapter of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians.

Female Chicks.

It takes from 4 to 12 weeks to tell whether a baby chick is male or female, which annoys egg-producers who would like to raise only pullets, no end. However, the Department of Agriculture's poultry specialists hope to remedy this by developing some means of telling the sex of the chicks as soon as they pop out of their shells.

For about a year T. C. Byerly and J. C. Quinn have been working on Rhode Island Red chicks, trying to tell the females from the males by the distinctive black stripes and spots with which females are marked. In their most recent test with 1,100 chicks the two poultry scientists managed to tell the correct sex of 81 per cent through their markings. Four out of five is not bad for a starter, but the margin of error is still too great for the scientists to chalk up a real victory.

The Beltsville, Md., experimental station, at which Byerly and Quinn are working, fairly abounds with baby chicks. Each year from 50,000 to 100,000 chicks are hatched out and put through scientific paces. The chicks produce about 300,000 eggs annually, about half of which goes for scientific purposes and for a new brood, and the other half to the Department of Agriculture's welfare store. From 5,000 to 10,000 full-grown chickens are also supplied the store, and Thanksgiving may find some additional turkeys. Turkey growing has just begun on the farm and there are from 300 to 400 stocked.

With all those chickens on the station, you would think the Beltsville scientists would rank high as chicken-eaters. We thought so too, but Byerly assured us the reverse was true. It seems to eat the chickens the scientists have to get the approval of Treasury officials in Washington and, although they like chicken, they don't relish it smothered in red tape.

District Legion Auxiliary To Take Part in Navy Day

Department President Will Place Wreath at Program at John Paul Jones Statue; Officers Installed at Government Printing Office Unit.

The American Legion Auxiliary, Department of District of Columbia, will participate in the annual Navy Day exercises, sponsored by the Military Order of the World War at the John Paul Jones statue in Potomac Park on Tuesday at 12:30 p. m. A wreath presented by the George E. Killeen Unit will be placed by Mrs. Mary Killeen, department president, at the statue during the services.

On Monday evening the officers of the United States Government Printing Office Unit were installed by Mrs. Killeen, assisted by Miss Irene Sheehan, department vice president. The ceremonies were held in the Green Room of the Government Printing Office.

The Lincoln Unit held its installation at the Mayflower Hotel, Wednesday evening. Mrs. Killeen, assisted by Mrs. Ruth Turner, department vice president, performed the ceremonies.

The United States Agriculture Unit's officers were installed at the War Mothers' Home last Thursday evening, with Mrs. Killeen and Mrs. E. Louise Warren, vice president, giving the charges and obligation.

Orphan Education.

Miss Nicie Perrell, the national executive committeewoman, has been appointed by national headquarters as chairman of education of war orphans of area "B." At the last executive board meeting Miss Perrell gave the report of the national convention recently held in Cleveland. Miss Perrell represented this department as chairman of the District of Columbia delegation.

Additional appointments were ratified at this executive meeting as follows: Resolutions, Mrs. Edith Warren Quinn; education of war orphans, Mrs. Alberta Lacey, and vice chairman of juniors, Mrs. Ethel Clark.

Standing Committees.

The following chairmen of standing committees of the Kenneth H. Nash Unit, for the year 1936-1937, have been appointed by the unit president, Mrs. Mary B. Corwin: rehabilitation, Mrs. Anna Seiders; child welfare, Mrs. Lillian K. Urban; community service and unit activities, Mrs. Sarah Kohen; Americanism, Mrs. Delle F. Underwood; membership, Mrs. Ethel Wilt; ways and means, Mrs. Palymira Panizza; national defense, Mrs. Franklin P. Nash; national bulletin, Mrs. Olive Smith Carpenter; junior organization and music, Mrs. Zelda Mulvey; legislative, Mrs. Bob Ell Graves; World War orphans, Miss E. Gertrude Bacon; fidac, Mrs. H. Aston; trophies and awards, Mrs. Sarah Charles; constitution and by-laws, Mrs. William D. Mulkey; poppies, Mrs. Viola Bacon; sick, Mrs. Bertha M. Gessford; publicity, Mrs. Mary B. Corwin.

Isabele Dogherty was received into membership of the junior group of the unit at the last regular meeting.

At the recent installation of officers, Mrs. Ruth M. Turner, member of the unit and department vice president, presented badges to the unit for the use of unit vice presidents.

A benefit luncheon will be held by the unit in the rooms of the Chestnut Farms Dairy Saturday at 1:20 p. m.

Installation Rites.

Installation ceremonies of the United States Treasury Unit, No. 35, American Legion Auxiliary, were held in the Italian Gardens, Mayflower Hotel, recently. Instructions to officers on their duties were given by Mrs. T. V. Walker, a past department president, and Mrs. Mary K. Killeen, the department president, gave the obligation. Mrs. Killeen was accompanied by her staff of department officers.

The newly elected officers are: President, Miss Minnie May Hardy; vice presidents, Mrs. Marguerite Hicks, Mrs. Ethel E. Clarke and Mrs. Mary E. Foote; chaplain, Mrs. Mabel Cook; sergeant at-arms, Mrs. Marie Souder; color-bearers, Mrs. William P. Slattery and Mrs. Pauline Turner; historian, Miss Clara Rollins. Officers appointed by the president: Secretary, Mrs. Bessie I. Koehl, and treasurer, Mrs. Vera Shisler.

Addresses were given by Fred G. Fraser, Sous Chef de Chemin der Fer Passe. National 40/8, and a past department commander; Past Post Commander Bellow, and Post Commander Dailey, of the Treasury Post, No. 35. Commander Dailey presented Miss Hardy with flowers from his post, and Mrs. T. V. Walker presented an engraved gavel to the president as a symbol of her authority. Past Post Commander Bellow was the recipient of a box of cigars from the Treasury Unit.

Appointments Ratified.

The following appointments were ratified: Americanism and national defense, Mrs. Mary E. Foote; child welfare, Mrs. Ruth Tunis; fidac, Mrs. Frances Irwin; bulletins, Mrs. Vera Shisler; juniors, Mrs. Ethel E. Clark; legislative, Mrs. Bessie I. Koehl; poppy, Mrs. Evelyn E. Copeland; memorials, trophies and awards, Mrs. Edna Burns; constitution and by-laws, membership and rehabilitation, Mrs. T. V. Walker; hospital, Mrs. Frances Hamerick.

Officers Installed.

The monthly meeting of the George E. Killeen Unit, No. 25, American Legion Auxiliary, Department of the District of Columbia, was held in the Killeen Club rooms recently. Mrs. Catherine Waters presided. The following officers were installed by Mrs. Mary K. Killeen, department president, assisted by Mrs. E. Louise Warren, department vice president: President, Mrs. Catherine Waters, re-elected; vice presidents, Mrs. Irene Arnold, Mrs. Evie Kidwell, and Mrs. Anna Waters; chaplain, Miss Amy Hammond; sergeant-at-arms, Mrs. Ruth Berryman; color bearers, Mrs. Anna Hanna and Mrs. Gladys Jones; secretary, Mrs. Ada Riley, re-elected; recording secretary, Miss Grace L. Stoek; treasurer, Mrs. Isabelle Steinbreaker, re-elected; historian, Miss Margaret Buscher; custodian, Mrs. Viola Fones.

The guests present included besides Mrs. Killeen and her entire staff, the past department commander of the American Legion, Mr. Fred Fraser, who spoke on "The Relationship of the Gold Star Mothers to the Legion and Auxiliary." Mrs. Carpenter, president of the Gold Star Mothers and several of the Gold Star Mothers as well as War Mothers were present, also Mrs. Sterling L. Morelock, president of Wakefield, No. 48, Military Order of the Purple Heart, several legion post commanders and presidents of auxiliary units.

Mrs. Gertrude Russell, formerly with the Metropolitan Opera Company gave several vocal solos accompanied by Mrs. W. F. Atkinson. The president, Mrs. Waters was the recipient of several bouquets of flowers and a leather pocketbook the gift of Mrs. Irene Arnold. The Killeen Unit gave her a past president's pin. Refreshments were served and a social evening was enjoyed.

Committee Heads.

The following chairmen of the various committees have been appointed by Mrs. Catherine Waters, president, George E. Killeen Unit, No. 25, American Legion Auxiliary: Rehabilitation, Mrs. Mary K. Killeen; Americanism and national defense, Mrs. Catherine Hood; legislation, Mrs. Catherine Hood; juniors, Mrs. Anna Waters; membership, Mrs. Isabelle Steinbreaker; child welfare, Mrs. Viola Fones; welfare, Mrs. Lelia Barber; fidac, Mrs. Ruth Berryman; poppy, Mrs. Ruth Berryman; activities, Mrs. Margaret Buscher; by-laws, Mrs. Irene Arnold; parliamentarian, Mrs. Irene Arnold; bulletin, Mrs. Evie Kidwell; ways and means, Mrs. Gladys Jones; cheerio, Mrs. Josephine Talbs; music, Mrs. Dorothy Wilding; publicity, Miss Grace L. Stoek.

Vogt Commands Blue and Gray

Charter Member Selected at Caucus of D. C. Delegates to Norfolk Session.

Members of Washington Post, No. 29, comprising the District of Columbia delegation to the annual convention of the Twenty-ninth (Blue and Gray) Division Association, in Norfolk, met in caucus before the national election session and selected Louis C. Vogt as State commander for the District of Columbia. Vogt is a charter member and one of the organizers of the local post. In past years he has served the national organization as one of its vice presidents and in several years as a member of the national executive committee.

Maurice P. McGrath, a member of Washington Post and for four years service officer for the national organization, was again elected to serve in that post for 1937. McGrath was awarded a citation by the national body in session at Norfolk, in recognition of his efforts in the representation of the association in Washington throughout the fight for payment of adjusted compensation certificates.

The new national commander for the Twenty-ninth Division Association is Col. Charles B. Borland, chief of police and director of public safety of Norfolk. Howard J. Lepper, New Jersey, was elected for the seventh consecutive time as national adjutant. William H. Fitchett, one of the members of the 1936 reunion committee, was elected finance officer.

Other national officers for 1937 are Charles Tucker, sergeant at arms; Peter Stone, judge advocate; John A. Cutchins, historian; Michael J. Corr, chaplain. Commanders for State delegations, for Virginia, Thomas Daniel Boone; for Maryland, Charles J. Peters; for New Jersey, George Ziegler; at large, R. A. Wadsworth, of North Carolina.

Executive committeemen for the District of Columbia selected were J. Fred Chase, Edwin E. McGowan and Russell P. Freeman. The annual election meeting of Washington Post will be set shortly and will be around the birthday date of the post, November 22.

Royal Arch Masons.

Woodridge Chapter, No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, will have as their guests the officers and members of Mount Pleasant Chapter, No. 13, Tuesday at 7:30 p. m.

The past and most excellent master degrees will be conferred—the latter degree to be conferred by the officers of Mount Pleasant Chapter. The meeting will be held in the Temple at Rhode Island and Mills avenues northeast.

Balmy Days of Late October and Early November Are Busy Times for the Good Gardener

Planting of Roses, Shrubs, Trees Should Be Done Now

Autumn Presents Opportunity to Select Nursery Specimens in Full Autumn Colors; Hardy Plants Can Be Potted.

By Crowell Baynes.

Late October and early November are a busy time for the good gardener whenever weather permits. Tulip planting time is here, and also the best planting time for most roses. There are the tender bulbs to get out of the ground, and bulbs and plants to be made ready for winter bloom in the house. This next week, too, is the time to start paper white narcissus to come into bloom at Christmas.

One garden opportunity this week is a pleasure. If you are planning fall plantings of trees or shrubs, make it a point to visit your nurseryman and select the specimens. Now when the foliage is showing autumn color is a first class time to make sure of getting it to please you. The maples, oaks and dogwoods, and other varieties that color well in fall differ just enough among trees of the same species to make it well worthwhile picking out individual specimens that show fine color in the nursery row.

Rose planting and the planting of trees and shrubs can get under way as soon as the soil can be prepared. It is already late for the best results with most of the evergreens, but the deciduous trees and shrubs move well at any time from now until growth starts in the spring.

Dormant Season.

This is the dormant season for this class of plants. As a practical matter it is not necessary to wait until the foliage has colored completely and the leaves have fallen from the limbs. Also as a practical matter it is far more comfortable to do this kind of work in mild Indian summer weather than to try to plant in early spring when the days are likely to be chilly and the soil cold and sticky. Only a few of the trees and shrubs that have fleshy roots—the magnolias are the most important group—are better left for spring planting.

Many of the hardy garden plants can be potted at this time for winter bloom—moss pink, the smaller bell flowers, coral bells, hardy primulas, Christmas rose, lily of the valley and practically all of the spring flowering bulbs. But these do not come into the house before frost as the tender plants must. These hardy garden plants need a good thorough freezing to put them in condition for bloom.

Pot them now when the work is convenient and while they can extend their roots before the ground freezes. After they have been well chilled in the pots they can be moved to a sheltered porch or an inclosed but unheated sunroom, and finally moved into the house in January or February.

Falling Leaves Nuisance.

Falling leaves are a nuisance on the lawn and they should be raked before mowing. The smoke from bonfires delights the children, but every bonfire is a sure sign of a gardener who is wasting valuable material. Leaves are invaluable as winter mulch material, for immediate spading into the soil and for composting.

It is not necessary to have a big compost pile, though that is desirable. Even a gardener with tiny space can dig a pit in a bed where annuals have been growing and can then tramp in the leaves add a composting mixture such as Adco, moisten the pile well and leave the mass to rot until spring when it will make rich top dressing for beds, lawns or borders. Then the earth from the pit can be shoveled back for replanting.

One of the profitable uses for leaves is as mulch for shrubs. It is nature's way of returning to the soil the elements the plants draw from the earth to nourish the plant and form the leaves. In the woods this is the source of a good share of the fertility on which the trees and shrubs depend for vigorous new growth. It is even more desirable for the trees and shrubs that we grow in unnatural surroundings.

Labeling Plants In Garden 'Pays'

Before the garden goes into winter quarters it pays to go over it carefully and stake the plants for identification in spring. Good substantial labels are desirable, but plain stakes, even without names attached are worth while. It is a good plan to set each stake at a uniform distance—say 3 inches—and in a uniform direction—north, for example—from the plant it is to mark. This is a guide in early spring work in the garden and a guard against thoughtless spading up of good plants. The stakes are also helpful in identifying plants that may need mulching for the winter.

When bulbs are planted in a cluster—as is usual with crocus, squills, camassias and grape hyacinths—place a single stake for the group and outline the planting with a circle of twigs stuck in the soil.

Cannas in summer and tulips in spring make a practical and colorful combination in formal beds or in borders. The heavy roots of cannas should be lifted before frost or immediately after, and the ground spaded fresh for tulip planting. Then, after the tulips bloom, the cannas can be replaced.

At the Chess Table

By Willard H. Mutchler.

The Jewish Community Center will open its chess season in scintillating fashion with a simultaneous exhibition by United States Champion Samuel Reshevsky. The event will mark the first appearance of Reshevsky in this city since acquiring the mantle of national leadership previously held by Frank Marshall for a quarter century. Back in 1922 he astounded the world as a "boy wonder" player and Washington became chess conscious after his exhibition at the Y. M. C. A. Again he exhibited at the Jewish Community Center two years ago, when his performance was pronounced one of the best ever witnessed here. Those who have never seen the champion will be amazed at the speed and accuracy of his play.

Reshevsky's recent exploits in the international arena have made him one of the players most feared by the elite group of masters of world championship caliber. He comes to Washington fresh from his exploits at Nottingham where, bracketed with Reuben Fine and World Champion Dr. Max Euwe, he finished half a point behind co-winners, J. R Capablanca and M. Botwinnik. Against M. Vidmar, who exhibited here a few weeks ago, Reshevsky perpetrated a brilliancy of the first magnitude. Readers of Chess, foremost English magazine, can attest that he earned more unstinted praise from its editors than any other entrant at Nottingham.

The date for his exhibition at the Center has been tentatively set for Saturday, November 7. A large crowd is expected to be on hand for the treat and those desirous of playing the master should send their reservation to the Center immediately, marked to the attention of I. S. Turover. The cost per board for encountering Reshevsky will be $1.50. Washington fandom owes it to the champion to give him a welcome commensurate with his famed achievements. And let it be added that it will be a real accomplishment for any local player to defeat the visitor, even though he be playing many others simultaneously.

Capital City Tourneys.

Fall activities got under way at the Capital City Chess Club on October 17, when the initial round of the minor tournament was contested. The entry list was closed by Chess Director M. C. Stark, after 14 had signed up, and additional hopefuls were shunted into the championship fray. Book prizes are to be awarded to the winners in each tourney. J. Alden, jr., Thomas Stevenson, H. S. Gray, C. W. Stark and E. M. Weeks, each with a lone victory, are now tied for the lead. The summary of the first round is appended. E. L. Leckie and F. M. Bolton played their round 2 game in advance of schedule, and the former emerged victorious.

With District and Club Champion D. H. Mugridge, M. C. Stark, J. E. DuBois, E. M. Knapp, V. L. Eaton, Col. J. A. Kirby, E. L. Jeffers and G. F. Chase definitely entered in the championship tourney, which got under way last evening, an absorbing struggle for honors is assured. However, L. N. Ponce, member of Ecuador's legational staff, has applied for club membership, and is expected to participate also. Ponce won first prize in the Class I, Section C, tournament at the recent Nottingham, England, congress, and may prove a "dark horse" in the current event.

Mugridge and Stark will renew serious chess hostilities for the first time since their meeting in the sectional preliminaries of the A. F. C.'s congress at Philadelphia, and the outcome will be awaited with interest. Stark played his pet French Defense at Philadelphia, and Mugridge countered with Tschigorin's favorite Q—K2. Both played cautiously and a draw resulted. The score:

Local Problemists Score.

Those two local problem composers, Vincent L. Eaton and W. K. Wimsatt, jr., more or less steal the show with their offerings in the current issue of the Chess Review. Both have a three-mover in the original section, where a duo of Eaton's two-ers also appears. Another Eaton three-er, quoted from the Ajedrez Espanol Ty. of 1935, is also reproduced. Which reminds us that the Review is now obtainable locally only at Brentano's and Woodward & Lothrop's book shop.

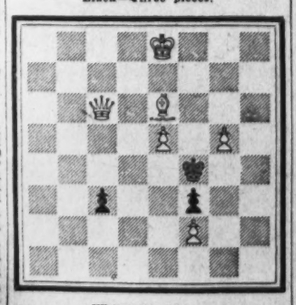
Solutions to Problems.

No. 695, three-mover by W. K. Wimsatt, jr., yields to B—B6. Another offering by the younger Wimsatt appears today, which he describes as "the kind your solvers can take with their Sunday morning breakfast and scan between sips without letting the coffee get cold."

Problem No. 696.

By W. K. Wimsatt, Jr., Washington, D. C. Composed for The Post.

K on KB5, Ps on KB6 and QB6. Black—Three pieces.



White—Six pieces.

K on K8, Q on QB6, B on K6, Ps on KKt5, KB2 and K5.

White to play and mate in three moves.

Norfolk Master Points Championships Ideal Chance For Washington Players to Test Partnership Games

Contract Bridge Offered Here For First Time At Wilson High.

By Marian H. Barre.

There are numerous stories about players who had never played together before they entered an important tournament, and won the major trophy. Of course, this has happened, but not very often. Most championships are won by thoroughly-experienced partnerships. In consequence, there is a great deal of practice going out in Washington these last weeks before the Bridge League Tournament. Some local players intend to further polish up their game by a "dress rehearsal" before the big event. This will be staged at the Norfolk, Va., Master Points Championships, scheduled for Monday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week, November 2, 4 and 5.

In the following week, teams-of-four might warm up, as the team match is scheduled for the tenth and eleventh, immeditately before the Washington dates. As Norfolk is an American Bridge League event, the same conditions of play will be found in both tournaments and this makes the former an ideal testing match.

A fair Capital representation at Norfolk will increase the Virginia attendance here, as reciprocity works in bridge as in trade.

There has been a rumor that five national master points were to be awarded to each member of the winning team in the Washington Tournament team event. According to the latest advice from the American Bridge League, four points is to be the maximum, with a two-point award for the runners-up, as was announced in this column some weeks ago.

For the first time in this city a class of contract bridge instruction will be offered to high school students. Mrs. Mirabel Lindsay will be in charge in the Woodrow Wilson High School, every Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock. Though many schools throughout the country give full credits for contract courses, at Wilson it will remain an "extra-curricular activity."

Of the 20 teams competing in the Federal Bridge League Tuesday evening series the team from the office of Supervising Architects has maintained a steady lead. It is captained by H. K. Chatman. In second place is the "Execs" team, that distinguished itself in the Federal games last season. There is a difference of three boards between these two teams.

The Federal League games are played in three sections, with Section 1 the honor position. The teams are graded by their current percentages. Thus a team that made the first section, after a period of bad luck, might find itself in section 3.

The Tuesday evening games are run for Federal employes and their families. The league also conducts a pair game on Thursday evenings that is open to the public. Paul Golden is the director. The meeting place is 2400 Sixteenth street.

"Double-action" playing cards may be expected to add a jazz note to all card games. In these decks, each card has a diagonal parting line that gives it two values. For instance, the five-spot of diamonds is one-half of one card; turning it upside down, it becomes the ace of spades. The diagonal line divides the card into two triangles, the first of which is of ordinary white cardboard with the diamond symbol, with a five above it, in the upper left-hand corner. The two upper "diamonds" appear on the card, the central one is cut in half. Reversing the card, the second triangle is colored blue, with a capital A, and the spade symbol in the upper corner; half of the central symbol appears on the blue ground. Thus every player must hold two hands, a blue hand and a white hand. If he isn't lucky with one, he can go into reverse and try the other; the decks are arranged with a tendency for low cards of one color to be high cards in the other.

This innovation is supposed to add pep and new excitement to every type of card game. Could anyone doubt the added excitement?

There has been an annoying delay in the delivery of the fractional city point coupons for the U. S. B. A. duplicate game run Saturday evening at Alban Towers. The points are definitely promised for next Saturday evening and will be awarded to the winners in that game. As they are retroactive, winners during the past weeks will receive belated points for all wins made since the first game of the current season.

For the past months Arch Kepner's familiar presence has been missing around the Vanderbilt Club. He reappeared last week, with a surprising story of his adventures—running a duplicate game in Tyson, Ariz., for the Indians! The braves play the Culbertson system, and they count their honor tricks as carefully as their forebears counted scalps.

It was "Hail" and "Fairwell" for Mr. Kepner and Mr. and Mrs. Cheeks, who left for Toronto to attend a duplicate tournament at the Toronto Whist Club. The Cheeks were to defend the open pair championship that they won last season.

Most members of the Washington Bridge League are unfamiliar with the service rendered by the committee on ethics in that organization. This committee has a secret personnel, pledged to silence on all matters in which it adjudicates. If any member of the league is in doubt on a point of ethics he may obtain the advice of the committee by communicating with the president of the league, who in turn will notify the chairman of the committee. Also, if a member harbors doubt about the ethical play of any other league member, the proper course is to lay the matter before the committee. Many players hesitate to take such action because it smacks of tale-bearing; actually, it is more charitable than an unsettled suspicion. Washington players have a reputation for high principles; the committee will aid them to keep it unsullied.

For the next months, the duplicate games at the Fairfax will be held in apartment 410 instead of in the Lord Fairfax room, as heretofore. A large wing is being added to the hotel and the game room is out of commission while the work is going on.

The late Louis H. Watson was one of the finest bridge analysts the game has ever produced; he also was a player of renown, and a lucid and forceful writer. Any bridge theory put forth by Mr. Watson deserved careful consideration; he was not a faddist, and his enthusiasms were always balanced by judgment. In view of Mr. Watson's reputation, the about-to-be-introduced "Bissell System" is not to be disregarded. Its author, Harold W. Bissell, a New York lawyer, submitted a tentative manuscript on his bidding theories to Mr. Watson about a year before the latter's death. Mr. Watson was skeptical at first, but he later induced Edward Hymes to join him in an extended trial. The testing went on for another year, with the result that Watson decided to identify himself with the system. His untimely death delayed publication of the manuscript. Mr. Bissell's theories are now ready to be given to the public and, with Watson's sponsoring behind them, they deserve serious attention from thoughtful players, even though the players are rather fed up on systems.

If you held this hand, would you have the courage to enter the bidding at the five-level, after consistent passing by partner?

This hand was played at a local duplicate game last week: it was the South hand, both sides vulnerable. West dealt, and bid 1 heart, North passed, East made a jump takeout of 2 spades, and the clubholder passed. Now West rebid his heart suit, North passed again, and East raised to hearts. With a certain game for East-West, the player holding this hand decided to sacrifice by bidding 5 clubs. She expected an immediate double; instead, West bid 5 hearts. North surprised the table by bidding 6 clubs, which East doubled. It was a bad decision for his side. South's valor was rewarded, the contract was set by only two tricks, 500 points when their hands had a small slam, vulnerable.

With all four hands in sight the bidding is obvious; hence, the unfailing wisdom of the kibitzers.

Contract Bridge

Winning a Trick Twice.

If you asked the average bridge player "What is the worst mistake you can make at bridge?" he would probably reply "To trump your partner's ace." It must be admitted that it is rarely a good play—but it can be. It may be vital to get the lead at just that time.

Today's hand is not quite so spectacular but illustrates a similar situation which is much more common. East could see that his partner's opening lead would probably win the trick, yet he should have overtaken.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 club	Pass	1 spade	2 hearts
Pass	Pass	4 spades	Pass
Pass	Pass

South knew when he bid four spades that his King of hearts was almost certainly worthless. But with an almost solid seven-card major suit and an honor in his partner's suit, he was confident he would have a fair play for the game.

West opened the Queen of diamonds and declarer studied the dummy for a second or two. The lead marked East with the King of diamonds. To win with dummy's ace and take the spade finesse would almost surely lose. For West was a very fine player and if he held the King of spades (as was most probable) he would lead a low diamond to force East to win the second round of that suit with the King. The marked heart return would then defeat the contract.

But East was not a good player. So South played a small diamond at the first trick, hoping that East would not think of overtaking with his King. East did not overtake! A diamond continuation was taken by dummy's ace, and since East could never thereafter gain the lead, South was able to draw trumps to obtain discards on the clubs without danger of a heart lead through the King.

Had East overtaken the Queen of diamonds with his King, a heart return would have made it easy to defeat the contract.

First Auction Conducted By Air Mail Stamp Fans

24 Lots Go Under Hammer at Good Prices; Society to Join With Collectors Club to Mark Nation-wide Celebration Nov. 16-21.

The first of a series of monthly auction sales was held at a well attended meeting of Washington Air Mail Society at its headquarters in Hotel Lafayette Monday evening, President Louis J. Heath presided.

There were 24 lots disposed of at fair prices, each item being air mail stamps or covers. E. W. Beitzell, in charge of auction material, asked for more lots for the next sale predicting success of this first venture assures the society of many choice bargains in air mail, first flights and covers. J. H. Jenkins was auctioneer.

A committee consisting of E. W. Beitzell and Martin J. Norris was named to arrange for a public auction sale early in 1937 given by J. H. Jenkins. Details for this event will be announced later.

In connection with National Philatelic Week, from November 16 to 21, the president announced that the society will participate with the Collectors Club and urged all members to attend the banquet at the Hamilton Hotel, Saturday evening, November 21.

New Issues Discussed.

Heath gave an interesting account of new air mail stamps issued by Nicaragua, Panama, Guatemala, Italy and colonies and Mexico. He also said that there has been a noticeable advance in all of the Brazilian semi-officials and the Zeppelins.

Claude W. Parker reported on a recent trip to Mexico and the Pacific Coast and enumerated several interesting finds. He also displayed four photographs of the China Clipper he took just prior to the ship taking off on one of its summer trips.

Short talks upon current events in air mails were made by Maurice S. Petty, Ralph Cole, Miss Alice B. of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., at the Thomson School on Tuesday evening. President F. A. Bickert presided.

Dorsch illustrated his discussion with several frames of genuine Japanese stamps and one frame of counterfeits and by blackboard sketches pointed out the good from the bogus stamps. Many collectors asked questions bearing on stamps in their collections.

The exhibition consisted of several frames of the Netherland stamps from the collection of C. H. Just. It represented an excellent layout of stamps and was very complete

Several applications for membership were received. Bickert called attention to the program being prepared for National Philatelic week, November 16 to 21, as well as the exhibition at the National Museum, December 1 to 15. He also spoke of the visit to the Richmond Stamp Club. Many new counterfeits were added to the club's collection. The sales books of Alfred G. Galloway are ready for distribution and all members were urged to prepare at least ten books at once for the club circuit.

An auction followed the business session, J. B. Ewell officiating. Many good lots of both United States and foreign stamps were sold.

Next Tuesday evening the members' exhibition of Belgium stamps will be the feature, with Bickert exhibiting his stamps of Wurtemberg.

Washington Philatelic Society.

Valdemar Weiergang gave an interesting talk on his experiences in Europe during the past summer at the meeting of the Washington Philatelic Society at the Carlton on Wednesday. Dr. Ellis Haworth presided.

Weiergang spent some weeks in Denmark and related in detail the workings of the philatelic agency of that country. His experiences in Germany proved of unusual interest. German stamp dealers are reluctant to sell foreign stamps to anyone and the government has clamped down severe restrictions on the sale and importation of stamps into Germany.

The dealers in Germany want to sell German stamps in preference to all others. When a sale is made to a customer a record has to be sent to the police and all sales are closely investigated due to the close scrutiny the government accords its money.

Many other episodes were told by the speaker of his purchases of stamps and he displayed many items of unusual interest that he had secured during his trip.

At the quartely business meeting the resolution adopted several years ago that the society refrain from suggesting to the Postoffice Department any action for or against the issuance of any postage stamp was rescinded. The society also voted to continue sending monthly, with club bulletins, the sales list of the Philatelic Agency.

On Wednesday the Jenkins auction sale will be held, Benjamin S. Bell officiating as auctioneer. This sale consists of 466 lots of both United States and foreign stamps and is expected to bring out a large gathering. All collectors are cordially invited to be guests of the society at this time.

Visit Richmond.

Members of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., visited the Richmond Stamp Club at Richmond, Va., on October 15. President F. A. Bickert headed the delegation, those attending being Mrs. Henry C. Workman, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Rice, Mrs. Grace L. MacKnight, A. H. Whitney, Miss Williamson, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Cook, M. and Mrs. J. L. Howard, J. M. Brown, J. N. Nappen, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Smith and W. M. Stuart. Short addresses were made by Messrs. Bickert, Whitney, Marsh, Nappen, Rice and Stuart.

The Society of Philatelic Americans was stressed by the speakers and it is expected a branch will be organized in Richmond. Refreshments were served.

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

Philately unquestionably produces an increase in the number of stamp collectors annually.

The beginner does not always retain his first enthusiasm, although his interest usually keeps him in line. The continual excessive issue of both United States and foreign stamps is greatly deplored by many philatelists.

Speculation in new issues of postage stamps is nothing new and is not considered a valid reason to discontinue or refrain from stamp collecting. As long as stamps, like other commodities, are subject to the law of supply and demand there will be price quotations with variations. The cry of speculation will always be heard, but as for being a disastrous and sure death to philately the cry is simply a passing event.

Publicity stressing speculation as an evil is always with us. The collector buys at his own price and seldom if ever a philatelist turns from his hobby just because of speculation. The person collecting stamps for the purpose of accumulating many volumes, later to be sold at a premium, realizes only disappointment in such sales. The large and valuable collections placed on the market were never intended as investments. Naturally rare stamps command high prices.

It would be wise to talk less about speculation, investment and high prices. Continual agitation wholly critical, never constructive, spells only harm and is inexcusable. If stamps were not collected for the pleasure this hobby gives, the number of collectors would not be numbered by the millions.

Stamp collecting means more than mere buying to fill spaces in albums. It means more than purchasing stamps for the purpose of selling at a profit. The collector knows the difference between speculation, investment and accumulation as applied to philatelists and may be depended upon to separate the chaff from the wheat.

Cille, Miss Helen E. Voorhees, M. J. Norris, J. H. Jenkins, E. W. Beitzell, Miss Lucille Harris and Mrs. Madge Harkness. The guests present were Mrs. Mabel L. Wilson, Mrs. Willa C. Rice, George M. Byrd and Sidney Rapke, who also made brief talks.

The society is adding new members and has in preparation an interesting program for the season, including auction sales, exhibition and several addresses of importance.

Stage and Screen Continue to Conspire to Make Current Season Memorable

GLADYS GEORGE,
who achieves stardom in her first talking picture by the excellence of her portrayal of the title role in Paramount's picturization of Barry Benefield's best-selling novel, "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie." Miss George, a recent visitor to Washington, has had a long stage experience and a considerable career on the screen back in the old silent days, when she was featured with many of the foremost stars of the time. She now is on the way to a distinguished future in the so-called "talkies"—if she wants it. On the Earle screen.

Henry Hull Returns to Town To Impersonate the Poet, Poe

Assumes the Role of the Author of 'The Raven' in 'Plumes in the Dust,' by Sophie Treadwell; the Films Are in Ascendant.

By Nelson B. Bell.

THIS department, on an earlier Sabbath, already has celebrated the return of Arthur Hopkins to the ranks of Broadway's active producers. It is rather in the nature of an event.

Mr. Hopkins during the heyday of his productional activities betrayed a surprising insight into the intricacies of his profession as well as into the vagaries of public taste.

The list of his successful plays spanned a wide field of interest and endeavor—"Burlesque" to John Barrymore's "Hamlet;" "What Price Glory" to "Richard III" and "The Jest." From this catholicity of content there emerged a long line of hits and precious few failures, although Mr. Hopkins, like every other busy practitioner of the theater, has had his downs as well as his more habitual ups.

The point is that with such a fine record of judgment and achievement behind him, every augury forecasts that the medium of his return to the Broadway hurly-burly must be a drama of pith and substance, worthy of his attention and the services of a cast that includes several names of importance to the enduring eminence of the traditional theater.

What "Plumes in the Dust" may disclose when it opens in the National Theater tomorrow night, prior to its New York engagement, remains to be seen, but one surmises that Sophie Treadwell has contrived a play from the life of Edgar Allan Poe which will pique the interest of every discriminating amusement seeker, as well as the student who perceives in the career of the great American poet dramatic material of peculiarly colorful pattern.

It is with the more immediately tangible aspects of the premiere, however, that we should perhaps be concerned.

• • • •

GRANTING that Mr. Hopkins knows his way around in the precincts of the drama of flesh and blood—which seems a coldly clinical way of putting it—and conceding that Sophie Treadwell has composed a piece of dramatic literature that will prove a welcome addition to the theater's library of enduring works, what of the cast instrusted with the interpretation of the play?

One need go no farther than the star to be assured of a thoughtful and impressive performance of the role of Poe, which, since this is a biographical drama, must be the motivating character in the play. Poe will be played by that eminent character actor, Henry Hull.

Mr. Hull, it seems to me, never has been appreciated quite to the degree that his achievements on the stage have justified. I doubt if there are many memories among the present generation of playgoers that will recall Mr. Hull very much farther back than "The Man Who Came Back," although his career, I believe, began about 1911.

But taking "The Man Who Came Back" as a starting point, Mr. Hull since has been seen in "The Cat and The Canary," "39 East," "In Love With Love," "Lulu Belle," "Grand Hotel," "Michael and Mary," "The Ivory Door" and numerous other plays. From this catalogue of his successful appearances in recent years may be gathered something of the versatility of the man. There seems to be nothing that Henry Hull can not do in the field of character delineation. He can be young or he can be old; he can be somber or he can be gay; he can be all things to all roles.

• • • •

MR. HULL'S most recent appearances in Washington were dedicated, no longer ago than last season, to two appearances at the National Theater in Jack Kirkland's lugubriously realistic dramatization of Erskine Caldwell's novel of "Tobacco Road," a play that was stigmatized in many quarters for the frankness of its exposition of unbelievable conditions in the deep South. In many minds something of the squalor, the licentiousness and the grim tragedy of "Tobacco Road" still clings to Mr. Hull. But he is not like that at all.

Mr. Hull is an amiable, educated and richly gifted gentleman whose natural inclinations and endowments equip him to impersonate the sensitive and aesthetic Poe with less travail than he probably experienced in the creation of the degenerate Jeeter Lester.

There appears in this section of The Post today a photographic character study of Mr. Hull in the role of Edgar Allan Poe that gives a strikingly vivid impression of how perfectly he has been able to assume the appearance of the poet whose life was so shot through with disappointment, frustration and tragedy.

This Hull portrayal is a very far cry indeed from the tatterdemalion renegade of the backwoods country of Georgia.

If Miss Treadwell has written a play commensurate with Mr. Hull's Dialogue Directors Coach Actors and Save Money for the Studios.

There is a new profession opening up in Hollywood.

It's dialogue directing.

The title is really a misnomer—we should be called "rehearsal directors" because our job is to see that players in the motion picture to which we are assigned know their lines and deliver them properly. This takes a load off the shoulders of the director, shortens the periods of lost time between the various scenes and reduces the number of "takes" of each scene.

There have been dialogue directors ever since talking pictures came into being. But the dialogue director of 1928 was usually a former stage director who could never realize that he wasn't boss and that he had to answer to the director. They soon passed out of pictures taking their high salaries and their egotism with them.

The dialogue director of today is, in general, a young and—I hope—unassuming man with a good education and theatrical background who knows his job and his relation to others working in motion pictures.

His greatest value is to train the younger players—the up and coming generation which, at Paramount, includes Robert Cummings, Larry Crabbe, Eleanore Whitney, Olympe Bradna, Frances Farmer, Shirley Ross, Marsha Hunt, John Howard and Dorothy Lamour.

We find that these younger players do not time their speeches properly. They try to act, but fail to stop, always, to think of the character they are portraying. An actor must imagine a character and play that character definitely, instead of being one person in one scene and another person in another.

Hollywood, to illustrate this, used to chuckle at Emil Jannings because when he started playing a role in a picture he actually became that man. If, for instance, he was to play an old, broken-down man; he was an old, broken-down man, night and day, for the full course of the picture. His feet dragged and his shoulders bent. He had a vacant stare in his eyes. Perhaps he went a little too far—but he did understand his characters and gave some of the finest portrayals in the history of motion pictures.

So, our job is to make the young players act like human beings on the screen and to make them not only learn, but properly deliver their lines.

I have just finished "Rose Bowl." During the making of this production Larry Crabbe and Lydia Westman would be working in a scene on occasion. While they were waiting for the cameras to start I was busy with Tom Brown, Eleanore Whitney and Benny Baker, going over their lines with them, pointing these lines with proper emphasis after receiving instructions from the director, Charles Barton.

Now I'm busy with "One Man's Bonus." While Edward Everett Horton, who gets his lines in nothing flat and knows just how to read them, is working with Charlotte Wynters, a stage product who has been acting since she was 15 and has definite skill, or with J. M. Kerrigan, a veteran of theaters on two continents, I'm busy with the "pixilated sisters," Margaret Seddon and Margaret McWade.

They have long speeches, long scenes, long pieces of business and have to be letter perfect on every point. When Ray McCarey, the director, calls them before the cameras, they have everything well in hand.

Naturally, after so many rehearsals, they require fewer "takes" and, in the face of terrific production costs, this means a definite saving.

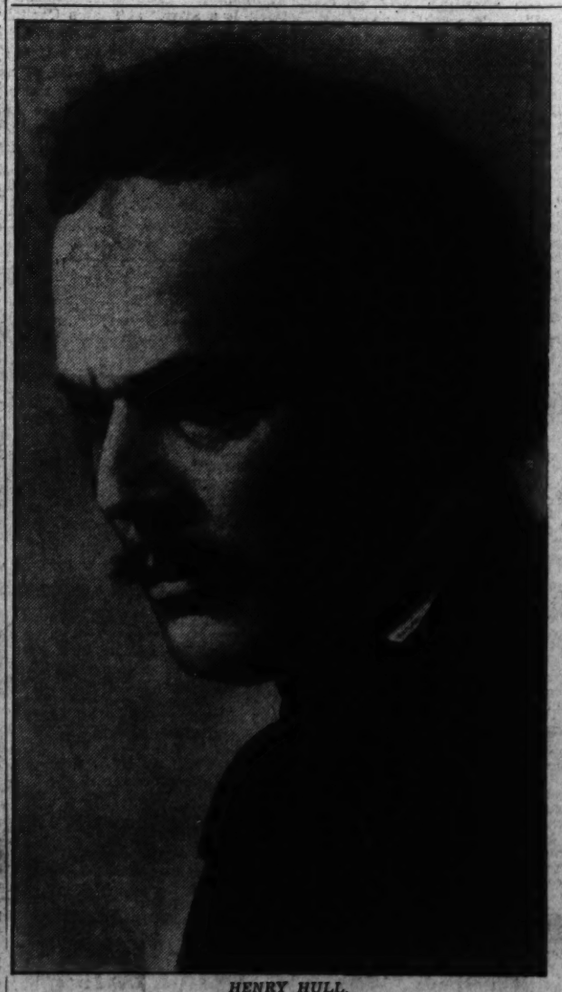
The background necessary for qualification for the job is one of the stage. I was raised in Indianapolis, Ind., the son of the chief dispatcher of the Illinois Central Railroad. Dad wanted me to be a lawyer.

By the time I reached high school I was appearing in school plays. At the University of Iowa, where I eventually studied law, I was again acting in amateur plays, managing and directing them.

One summer, just before my graduation from law school, the representative of a tent show asked me to go to work as an actor. I forgot all about law. I stayed with the tent show for a while, joined repertoire companies and traveling troupes, operated and managed little theaters, had a fine time.

Romance entered my life and I realized the need of a steady job. I came to Hollywood, began working around little theaters and, two years ago, Harold Hurley, Paramount producer, became interested in my work and gave me a job as dialogue director. I've been at Paramount for two years.

LUCY MANNHEIM AND GEORGE ARLISS,
the principal players in the Gaumont-British production of "East Meets West," now on the screen at the Warner Brothers' Metropolitan Theater. This subject takes Mr. Arliss back to the type of portrayal he did on both stage and screen in "The Green Goddess." The story is one of adventure and intrigue. The star at his best.



HENRY HULL,
one of the most distinguished actors of the American stage, who comes to the National Theater tomorrow night in Arthur Hopkins' production of "Plumes in the Dust," a new play based on the life of Edgar Allan Poe, by Sophie Treadwell. Tomorrow night's performance will mark the metropolitan premiere of the play.

RKO-Radio Production Head Blasts Precedent by Offer to Little Theaters

By Melrose Gower.

Hollywood, Oct. 24.

Urges That His Contract Players Be Used Free Between Pictures.

The slings and arrows of outraged drama editors have been these many years directed at Hollywood for its cheerful willingness to poach on the preserves of the stage. Discoveries of each Broadway season are invariably drafted, while fresh talent is diligently tracked down and captured in Little Theaters of the land. Through it all, picture executives have stood accused of head-hunting.

But this week S. J. Briskin, ranking production executive at RKO-Radio, did the unprecedented and reversed the procedure by inviting the stage to come in and hunt heads around his studio.

If this story begins to read as though it were a get-rich-quick advertisement, it is because Briskin offers to lend for two weeks any or all of the young players from the studio contract list to any Little Theater or stock company in America, whether its audience is 5,000 or 50. Not only that, but he offers to lend them free of charge.

Those available are Lucille Ball, ingenue and comedienne, who has just completed an important role in the Lily Pons picture.

Anita Colby, leading lady and one of the ladies-in-waiting to Katharine Hepburn in "Mary of Scotland."

Alan Curtis, leading man, who has appeared in many screen productions, including "Swing Time," "Winterset," "Don't Turn 'Em Loose," "Smartest Girl in Town," "Wanted: Jane Turner."

Owen Davis, jr., himself a devotee of the Little Theater, and screen leading man, whose pictures are in part, "Riddle of the Dangling Pearl," "His Majesty, Bunker Bean," "Special Investigator," "All Quiet on the Western Front."

Harry Jans, once a member of the well-known vaudeville team of Jans and Whalen, who has played the role of villain in "Smartest Girl in Town," "Don't Turn 'Em Loose," and many others.

Ray Mayer, character actor of "All Scarlet," "We Who Are About to Die," and more than a dozen others.

Judith Blake, ingenue, whose latest film is "Wanted: Jane Turner."

William Corson, stage player, recently acquired under an RKO contract and placed in "Riddle of the Dangling Pearl."

Diana Gibson, ingenue, seen in "Love Before Breakfast," and a half dozen other motion pictures.

Betty Grable, radio singer, comedienne, ingenue in more than a score of films, including "Follow the Fleet" and "Don't Turn 'Em Loose," her latest.

Paul Guilfoyle, an actor with stage experience, whose latest film is "Winterset."

Jane Hamilton, who has recently completed playing in "Wanted: Jane Turner" and with Katharine Hepburn in "A Woman Rebels."

Vinton Haworth, stage and radio actor of wide experience, whose first two films, "Without Orders" and "Night Waitress," have not yet been released.

Then there are Philip Huston, male lead of "The Big Game."

Maxine Jennings, stage and screen actress, whose latest film, with Anne Shirley, is "Make Way for a Lady." Miss Jennings' career includes a score of films.

Gordon Jones, former Little Theater actor, whose picture work includes half a dozen films and the leading male role in "Night Waitress."

Louise Latimer, leading lady, cast in many films, of which the latest is "Riddle of the Dangling Pearl."

Thelma Leeds, ingenue, recently acquired under an RKO contract.

Kay Marlow, leading lady, trained in Little Theaters of Texas and Iowa, most recently seen in "Dodsworth."

Philip McMahon, child actor and radio singer, whose first RKO picture, "Convention in Cuba," starts in November.

Barbara Pepper, studio starlet of a dozen films; latest, "Night Waitress."

Edward Price, once a Little Theater student in Los Angeles, now a screen actor seen in "Swing Time" and "Grand Jury." His latest film: "Smartest Girl in Town."

Patricia Wilder, ingenue, player in "Wanted: Jane Turner," "Walking On Air," and others; currently working in the Lily Pons picture.

These players and others that RKO acquires will be available to Little Theaters when they are free of screen work. The Little Theaters stretch their footlights from California to Maine with scarcely an interruption. RKO has some 4,000 theaters listed, and the list isn't complete yet, Briskin said.

In a message to these various theater groups, the executive explained that his contract actors were anticipating the opportunity to play on the stage, and that he and his associates hoped stage directors as they appear in the roles of Chivo and Braganza in "The Gay Desperado," the major feature of the bill now playing at the RKO-Keith's Theater. Martini, of course, is cast as a singer, whom Braganza likes so well that he kidnaps him. Carrillo is cast as the bandit who does the kidnaping. Perfect casting.

Bits of News and Items of Gossip of Late October Plays, Pictures and Personalities

New York Likes Play District Saw Last Season

'Swing Your Lady' Again Put on Boards, But in Revamped Form.

By Mark Barron.

New York, Oct. 24.—Convinced by the success of their "Sailor Beware" that New York likes rowdy farce, Kenyon Nicholson and Charles Robinson have called upon their talents again and given Broadway "Swing Your Lady!" a hilarious study of love among the wrestlers, which was tried out unsuccessfully in Washington last season. Less adept than their earlier piece, it is, nevertheless, a very funny show, and it is hard to imagine anybody not having a rollicking time at it.

It is all a bold lampoon, kidding an industry which, perhaps, is funny enough in itself, and gambling for laughs, successfully, on the premise that an illiterate wrestler tormented by love is a very droll spectacle.

"The Greek Herculies," with that spelling, is stranded with his business entourage in Joplin, Mo., at the impoverished end of a barnstorming tour. To earn a get-away fund, Doc Hatch, his manager, signs him to wrestle a lady blacksmith before a small-town American Legion post.

The lady has no better motive for her part in the brawl than a wish for a new bedroom suite, but even this hope is denied her when the Herculies decides no gentleman can apply hammerlocks and other brutalities to the woman he loves, for that is what it has come to. The frantic manager begs his "grunter" to reconsider, but he is adamant: One doesn't meet one's loved one in the ring of combat.

The wrestling match and the manager's reason are saved by the arrival of the lady blacksmith's earlier beau, expressing anger with his scattergun. A giant himself, the beau is persuaded to wrestle for the hand of his lady, risking his whiskers and his future happiness to the mercies of the love-torn Herculies. Their grudge match is a rollicky finish to this merry farce.

The play is rich with the sort of humors that kept "Sailor, Beware" prosperously alive for so long. It is true that there is no constricted niceness about some of the lines: they are openly and honestly vulgar and, as such, deserving of the quick laughter they win. There is a scene which approaches the classic when the manager's girl explains love's manifestations to the wrestler in the analogy of the flowers.

Singularly good acting helps this play immensely. Jack Alexander makes a splendid job of the dumb gladiator, and Joe Laurie, jr., exposes himself to permanent Hollywood employment by his slick portrait of the manager. Dennie Moore is the bawdy girl in the case, and to her falls the job of explaining love to Herculies; and it is easy to assure her no one could have done it with more finesse.

Norman Bel Geddes, who put an East Side street on the stage last season in "Dead End," has outscored that architectural job in "Iron Men." Here he shows us the naked skeleton of a skyscraper, and allows us to watch girders being fitted into place after they are delivered by an on-stage derrick. It is a vastly engrossing scenic job, and much more interesting to watch than the play—a work of Francis Gallagher detailing the dare-devil loyalties of these skyscraper workers.

The play is further distinguished by the performance of an actual steel worker in the central role. He is William Haade, plucked from a nearby girder by Bel Geddes. A paid-up member of his steel workers' local, a married father of two and happy in the Bronx, Haade comes to his first acting job to deliver a surprisingly competent performance. If it is his wish, he probably will work often at his new trade.

The play details the disintegration of a crack steel gang, vitiated by violent death, murder and madness—confusing and useful largely in serving as the excuse for Geddes' superb setting.

Pilot Given Name, Part in Picture

John Trent, formerly LaVerne Brown, transport pilot, who was beckoned right out of his cockpit and handed a contract by B. P. Schulberg, donned the grease paint recently and enacted his first role in "A Man and a Woman."

Trent appears with a cast which includes Edward Arnold, Francine Larrimore, George Bancroft.

ROBERT TAYLOR AND BARBARA STANWYCK, co-starred in "His Brother's Wife," the screen attraction now being shown at Loew's Columbia. The story is that of a young physician and scientist and an equally young gold-digger, who does a little spite work by marrying the brother of the man she loves. This is the best thing Miss Stanwyck recently has done.

Jimmie Fidler In Hollywood

I have often written about the charitable Assistance League, aid to destitute actors. Stars and socialites serve as waitresses, donating their salaries and tips to the cause. This noon a long-lashed, middle-aged dowager snagged my ear. "My dear," she hissed, "do you know there are politics here? For six months I have been waiting tables, but do you think I ever get to serve a movie star? All I get are tourists and old women."

Autograph hunters in their overzealousness have actually become a physical menace. At a preview last night, Joan Crawford turned her head suddenly and jabbed her cheek against a fountain pen being held aloft by a girl seeking a signature. Half an inch higher and the penpoint might have sunk in her eyeball. Only a few days ago Cary Grant was leaving the studio when a boy armed (the verb fits) with a pen raced for an autograph. The youngster tripped, and his fall caused the pen to spurt ink which turned Cary's ice-cream suit into a case of black measles.

At a recent cocktail party, Victor McLaglen was among the guests and during the course of events he was invited to pose in a picture with Little Billy, Hollywood midget. Looking "way up" at McLaglen, Billy piped, "You don't remember me ,do you?" "No, I don't," honestly replied Vic. "Well, I knew you when you were one of the Romano Brothers, doing living statues on the vaudeville stage," snapped Billy, "and boy, were you a lousy actor!"

George Brent joined me and in reminiscent mood told me of the time he nearly lost his eyesight. It happened early in his career, when the old style studio lights caused dozens of cases of "Klieg eyes" daily. Some of these cases were severe: Brent's was dangerously so. Hollywood physicians were positive he would go completely blind.

Convinced that he would lose his sight, George returned to New York and talked constantly with blind beggars on the metropolitan streets, seeking earnestly to learn their philosophy. One of these men suggested that the actor try silver nitrate treatments, which are excruciatingly painful and doubly dangerous. "But they might help you," the blind man told Brent.

George literally argued his physicians into using the nitrate—and he was cured. He returned to Hollywood and—but you know the rest. "I've always followed hunches," he told me today. "I sold an airplane, and a few days later it crashed. I once turned back passage on a ship, and it sank. The same hunch told me to try the blind man's suggestion.

Here is something I learned from a Warner "labor boss": Studio holidays are determined by the labor unions. If they declare a holiday the studios close, because in order to remain open they would have to pay all union labor double time that day.

Jigges, the movie chimpanzee (Gary Cooper brought him from Africa, but sold him because the monk occasionally goes berserk), recognizes only one master, a collie named Spanky. Months ago the dog and chimp mixed in battle and the dog won, and now Jiggs fears Spanky. On location, when the chimpanzee escapes from sets, the dog is sent for him and unfailingly brings him back. On "The Jungle Princess" set, the beast attacked, knocked to the ground and might have killed a workman, but a whistle brought Spanky, at which Jiggs sulked into instant submissiveness.

'Ethan Frome' Will Play the National Soon

Max Gordon Production Is Based on Popular Book by Edith Wharton.

Max Gordon will present Pauline Lord in Owen Davis' and Donald Davis' dramatization of Edith Wharton's novel, "Ethan Frome," with Earle Larimore featured as Ethan, at the National Theater for the week of November 2, with the regular matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

"Ethan Frome" is the story of a New England family's ruin. A nagging farm wife, who constantly imagines she is sick and uses what little money her husband has earned or borrowed to buy herself useless medicines and needless contraptions, brings to the home her cousin to do the work about the house. The cousin, a spirited and pleasant girl, is glad to have room and shelter.

The play unfolds naturally and gradually the growing love of Ethan for the handmaid. In the end both become sadly victimized by their mutual love.

In itself the play is ideally dramatic; its bleak beginning and terrifically ironic ending are so closely related that both the play and the novel achieve an emotional impact that literally stuns.

Edith Wharton, who has been a prolific writer of stories that lend their plots to dramatization, has to her credit, among others, "The Age of Innocence," "The Old Maid" and what is recognized as her most successful novel, "Ethan Frome."

Gayety.

Coming today to the Gayety Theater, starting with the regular matinee, is the "daily double" attraction of the season—Sunya "Smiles" Slayne, the blonde Ann Corio of burlesque, and the talented Miss Vilma Joszy. The comedy department will be taken care of by Bates and Hunt and Benny "Wop" Moore.

The Smithy Stands.

AL SMITH drove by Fifth avenue and Forty-seventh street the other day, still wearing a Brown Derby. He spied Officer No. 7653, and, desiring to show that he's still democratic, stopped his Packard to chat with the cop. This certainly was a democratic gesture to all—except the long line of honking traffic which he thereby held up for four minutes . . . Goodman Ace calls Milton Berle America's greatest ad lift comedian . . . Arthur William Row, WPA actor in "Injunction Granted," has worked for the Federal Theater for more than a year. One of his best friends wrote a new play, including a special part for Row. The producer, however, refused to hire him . . . The play, "Lend Me Your Ears," opened—and flopped in less than a week. Row will continue with "Injunction Granted" at least for the next six months.

The Alexander Film Co. of Colorado Springs, which produced "Dogs, Monkeys and Men"—the movie short which raps WPA—can't get exhibitors here to play it, despite the $1 it offers for a two-day showing . . . The State of New Jersey is planning to put on its own World Fair at the same time New York does—to get the overflow attendance . . . Before they left for the Coast, Dick Powell and Joan Blondell confided that they're returning in the spring, to do a play. . . . Tubby Gerin, the song-plugger, was tendered a testimonial dinner by Russ Morgan Wednesday. Gerin was stuck with the bill for $58, and in addition—while he was making his speech of acknowledgment—got a hot-foot!

Soc. Prev. Cruelty to Children: Dudley Murphy, the Hollywood producer, named his daughter Pocahontas. Pocahontas Murphy! . . . Newspaper Guild: The Brooklyn Times-Union has moved its classified ad department over to the Brooklyn Eagle as another gradual step in the merger. Equity: Jimmy Savo, who was fired from "White Horse Inn" before the opening, but what gets paid nevertheless, got a raise this week—from the $550 he was drawing each week to $850. . . . Warner Brothers: Benny Rubin, who conducts an amateur program in his efforts to return to the screen, lost a third member of his radio cast—to the movies. . . . Eleanor Powell: Critics are saying that you "Born to Dance" is even better than "Broadway Melody." Jack McGowan, who wrote the latter picture, was fired by M.G.M. immediately. Then, when the reviews appeared, M.G.M. wanted him back—and had to rent him from Fox Films, which had signed him in the meantime. That contract has expired and McGowan never worked for Fox.

John Nance Garner: When you were in "21," and ordered "Bourbon—with creek water," you didn't know it . . . but the creek water you got—and liked so much—was from a West Fifty-second street creek, if there is any . . . And the betting commissioners heard that when you were shown a list of election bets made on Roosevelt, your sole comment was "I think they have a chance" . . . WPA: The Stork Club tendered its much heralded birthday party to Harry Rosenthal's baby yesterday. All the offspring of noted Broadwayites attended. The only kids missing were Sherman Billingsley's, who would not bring 'em to his own club, because he says it's too daffy! . . . Three hours later, the guest of honor, Harry Rosenthal, lost his job when his band walked out at Le-Mirage!

LESLIE HOWARD is rehearsing his "Hamlet" troupe at the Winter Garden. Yesterday he summoned his erudite cast, and began: "Knock, knock." They responded: "Who's thar?" Howard informed: "Ophelia" . . . "Ophelia who?" . . . The distinguished actor-producer returned, in his very best Shakespearian, "Ophelia gonna be lousy in 'Hemlet'" . . . A swanky East Side club, newly reopened, didn't have a single customer last night. The elegant place already is for sale . . . At the premiere of "Iron Men," a man in the orchestra shouted: "Author, author!" when the second-act curtain descended, although there was still a third act to come. He explained it: "I've got to catch a train!" . . . Jimmy Cannon and Howard Lindsey aren't speaking now. Cannon practically had sold an article about Lindsey to Collier's entitled "The Man Who Wouldn't Go to Hollywood." The day before it was accepted—Lindsey went to Hollywood.

RKO Executive Kills Precedent

would not hesitate to request their services.

From indications today, however, theater groups will not be hesitant. The executive said enthusiastic responses are arriving already.

Announcement of the Briskin plan stirred surprise in Hollywood, where many observers saw in it the first attempt for harmony between screen and stage. The studio's attitude is that Little Theaters will have the opportunity to bolster their productions with film names, and screen players themselves will acquire poise and dramatic technique by appearing before an audience.

The offer is the outcome of an experiment Briskin carried out on the RKO lot. He maintains the RKO Little Theater, conducted by Lela Rogers, who developed her daughter Ginger into one of the screen's first stars.

Mrs. Rogers selects her casts from the studio contract list and produces dramas while the players are resting between pictures, which is the same method that is now open to all Little Theaters. Briskin said the plan has disclosed the potentialities of actors who had been confined to one type of role.

The RKO production chief is himself an advocate of stage training. He was perhaps persuaded to the plan by the success last season of one of his contract players at the Lakewood Theater in Skowhegan, Me. In three weeks of playing there Owen Davis, jr., broke all existing box office records for the theater's 30 years of history.

HAVING long been an advocate of the coalition of Washington's resident acting forces into a single, concentrated and professionally directed group of civic players, worthy to represent the National Capital as a source of creative effort and artistic achievement in the theater, it is gratifying to note with what high success the newly organized Washington Civic Theater has blazed the way to some such ultimate eventuation.

Representing the amalgamation of two of Washington's most representative acting companies, the Washington Civic Theater has rather completely justified the protestations of this department against a continuation of the scattered efforts that have been made—and are still being made—by myriad individual groups of amateurs who have made no progress through the years as far as any permanent resources are concerned. They aim at nothing beyond the given play and the fun they will have in putting it on.

The Washington Civic Theater goes a little deeper than that. It is a substantial organization that has in the back of its collective mind, no doubt, the history of the New York Theater Guild, which came up from Greenwich Village in New York as a band of amateurs to go on to the heights as perhaps the foremost and most firmly grounded financially of the contemporary theater's producing companies.

The financial structure of the Civic Theater is being looked to by officials who know finances; the direction of the productional activities is in the hands of a professonal director who knows what he wants and how to get it; the promotion is under the supervision of experienced publicists and in every department ability, skill and enthusiasm mark the conduct of the group's affairs.

The concrete results of this thoughtful and well considered modus operandi are discernible in the superior quality of the Civic Theater's first production—Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra," which ended a four-day run in Wardman Park Theater last night, five performances, including Saturday's matinee, having been given to large and enthusiastic audiences.

"Caesar and Cleopatra" is not an easy or a simple task for any group of players to essay, but it was done at Wardman with a completeness, a spontaneity and an air of professionalism that should have had the effect of awakening Washington to the fact that at last it has a resident company of players who have it in their power to place the National Capital in the forefront of those cultural centers that contribute something of genuine artistic worth to the perpetuation of the traditions that form the distinguished background of the theater of living drama.

It is worth supporting and supporting handsomely.

THE same may be said of more than one of the celluloid entertainments on sale at the downtown, first-run box-offices this week.

Having devoted large areas of type to the matter in the week's daily columns, it seems hardly necessary now to reiterate that in "The Gay Desperado," at RKO-Keith's; in "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie," at the Earle; "The Big Broadcast of 1937," at the Palace, and "The Devil Is a Sissy," at Loew's Capitol, Washington, has spread before it one of the most fruitful weeks of the year in the matter of diversified and superlatively worthwhile screen entertainment.

There is diversity in the list of current attractions and an unusually high quality of merit. Any marquee one might pause under would be a safe place to turn in to see a picture.

Since any picture is a "first-run" until one has seen it, there are other interesting things to be sought out in others of the picture houses in the downtown sector.

There they are. What are you going to do about it? To buy a ticket would be the smart thing.

'Outfoxes' Father.

June Wilkins' father is assistant casting director at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Without her father's knowledge, she made a screen test and now has a role with Greta Garbo in "Camille."

Lowe Detective.

Edmund Lowe, the Philo Vance of "The Garden Murder Case," will play the role of a film star who specializes in detective parts in M-G-M's picture, tentatively titled "The White Dragon."

FREDDIE BARTHOLOMEW, MICKEY ROONEY AND JACKIE COOPER, who play the pivotal roles in "The Devil Is a Sissy," the film play now featuring the screen bill at Loew's Capitol. These three young fellows turn in performances that mark them as the foremost juvenile actors in Hollywood. The story of the picture is one that hinges on the behavior of these three. Before they get through, they have occasioned no end of laughter and have choked up the throat with a quality of emotional appeal that few adult actors could command.

Socialites Find Going Hard in Attempts to Storm Ramparts of Success in Movie Capital

Debs Refuse To Fit Selves For Careers

Hepburn and Sullavan Outstanding Among Few Successes.

Others Trained Hard to Make Good on Silver Screen.

By Paul Harrison.

Hollywood.

There's a distinct trace of blue in the Hollywood bloodstream these days. Society seems to have decided that it's smart to be in the cinema.

From time to time quite a number of socialites, almost all of them women, have traipsed right up to the front gates of the studios, rapped imperatively and announced that they would be willing to consider a job of acting if the remuneration were adequate—say, a thousand a week.

Some other orchid-and-ermine gals have displayed a good deal more subtlety by leasing 18-room cottages in Coldwater Canyon, staffing them with stooges, stocking them with potables and pate de fois gras, and giving parties. If one gives enough big parties in Hollywood one can meet not only the best people, but the right people (there's a difference). If one bides one's time, one can be sure to find Mr. Blatherstein in pleasant mood for some such confidence as this:

Few Love Stage.

"Oh, Mr. Blatherstein—or may I call you Henry?—surely you can find some nice part in your great big studio for a girl who, ever since she was the sensational star of the dramatic club at Miss Witherspoon's School, has been eating her heart out to become an actress!"

And then there are society people who have a genuine love for the stage and a feeling for it. And who are attractive, and in some measure talented, and who have been lured to Hollywood by talent scouts. Blue-book aspirants make good publicity copy and pictures, but Hollywood practice is to give such people a few walk-on roles and then ease them out the side gate into obscurity.

To mention a few, there were Janet Snowden and Merry Fahrney, and blond Rosamond Pinchot (Gaston). The latter had a creditable background, including several productions of Max Reinhardt's repertory company in Germany. But she hasn't gone far on the screen.

Worst Picture.

There was wan, lean Whitney Bourne, whom Charles MacArthur and Ben Hecht selected for the lead in "Once in a Blue Moon," which was billed by a Boston exhibitor as "The Worst Picture Ever Made." Nobody blamed Miss Bourne for it, but the debacle seems to have chilled her dramatic ardor.

Also there was the pouty-lipped and ultra-swanky Mary Taylor, another choice of the socially minded Hecht and MacArthur. She played creditably in "Soak the Rich," but there is no record that Hollywood producers flew East with contracts for Miss Taylor.

Indeed, so few genuine society people have met any true success in Hollywood that their scarcity is not only conspicuous but significant. Katharine Hepburn was a Junior Leaguer. Margaret Sullavan came from an uppity environment, with an impressive list of private schools. Jane Wyatt and Rosalind Russell complete the list.

The Misses Wyatt and Russell, though, are members of a new order, and perhaps are the vanguard of a whole procession of former young society people who seem genuinely serious about earning screen careers.

Of these newcomers there are Polly (Mary Elizabeth) Rowles, Pittsburgh socialite; Patricia Havens-Monteagle, of San Francisco, the latter's husband, Richard Palmer Smart; Lynn Gilbert, of Chicago.

Jane Wyatt was dropped from the social register when she was indiscreet enough to marry a man who wasn't in it, and to choose acting for a vocation. But that didn't trim her impressive family tree; her mother was the former Euphemia Van Rensselaer Waddington!

What Miss Wyatt thinks of society in the movies can't be printed. Can't be printed because she won't talk. She won't talk because she has been bedeviled by her social connections ever since she joined the apprentice school of the Berkshire Playhouse in Massachusetts. She is good and tired of being pointed out as a socialite, because she wants no truck with the blue-bloods and can't help it if she happened to be born with a silver spoon in her oatmeal.

Understudy Method.

Miss Wyatt applied herself diligently to the drama, understudied some important stars on Broadway, acted in some pretty good plays and succeeded Margaret Sullavan in "Dinner at Eight." She has appeared in a number of pictures and was chosen by the discerning Frank Capra for the feminine lead in "Lost Horizon." Universal—a new regime with an eye for fresh young talent—has her under contract and is starring her.

Miss Russell is more communicative. She is even willing to venture some ideas about why so few society girls have been successful on the screen or behind the footlights. Most of them, she believes, are spoiled and/or lazy.

"The odds are against her from the start," she said. "Almost every society girl who has not been trained to really work for success wants to become a star the first day.

"Here's an example of how debutantes begin their acting careers: On Broadway I belonged to the cast of a show that needed money. There was a stage-struck society girl who had tired of trips abroad, teas and penthouse parties. Her rich father became the angel of the play, and that amounted to buying her one of the principal roles. While we sat around for a week, the director rehearsed her on how to make entrances, exits and other routines which she should have learned through years of experience in playing minor roles.

Training Needed.

"It was the old story of the rich boy starting as president and working his way down to office boy. Few society girls are really serious about their 'careers.' They lose interest if they don't get their names in lights within a week. I don't care what you say about acting, it's something that takes patient training. Money, position and knowing the right people have nothing to do with it."

Miss Russell's father was a wealthy man who sent her traveling and to private schools. Her mother, incidentally, was the editor of Vogue. Rosalind decided in 1930 that she wanted to be an actress. To become an actress she selected the toughest job she could find—a place in a stock company that played under canvas. She graduated into better companies, into summer theaters, into Broadway plays.

She now is one of the busiest actresses in Hollywood and has played major roles in about ten pictures. Recently you've seen her in "Under Two Flags" (proving to be pretty fast company for Claudette Colbert) and in "Craig's Wife."

Carnegie Tech Graduate.

Polly Rowles is the daughter of a steel man, Ralph T. Rowles. His name is as well known as any in Pittsburgh, but his wife's side of the family is more truly social. For instance, Mrs. Rowles' mother, Mrs. Lewis Dick, regularly appears on every list of the Ten Most Charming Women of Philadelphia.

Mary Elizabeth went to the Carnegie Institute of Technology. Carnegie Tech usually is thought of as an institution of science, but it also offers one of the two toughest courses of dramatic training in America. It provides instruction by Broadway directors and produces plays — everything from Shakespeare to A. A. Milne. Miss Rowles graduated with honors and a degree.

Except for some work in summer stock in Pittsburgh, she never appeared in any play professionally. Nor had she ever seen a sound stage until she reported for work at Universal—to which a talent scout had sent her. But the studio thought enough of her training and screen test to assign her the lead in her first picture.

Miss Rowles made up her mind to be an actress when she was 8. And never wavered.

Submitted Photographs.

Lynn Gilbert made up her mind in the same way. But Miss Gilbert—who is Mrs. Gilbert E. Keebler, who was Lynn McHale—has had no training of any sort. Her picture frequently appears on Chicago society pages, but the only cameras she has faced were those of commercial photographers.

She likes poetry, parties, caviar, horseback riding, Nassau and Florida. She has a deep singing voice, Libby Holmanesque, and wants to play substantial dramatic roles. She is the one individual in perhaps a hundred thousand who has succeeded in winning a contract by submitting photographs to a studio.

Patricia Havens-Monteagle, daughter of a San Francisco financier, struck an especially compatible match when she eloped a few months ago with Richard Palmer Smart, heir to a tremendous fortune in Hawaii. They're both crazy about acting. In fact, they met at the Bliss-Hayden Miniature Theater.

Won Six-Month Contract.

She's a statuesque brunet with a torch-singing voice. Having appeared in little theater plays around San Francisco, she was singing in the Eve Symington manner, and in some of the most uppity hotels along the Coast—when an M-G-M. studio representative glimpsed her and promised a screen test.

The test won a six-month contract. She played a few distressingly small roles, quit and joined the Bliss-Hayden Theater for further training.

Dick Smart, a member of the company, has had more practical experience. His father was Henry Smart, the pineapple multi-millionaire. Dick went to college in California, tired of being a rich man's son, assumed the name of Broderick Dean and supported himself for nearly two years by acting with stock companies. What drove him to resume his real identity was an overpowering distaste for the name of Broderick Dean.

Smart played on Broadway; as one of the sub-principals he sang in that enduring spectacle, "The Great Waltz." After five months, with the waltz giving every indication of going on forever, he quit and returned to Hawaii. Then he came back to Hollywood for serious dramatic training.

Blue Bloods Expect Star Role in Films at Once

Some With Real Talent for Stage Fight Way Up to Featured Spots; Hollywood, However, Soon Eases Unfit Out of Studios.

Hollywood's Social Code Is Unique

Caste System Covers Extras, Bit Players, Heroines Alike.

By Hubbard Keavy.

Hollywood.—Among the things in Hollywood that amuse sideliners are the sharp lines of social distinction.

A mouse may look at a queen, but he hadn't better speak to her. The dukes and the counts may address her but they seldom are invited to help dispose of her caviar. If the mouse becomes a count, he may court a countess. If the countess is in line for a queenship, the other queens may accept her. If she isn't, they shout: "Off with her head!"

Extras associate with extras. Bit players, one step higher on the social ladder, associate with their kind. Featured players have their groups and the stars and the directors and the executives have theirs.

Salary determines where one sits socially. A $1,000-a-week star is not in the same class, socially, with a $5,000-a-week queen. Directors of two-reelers are not in the same class with directors of features. Scenarists with a reputation do not have luncheon with the $500 writers.

I was reminded of these social lines the other day when I read that Leopold Stokowski, director of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, was the guest during his Hollywood stay of Director Mitchell Leisen. Leisen would not have entertained Stokowski four years ago. Leisen then was an extra. When Writer Norman Krasna was a publicity man, he spoke to the queens—on business matters only. Today, as a high-salaried scenarist, he courts ladies of the inner circle.

Stardom Top Rank.

Leslie Howard travels in the best circles, but he could only have peeked in from the outside when he was a bank clerk. Stardom also changed the status of Banker Fredric March, of Truckdriver Boris Karloff, of Chorus Girl Myrna Loy.

Salary Is Sole Arbiter of Position in Film Circles of Coast.

When Michael Whalen managed a 10-cent store, he had admired Alice Faye from a distance. Now he does it at the chummy table of a night club. Joe E. Brown entertained no celebrities when he was the proprietor of a bowling alley. Nor did Wallace Beery when he was an elephant trainer. The elephants did that. If she saw Ricardo Cortez when he was a gold-braided theater doorman, Mrs. Christine Lee didn't pay him any attention. When he became a movie star, she married him.

Important people are happy to go fishing with Guy Kibbee. Had he, as a printer a few years ago, invited these same people to accompany him, they'd have said "No" politely. When Jack Oakie came to Hollywood, his associates were other bit players. His friends now, because social custom demands it, are the stars with whom he works.

Slacks Now the Latest Word For Hostesses of Hollywood

Jean Harlow's Newest Suit Is Fashioned of Golden Yellow Gabardine; Myrna Loy Has Blue-White Polka-Dot Outfit.

By the Associated Press.

Hollywood.—The latest news in Hollywood hostess gowns is slacks.

In their place have come "hostess slack suits," almost as tailored and trim as a man's business suit. Dolly Tree designed such an outfit for Jean Harlow to wear in certain scenes of "Libeled Lady."

The suit Miss Harlow wears is fashioned from fine, golden yellow gabardine, piped in brown. The slacks are extremely well tailored, with turned-back cuffs and a fine brown stripe down either side of the trousers. They are topped by a jacket that might well belong to a tailored suit. Wide lapels and slit pockets are piped in matching brown, and an action back adds chic to the costume. The plain tailored blouse is of matching yellow crepe. With this Jean wears crocheted sandals of yellow and brown string.

"They are much more comfortable and much neater than frilly, fussy hostess gowns," Jean said after trying out this somewhat experimental outfit. "I am having the design copied in a number of colors for my own wardrobe. All of them, for fall and winter, will be made of gabardine."

In her own suits Jean is introducing a clever note by using her initials, carved in some instances from ivory and in some of polished wood, in place of buttons on the jacket.

Another lounging ensemble is in the wardrobe of Myrna Loy, who, while still adopting the slack idea, tempers her outfit with a chic and feminine coat.

Miss Loy's outfit is made in blue and white polka-dot taffeta, combined with the new chinchilla crepe. The trousers are taffeta, topped by a blouse of white crepe. Over this is clipped a long coat of the chinchilla fabric, trimmed with large lapels of matching taffeta. A taffeta sash, tied at the front in a perky bow, completes the ensemble.

Oriental lounging pajamas are the choice of Virginia Bruce. Imported by her studio, this particular outfit was found to photograph poorly because it is turquoise blue. She lost no time in adding the pajamas to her personal wardrobe. They are heavily embroidered in silk and gold threads and the coat reaches almost to the floor.

Political Broadcasting Presents Its Problems as Radio Men Longingly Eye Sidelines

Two Controversies Over What Is 'Proper' Present Problems

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 25.—Political broadcasting isn't all honey. In fact—and that's not necessarily a secret—if radio men had their way, they'd much prefer sticking to the campaign sidelines.

Maybe they wouldn't be quoted in cold type just like that, but from some of the developments of the 1936 battle, coupled with past experiences, their unexpressed thoughts seem to be tending more along this line.

At least twice so far the networks have found themselves involved in controversies over just what constitutes "proper" political broadcasting. There was the instance early in the year out of which came the broadcasters' decision that air campaigning be confined to "discussion of the issues;" that political talks before the convention would be free, while afterward they would have to be paid for just like any other sponsored broadcast. Both N. B. C. and C. B. S. were agreed on this.

Political Dramatizations.

Involved was the plan of the Republican National Committee for a series of political dramas under the title, "Liberty at the Cross Roads." Some of these did go on the kilocycles, but on several individual stations, not the networks.

Then things moved along rather smoothly until Senator A. H. Vandenberg, Michigan Republican, appeared out in Chicago with the debate program for C. B. S. in which a record of President Roosevelt's voice was included.

The difficulty centered over the use of the record, the chain pointing to its policy against transcriptions in network transmissions. N. B. C. was not directly concerned, but it, too, has the same rule about records.

Last Minute Changes.

Otherwise, political broadcasting generally calls for considerable last-minute schedule revamping to let in the speeches, attended by listener protests when their favorites happen to be missing from the loudspeaker. However, this year the cancellations probably haven't been as numerous as in the past owing to the use of regular political series and insertion of many talks at times when the schedule can be flexibly rearranged.

Because of the exigencies of campaign fund gathering, the broadcasters always haven't been paid as promptly as they like in past seasons for the political transmissions. So this year they established the policy of payment within a week after the program, with certain types of broadcasts to be paid for cash in advance.

"Revue" Commentator "Sees" Most Football

Ed Thorgersen, sports reporter and commentator on the "Football Revue," sees more football each year than any man on the air.

In addition to going to games in person whenever possible, Thorgersen sees every important football player in action every season because he is the narrator for a news reel company. So that its cameras will not miss plays similar to the one when Roy Riegels ran the wrong way in the Rose Bowl, freak plays, or other events that might happen at any time, the news-reel men keep cameras trained on a score of games every week-end.

All of the reels, whether important enough to be shown in theaters or not, are sent to the New York distributing office. There, Thorgersen studies the gridiron prowess of hundreds of stars, catches their weaknesses and abilities, studies new plays and formations, attacks and defenses.

Jones Meets Hare

The story of how radio's first singing team came into existence was revealed the other day when Gustave Haenschen, music director for the American Album of Familiar Music, recalled that it was he who had introduced Billy Jones to Ernie Hare.

It was back in 1919, and Haenschen had charge of recordings for the Brunswick company. Both Jones and Hare were established vocalists in their own right, and both happened to be at the studio the same afternoon. Duo records were the newest thing and Haenschen suggested that Jones and Hare combine their voices.

They did so, in "All She'd Say Was Um-Um-Um." It was a hit.

From that time on they worked together permanently as a team. Two years later they made their radio debut as the Happiness Boys. Their revival vehicles is the Sunday evening Community Sing series.

Jones and Hare celebrated their anniversary in radio by reviving many of their early songs, in the "Community Sing" two weeks ago.

C. B. S. Plans Season of 'Good Music' Features

One of the most impressive schedules of musical features in its history will be presented over the Columbia Broadcasting System's Nationwide network during the 1936-37 season.

At least five of America's foremost symphony orchestras will be heard each week, including the New York Philharmonic-Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra. Others are the Pittsburgh Symphony, the Sunday Evening Hour, Symphony, and another major orchestra to be announced later. In addition, there will be two student symphony orchestras representing the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia and the Cincinnati Conservatory.

Columbia's 1936-37 schedule as a whole will offer a comprehensive review of many fields of music—orchestra, chamber music, piano, vocal and instrumental. Two series of children's concerts will be given by two orchestras, one series to be broadcast on Tuesday afternoon, the other on Saturday mornings.

Noted pianists and instrumentalists will present complete cycles of major works by a number of the great masters. The Library of Congress series will present most of the major chamber music works of Brahms. Special attempts will be made throughout the season to distribute important programs throughout the week, instead of concentrating them over the week-end.

Burns, Allen to Star In Broadway Musical

George Burns and Gracie Allen, now at work on a new picture entitled "College Holiday," have had their contract with Paramount extended for two more years. They're also making plans for their first Broadway musical show which probably will be based on Edward Delaney's "The Charm Girl."

Hepbron In Forum.

James M. Hepbron, acting director of the Washington Criminal Justice Association and director of the Baltimore Criminal Justice Commission, will discuss the Washington criminal situation with Herbert L. Willett, jr., director of the Community Chest of Washington, D. C., in a round-table broadcast from WOL today at 12 noon.

"Musical Camera" in Network Debut Today

Sound pictures of important events from history and the day's news will form the keynote of a new radio series, the "Musical Camera," this afternoon at 4:30, WRC.

Josef Cherniavsky, versatile maestro, will direct the broadcasts, using a baton in place of lens or film. With Willie Morris as soprano soloist, a choral group and concert orchestra, the "Musical Camera" cast will use special arrangements of both classical and popular music to paint tone pictures. Selections will be chosen by a musical-editorial board. Suggestions from listeners will be invited.

Frank (Delacorte) Black!

Frank Black, an avid collector of old phonograph records, got a big disappointment this week from a well-meaning friend. Proudly carrying an album of discs, the friend greeted Black: "I have here a complete set of recordings, most of them over 15 years old, by Franklyn Delacorte—remember him?" Black, evidently impressed, thanked the friend—who has yet to learn that the entire series was recorded by Black himself—as a fresh-from-college boy, Delacorte was one of his many musical aliases!

Presenting three pianists—two of recognized ability and one—well, not so well established as yet! At top: Vincent Lopez, the gentleman who made "Kitten on the Keys" and "Nola" household favorites.
Middle: Ted Fio Rito, whose orchestra now is being brought to Washington listeners with regularity by WOL as a Mutual network feature.
Below: Charles Butterworth seems engrossed in teaching his dog a thing or two about the piano.

On the Air Today

The series of mythical visits to spots of interest in Washington, scheduled for the "American Pageant of Youth" program last Sunday, really begins today, WMAL, at 12 noon. The 50 members of the cast hope to aid young listeners in gaining a more familiar understanding of the functions of Government.

• • • •

Cole Porter music will be featured by Frank Black and his symphonic dance orchestra, WMAL, at 8:30. Black will interview the composer, who provides lyrics as well as music when he writes for a show. Selections from "Born to Dance," a movie not yet released, and "Red Hot and Blue," a stage show scheduled to open on Broadway next Thursday, will be played.

• • • •

Mrs. Jimmie Wallington, the former Betty Jane Cooper, emulates other radio wives when she joins her husband as stooge and heckler in Eddie Cantor's half-hour, WJSV, at 8:30. She also brings her singing and dancing talents to the microphone. Cantor also will attempt to teach Jacques Renard to sing.

• • • •

Rubinoff plays "Gypsy Fantasy," his own composition and inspired by his first ocean voyage in 25 years, in his new program at WJSV, at 6:30 . . . The "American Album" features music from Friml's "The Firefly," WRC, at 9:30. Also highlighted: "Kalua," from Kern's "Good Morning Dearie."

• • • •

Nelson Eddy has selected for his half hour at WJSV, at 8, the following: "Tallyho," by Leoni; Largo al Factotum, from "Barber of Seville," and "Stout Hearted Men," from "New Moon," by Romberg. With Francis White, he sings "Hills of Home," "Little Grey Home in the West" and "Home Sweet Home."

• • • •

Church of the Air, WJSV: At 10 a. m.—The Rev. John Ray Ewers, East End Christian Church, Pittsburgh, on "No Other Gods;" at 1 p. m.—The Rev. Eugene Callahan, St. Gregory's Church, New York, on "Gratitude."

• • • •

The radio magazine, Mirror, salutes the tenth anniversary of the National Broadcasting Co. with a half hour presentation of stars of the air. Ethel Barrymore, most recent addition to the radio ranks from the stage, will tell of her plans for a new dramatic school, founded to aid youthful stage aspirants. She will be interviewed by Kelvin Keech. Rosemary Lane and Tom Waring, of the Waring Pennsylvanians; Johnny Green, Kenny Baker and Don Wilson, of the Jack Benny show, and Phillips Lord, in a revival of his Seth Parker role, will be heard.

• • • •

Today's "Magic Key" presents Billy Gaxton, Kitty Carlisle and Carol Stone, of the "White Horse Inn" company, current stage success in New York; Robert Benchley, author, on "How to Sleep;" Sol Goodman, tympanist of the New York Philharmonic Symphony, and Herbert Ernst Groh, European tenor, from Berlin, WMAL, at 1.

• • • •

"Grand Hotel" presents "Miss T. N. T.," delineating the activities of one Nita Hart, an explosive-tempered actress, WRC, at 3:30 . . . Reed Kennedy, concert barytone, makes his third appearance with Antonio Modarelli and the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, in "The Music You Love," WJSV, at 2. He highlights the barytone aria from Verdi's "Otello."

• • • •

A child prodigy pianist—11-year-old Ruth Slenczynski—will be the featured soloist with the G. M. Concert, WRC, at 10. She will play the first movement of Camille Saint-Saens' G minor Concerto for piano and orchestra and a group of Chopin solos, including the D Flat Major Nocturne, Opus 27, No. 2, and the C minor Etude, No. 12, Opus 10.

• • • •

Stoopnagle and Budd have entered into a new business: New Sob Stories for Magazine Subscription Salesman, Inc.! WMAL, at 5:30 . . . Phil Baker turns his talents to burlesquing the West and its dude ranches with a locale at the Bar-Kewpie Ranch Rodeo, WJSV, at 7:30.

• • • •

Harold Bauer, concert pianist, is soloist with the "Sunday Evening Hour," WJSV, at 9. The program:
Overture from "Euryanthe".....Weber
Orchestra.
"Pierrot's Song," from "The Dead City," Korngold
Mr. Bonelli and orchestra.
"Tarantella" .....Rossini
Mr. Bonelli and orchestra.
"Entrance of the Pagodas," from "Mother Goose" .....Ravel
Orchestra.
"Pantomime and Ritual Fire Dance," from "El Amor Brujo".....De Falla
Orchestra.
Prologue from "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo
Mr. Bonelli and orchestra.
"Annie Laurie" .....Traditional
Mr. Bonelli and orchestra.
"Brown October Ale," from "Robin Hood" .....De Koven
Mr. Bonelli, chorus and orchestra.
Overture from "Finlandia" .....Sibelius
Orchestra.
"German Te Deum".....Traditional
Chorus and orchestra.

Helen Marshall is soloist with the "Fireside Recital," WRC, at 7:30, singing Tosti's "Good Bye" and "A Pastoral," by Verracini . . . "We, the People," presents among other "ordinary persons," WMAL, at 5, a man who recouped his fortunes by building a tin can palace on a Jersey swamp. Also the world's fastest typist.

Be the Underdog, Says Cantor

If you want to be a successful radio comedian be an underdog, for the public is never in sympathy with the man who is supposed to be "tops."

Eddie Cantor speaking.

"The lavish praises of the announcer," says Eddie, "are a silver collar and a platinum chain around the neck of the underdog. Take them away—and he's a mutt. The public loves the mutt."

Cantor reveals this as his basic psychology of radio comedy. Instead of heckling Parkyakarkus and Jimmy Wallington, he's usually on the receiving end of their gags.

"Why?" Eddie asks and answers, "Because if we reverse the situation, I'm on top and the listeners resent me. They don't like the 'wise guy.'

"People often say to me, 'Gee, Parkyakarkus was good last night. He certainly was funny.' I suppose they wonder why I don't object. The reason is that I'm interested only in putting the program across as a whole.

Demand for New Gags.

"Another thing I'd like to point out in connection with radio comedy is the continuous demand for new laughs. One funny program isn't enough. Comedians frequently come in and create a sensation—for one broadcast. Then they're through. They've used up all the gags and situations that were their vaudeville stock for years.

"When these are gone, the entertainers have no more to offer. On the stage you can go on repeating lines indefinitely. On the air, a gag is dead immediately after it has been used and can never be repeated."

Cantor employs the same "laugh laboratory" method of determining the value of his gags that he instituted last year. As before, his program is rehearsed at one of the Columbia playhouses in Hollywood before a special test audience. The gags that get no response are automatically deleted from the script and new ones substituted.

Pre-Air Test for All Programs.

"I think," he confides, "that the time is not far distant when nearly every radio program will be tried out and tested before it is put on the air. Anyone who has had stage experience realizes the importance of spectators. They are an essential and active part of every show. An experienced artist can tell unerringly whether he is getting himself across to his listeners. He does this by sort of a sixth sense.

"However, the ordinary radio performance does not tell you whether you are right or wrong until it is too late. The usual arrangement, which is to have a rehearsal attended by no audience whatever, doesn't give the artist any advance indication of how his lines will be received when they are presented on the air."

Hughes, Organist

Rupert Hughes, the dignified novelist and historian who now presides over the destinies of the "Caravan" broadcasts, proudly displays a unique fan letter, which reads:

"Whenever I hear your voice, it takes me back to Keokuk and this is why: Years ago, when you were taking instructions on the pipe organ in First Westminster Presbyterian Church at Keokuk, I was at that time the boy who pumped the organ.

"Speaking of organists, I believe you were the hardest organist I ever pumped for. I think you must have pushed down all the keys on the organ with your hands and feet at the same time. In fact, I'll never forget the notes passed back to me—all reading 'More wind.' I was a small kid anyway, and by the time you would finish, I was just about all in.

"P. S. Your radio programs are swell, and I'm sure nobody will ever have to pass a note up to you saying 'Less wind.'"

New C. B. S. Playhouse Literally Insulated Against City's Roars

When the Columbia Broadcasting System opened its new Radio Playhouse this fall it put into operation a literal "floating" theater insulated against the roars of Manhattan.

Programs are presented to the Nation's radio listeners under ideal acoustical conditions despite the fact that elevated trains thunder outside, subways race beneath, and an electric power plant operates nearby. The theater, formerly the Hammerstein, is at Fifty-third and Broadway, one of the noisiest sections in Manhattan.

Engineers met the challenge with an intricate system of sound insulation, ranging from special walls of rock wool, "sound lock" doors and cork cushions. Today, in the auditorium set off from a labyrinth of noisy transportation, it is possible to sit in the balcony and hear a pin dropped on the stage.

Edwin K. Cohan, Columbia's director of engineering, who worked with William Lescaze, architect, in redesigning the theater, points out that the major acoustical feature is a stage which literally floats on an eight-inch cushion of noise-deadening material.

Felt, Rock Wool, Asbestos.

Upon the original flooring was placed a layer of felt, a layer of wooden beams, another layer of felt and another layer of beams. The crevices were filled with rock wool. Next came a layer of asbestos, a wood floor, a third layer of felt and a final cover of linoleum. As a result of this construction the stage is free from vibration, a requisite for good broadcasting.

The cycloramas, which usually is merely a cloth backdrop, has been "loaded" with cement and studded with occasional lumps of felt to break up any tendency toward vibration. It also is insulated from the floor and, for artistic purposes, is made in sections and can be shifted about in innumerable and striking designs.

The entire Fifty-third street wall of the playhouse has been lined with pressed rock wool to offset the noise of elevated trains. All exits have double lead-lined rubber sealed doors known technically as "sound locks" which attenuate all sounds from the street. To combat vibration and extraneous noises from the power house and the subway, the beams upon which the interior of the theater are built now rest on blocks of cork, while floors are padded with rock wool on the under side.

Interests of Acoustics.

Huge modernistic baffleboards have been built over the stage to improve acoustical conditions in the house and prevent any audible "kickback" into the microphones of unwanted audience noises. Specially designed and constructed control booths occupy the places once used by boxes. Because of its fine acoustical properties the ceiling was not touched and as a result the theater now presents an odd but pleasing combination of modern and Moorish architecture.

A concealed public address system carries the entertainment to every corner of the large auditorium with equal volume and fidelity.

The house, which seats about 1,300 persons, was acquired some months ago to meet increasing demands for studio facilities. It will be operated in addition to C. B. S. Playhouses at 141 West Forty-fourth street and 251 West Forty-fifth street.

"School of the Air" Is Honored by Legion

The first radio award of merit offered by the American Legion Auxiliary has been bestowed upon the "American School of the Air," educational feature of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The presentation was made by Mrs. William H. Corwith, radio chairman of the auxiliary, who said the award was being given to the program having "the greatest appeal to the patriotism of our people" and providing "a benefit to the children of the Nation."

William S. Paley, president of Columbia, said in accepting the award that it was an added incentive to all broadcasters and told the auxiliary that "it is a source of great encouragement to us to know that, as our responsibilities increase, we have your interest, co-operation and support." He added that it was doubly appreciated in that the auxiliary based the award upon program standards meeting the requirements of the women's national radio committee, representing women's organizations of the country.

Carnegie Hall Radio Acoustics "Perfect"

Anyone going to Carnegie Hall on Sunday nights for the G. M. Symphony Concerts broadcasts would have to look twice before he found any difference between these performances and the usual concert attractions. Because of the excellent acoustics of the auditorium, no special preparations of any kind are necessary to perfect the pick-up.

Only two microphones are used: One for the orchestra and soloists and one for the announcer. The stage set-up is almost identical with that of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, and the one new piece of equipment which meets the eye is a large panel on the left side of the set. A glass window in the panel affords full visibility to the engineers in the off-stage control room.

Rapid Growth of Radio Enables the Entire Nation to 'See' Presidential Inauguration

Plans Launched in April Reach Fruition on Jan. 4

All Details of Event Will Be Carefully Rehearsed to Obviate Any Last-Minute Slips; Announces Time Script.

By Philip Merryman,
Operations Supervisor, National Broadcasting Co., Washington Division.

Just ten days more of oratory via the networks—and then the average radio listener settles back to his normal routine of music, comedy and drama. To virtually everyone except the network engineer and program directors the shouting is all over, the citizen has gone to the polls and named his man for another four years and that is that.

Engineer and program directors, however, are even now looking to a date in January when the inauguration focuses the attention of the country on the east steps of the Capitol and a stretch of 30 or so blocks to the White House.

For each of the thousands of persons who crowd the line of march there will be another thousand who must content themselves with a word picture of the triumphal ceremony. They must sit at home dependent on the talents and energies of a small army of radio men for the full details of the day's activities.

Electrical communication has been instrumental—more than any other single factor—in freeing mankind from the restrictions imposed by space and time. Condemned, until its advent, to a crawling existence over a few square miles of familiar terrain, wherein news of the outside world filtered slowly and inaccurately, he suddenly found himself possessed of the wings of Mercury and the whole world at his doorstep.

Mistakes Avoided.

Forever entombed were such possibilities for great human catastrophes as the fighting of "the Battle of New Orleans" three weeks after "the War of 1912 Peace Treaty" had been signed. Morse, with his telegraph, and Bell, with his telephone, had made the interchange of information within and between nations swift and sure.

It seems clear that these early pioneers in communication understood the limitless possibilities ahead for point-to-point communication, but it seems equally clear that no one of them recognized its possibilities for mass communication, and if they did they surely failed to visualize the important position it was to assume in national and international affairs.

That is the wonder of broadcasting to me: How an art which has become such an important part of daily life could have burst on the world so unexpectedly. Broadcasting just happened and, since it had no precedents and few restrictions, its growth was rapid.

How rapid that growth has been is brought home with arresting force when I look at the adjoining diagram of an inauguration day broadcast and reflect that only 15 years ago broadcasting made a rather shaky debut to a scattered and skeptical audience.

In 1921 broadcasting was a single microphone, a phonograph, third-rate musicians, an engineer with a heterogeneous collection of coils, vacuum tubes and condensers. In 1936 broadcasting is a huge aggregation of the finest sound equipment the scientific mind can produce, electrical transcriptions that defy the ear to identify them as mechanical reproductions, the best actors, musicians and speakers the world knows and an army of workers drawn from nearly every craft and profession known to man.

In 1921 broadcasting was a weird cacophony of screeching from the depths of a grotesque black horn. In 1936 broadcasting is an unobtrusive piece of decorative furniture from which emanates news bulletins, comedy, drama, sports events, sermons, politics, educational benefits of every description, symphony, opera, etc., usually with better fidelity and intelligibility than the listener would enjoy if he were at the actual scene of the broadcast.

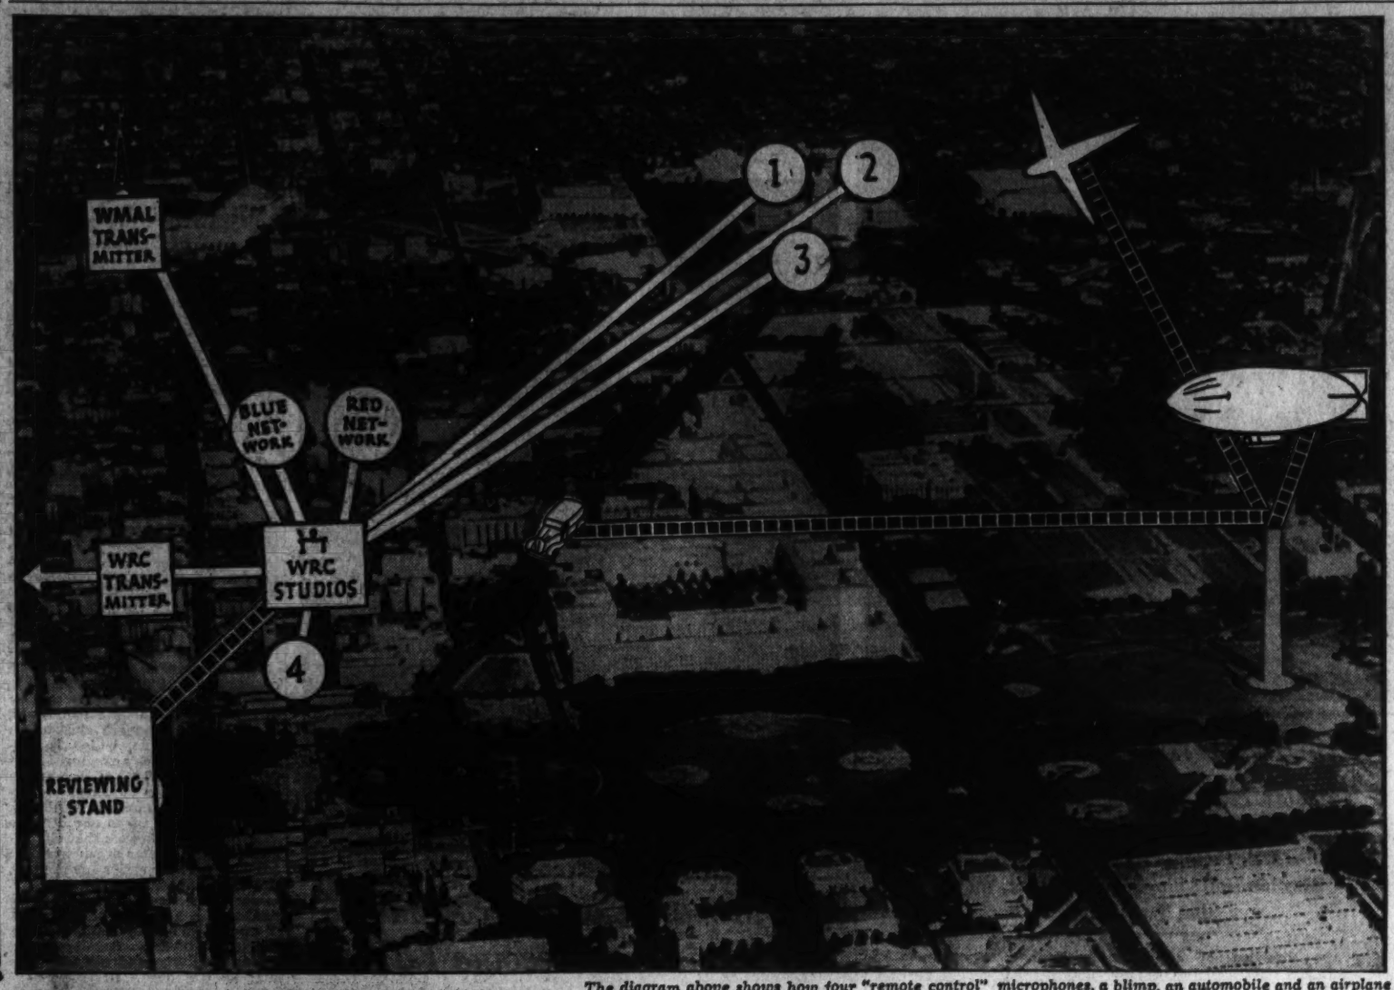
In 1921 the microphone was anchored in one spot. In 1936 it roams the world, soars into the stratosphere, sinks to the ocean depths in the bathysphere.

In 1921 the use of telephone lines was unknown in broadcasting. In 1936 the National Broadcasting Company is the biggest single customer of the Bell Telephone System.

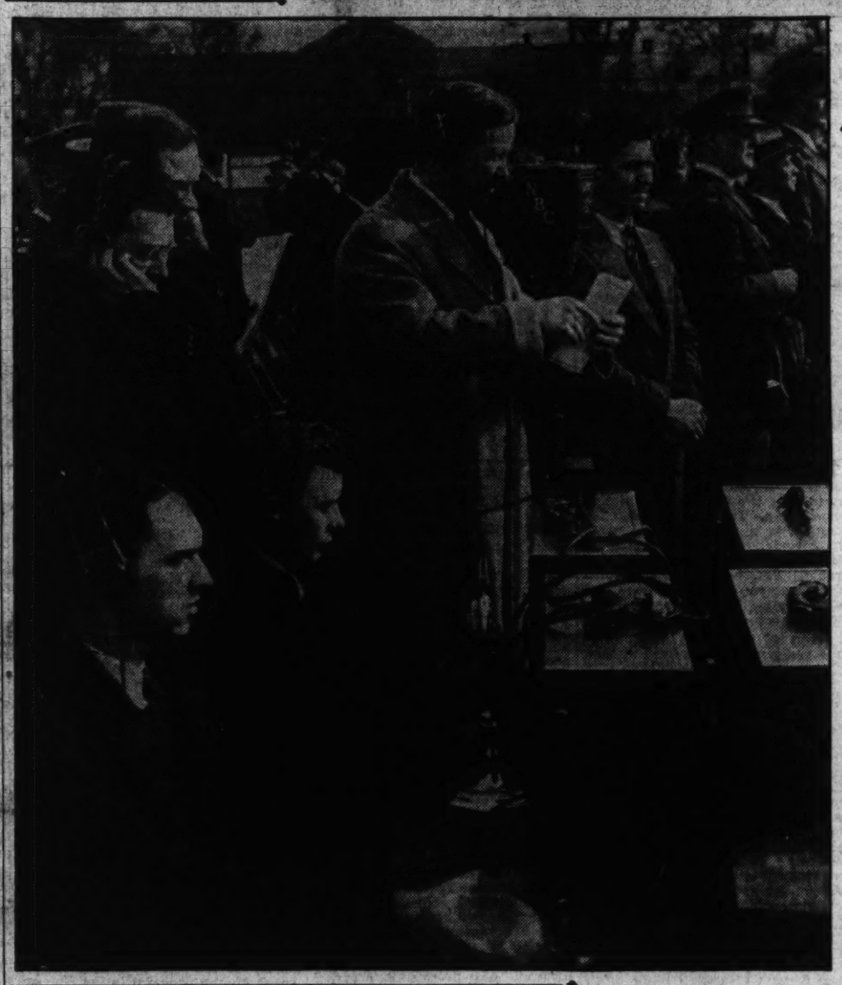
In 1921 it would have been technically impossible to broadcast a coherent description of the ceremonies attendant on the inauguration to the Presidency of Warren G. Harding. The best that could have been done would have been to station observers at various points to witness the ceremonies and then rush them hurriedly to the studios to give an account from memory of what they had seen.

In 1937 not only will the National Broadcasting Company have stationary observers placed at every strategic point connected with the ceremonies, but they will have as well three mobile announcers, one hovering leisurely over the scene in a blimp, another dashing dizzily about in a fast plane, while the third rides in the procession near the official White House party. And during the approximately six hours the program will be on the air each one of these 11 observers will be subject to instantaneous call to take the air.

In 1921 such a plan would have been laughed off as a dream. To us in 1936 it is practical and simple. In making this statement I do not wish to minimize the careful planning and preparation necessary before such a broadcast can be attempted. As early as April of this year plans for certain engineering features of this program were begun—but I do wish to point out that the above picture is not exaggerated in any degree.



The diagram above shows how four "remote control" microphones, a blimp, an automobile and an airplane provide a complete radio story of a Presidential inauguration. Dotted lines are short-wave communication from mobile units to the top of the Washington Monument. Straight lines are telephone wires. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 are announcers at the Capitol steps, atop the Capitol, Peace Monument and Treasury building. Master control of these positions is in the studios marked "WRC." Below: A group of engineers set up for remote control broadcasting, and a view of the special events master control board.



You will notice in the diagram that all the white lines meet at a symbolic switch at the National Press Building. Each one of these black lines represents telephone line facilities. It is over these telephone lines that the voices of the various announcers are carried to the central control room. Most persons are accustomed to the unnatural tones of the ordinary telephone and consequently fail to understand how it is that the voice of an announcer comes through so naturally. It is easily explained.

Accuracy Demanded.

Telephone users demand from the telephone company only comfortable intelligibility while from the radio broadcast they demand complete fidelity. Consequently, while both use identical wires the telephone brings you intelligibility at the lowest possible cost and broadcast brings you the best possible quality whatever the cost. The difference lies in the terminal equipment used. In the case of the telephone it is the simple handset familiar to everyone. In the case of the broadcast it means expensive microphones and amplifiers especially designed for high quality transmission. It must seem peculiar that an industry engaged in broadcasting should use telephone lines for its own point-to-point transmission, but it is never the less the case. The telephone line remains today the only completely reliable medium for point-to-point broadcast transmission offering easy portability.

In the diagram is shown one black line leading to each observation point. It would have been more accurate to show three lines since we actually use three separate telephone circuits to each point during the broadcast. One circuit carries the program to the central control room, where it is amplified and distributed to the networks; the second carries it back to the point of origin for checking and can be reversed for emergency transmission should the regular transmission line fail; the third line is used as a private telephone line for the exchange of messages relative to program and engineering co-ordination both before and during the program.

As an actual example, let us consider the engineering details incident to the broadcast of one of President Roosevelt's "Fireside Chats." These, as are all President Roosevelt's radio talks from the White House, are from the Diplomatic Reception Room, located under the South Portico. For these programs it is not necessary to order special telephone lines since the National Broadcasting Company has broadcast lines permanently installed in the White House as well as the Record Room of the House of Representatives and various committee rooms in both the House and Senate wings of the Capitol.

If N. B. C. had not established this policy of having permanent facilities installed at important governmental centers it would have been necessary to order telephone circuits several days in advance. Early in the day of the scheduled talk the engineers go to the White House with the portable broadcasting equipment. Let me again emphasize that this equipment is not a portable radio broadcasting station. It is merely a high-quality telephone system which picks up the President's voice and carries it with all its natural qualities to the radio broadcasting stations where it is actually put on the air.

Having been conducted to the Diplomatic Reception Room by Mr. Muir, the official usher at the White House, the engineers set up their amplifiers in the space reserved for our network, install microphones on the President's special broadcasting desk and begin the testing of the three telephone lines. This operation is technical and I will not attempt to explain except to say that if it were not done the speaker's voice would sound distorted.

Lines Are Tested.

Satisfied that the lines are satisfactory, the engineers connect their regular and emergency amplifiers to the regular and emergency telephone lines—on all Presidential broadcasts complete emergency equipment is provided and the second telephone line is always used as an emergency transmitting line—and they then talk through to the central control room. There an engineer who is familiar with the tonal quality of the speaker's voice listens carefully for flaws. When he has approved the transmission the engineers leave the White House to return two hours before the President is scheduled to speak.

Upon returning they again check the performance of their equipment. As air time approaches, everything is put in readiness. Announcers Carleton Smith (for N. B. C.) and Bob Trout (for C. B. S.) compare continuity and check the length of their introductions so they will simultaneously say, "The President of the United States." The engineers are calm, unexcited. They have the confidence born of careful preparation. They know that the chances are 999,999 to 1 that the broadcast will be completed without a technical flaw.

Presently the President enters. His voice is checked or tested by the engineers through the microphones. Assured that everything is in readiness, he begins a last-minute persual of his speech.

Let us shift the scene now to the National Press Building. In the control room on the twelfth floor another small group of engineers prepares the lines which will carry the program to the Red and Blue Networks. Their instructions read: "President Roosevelt Fireside Chat—10 to 10:30 p. m.—to Red and Blue—start 20 seconds after synchronized chimes—end with cue 'through the National Broadcasting Company.'"

Translated, this means that the Red and Blue Networks will be turned over to Washington at 10 p. m. and that they will be reappropriated by New York when Carleton Smith says, "This program has reached you through the facilities of the National Broadcasting Company." As the minute hand of the big control room clock creeps up to 12 the engineers listen attentively to the programs on the air.

At 9:59 p. m. they tell the engineers at the White House, "One minute, stand by!" One of the engineers raises his arm and quiet reigns. The President watches attentively. At 20 seconds to 10 p. m. the Red and Blue programs end with the familiar chimes. This is the signal for station identifications. The announcers in the Washington studios say, "This is WRC (or WMAL) in Washington." Simultaneously the engineers throw the switches which connect the White House through the central control to the networks. A quick check of tally lights assures them that the relays have operated satisfactorily. Then with eyes turned to the clock they watch the second hand. Exactly 20 seconds after the chimes ring one of them says quietly, "On the air White House." At the White House the engineer's arm falls and Carleton Smith begins his introduction.

The above explains what takes place along the black line running between the National Press Building and the White House when that one program only is concerned. Let us now consider the procedure when all of the black lines in the picture are involved. In this explanation one essential difference must be kept in mind. Above, the program was especially planned for broadcast. In the following we are describing how a feature event is "reported" to the radio audience. In the former case procedure, timing, etc., was under our control. In the following the facilities must be adapted to events, reporting them when and how they occur.

In one of the photographs adjoining the diagram is shown the portable broadcast equipment with two engineers at the controls and an announcer at the microphone. This picture is duplicated at each one of the little circles at the end of the black lines above which all converge on the central control in the National Press Building. Obviously the difficulties involved in controlling such a program are numerous as compared with a regular White House program.

Special Control Board.

Recognizing this the engineering department of the National Broadcasting Company has developed a "special events" control board. This board is also pictured on this page. It is admirably suited to accurate control of a complicated broadcast such as on inauguration day. Notice that only two men are seated before it. One man controls the engineering facilities, the other the continuity of the program material. Every second of the six hours they sit there switching the program smoothly from point to point or in case of a lull in activity to the studio orchestra.

In a previous paragraph I told you how each one of the black lines really represented three telephone lines and that one of these lines carried the program to the networks, the second carried the program back to the pickup point and is technically known as the "feedback" circuit, while the third was used simply as a telephone line. We are now in a position to understand the significance of this arrangement.

Each one of the lines appears as a small key on the special events control board and bears an identifying label such as "Capitol Steps," "Capitol Dome," "Peace Monument," "Old Post Office," "Treasury Steps," "White House North Portico," etc.

Any one or any combination of the above switches can be operated thus cutting any one or any combination of pickup points through to the air with a flip of the engineer's hand. The program is being fed back to all of the pickup points so that each announcer is able to follow the program as it is broadcast. It is thus possible for any announcer to carry on a conversation with any other announcer, the only requirement being that his broadcast line must be cut through to the air.

In addition it is possible for the program director to talk to the announcers without actually going on the air. This is possible because he is supplied with a microphone which he can connect to the feedback circuit by throwing a switch. If he desires to carry on a conversation with one of the announcers he signifies his intention to the engineer who throws the program line of that announcer to "monitor." They are thus able to carry on a conversation without actually appearing on the air.

This feature is very important since it is frequently necessary for the program director to outline to the various announcers particular points he wishes to emphasize. The third line remains exclusively in the engineer's hands. By its use the directing engineer is able to talk to all of the engineers on stationary locations, to prepare them for impending switch-overs and advise them on technical details. We thus see that complete and adequate control of the broadcast is made possible by this special events control board.

Short Wave.

One further point needs to be explained! The services of the blimp, the airplane and the automobile in the picture with dotted lines leading to the Washington Monument. How do we connect telephone lines to them? The answer is: We don't! In these units we actually utilize miniature compact broadcasting stations operating on what is technically known as short waves (you could hear them direct if your receiver is equipped for short-wave reception) and the dotted lines represent the path of the radio waves to the top of the Washington Monument, where is located a battery of short-wave receivers, two for each mobile unit.

The signals from the mobile units are picked up there and are then "piped" to the Press Building over the regular telephone circuits. Here again, to be strictly accurate, should be shown another set of dotted lines leading from the towers labeled WRC, W3XEK, to the three mobile units to mark the path of radio waves from short-wave transmitter W3XEK to the short-wave receivers in the mobile units. This transmitter also is connected to the feedback circuit and hence everything that is put on the feedback circuit is radiated by this transmitter. It is thus possible for the announcers in the mobile units to keep informed of the progress of the program and to carry on conversations with the program director without actually appearing on the air.

So far we have concerned ourselves with the details of picking up and co-ordinating the various points of observation into a smooth continuous program. Let us now turn our attention to how this program once produced is sent out to radio stations WRC and WMAL and to the Red and Blue Networks. You will observe in the picture that all the thin black lines have arrows pointing to the National Press Building and terminate in the upper side of the box so labeled. On the underside are four lines leading, respectively, to WMAL, Red Network, Blue Network and to WRC-W3XEK.

Each of these lines represents two telephone lines and is connected by an intricate system of relays and amplifiers to the output of the special events control board. One of these lines is used for program transmission and the other as a regular telephone.

(In his article next Sunday Mr. Merryman will explain how these lines are utilized to carry the program to each of the stations associated with the National Broadcasting Company.)

Music, Unlike Other Arts, Is Not Affected by Contemporary Proletarian Theme

Influence Of Soviet Is Negligible

Composers Add Nothing to Stature by Writing of Current Scene.

Argument That Artist Should Express Spirit of Age Presented.

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Thus far music has been the least affected of all the arts by the application of the so-called proletarian theory of esthetics. According to its advocates, this theory amounts to an ukase that art is useless unless it serves as propaganda for social and political ideology. But there are still plenty of conservatives to risk exile by defying this edict and maintaining that the sole purpose of art is propaganda for beauty and spirituality, which may not be utilitarian in the crass meaning of the word, but are certainly useful in the development of character both individual and communal.

Most of the contemporary compositions conforming to the proletarian pattern have had a Soviet provenance, although it can be plausibly argued that such a work as Honegger's "Pacific 231," imitative of a railroad locomotive, comes into the category by glorifying machinery. One doubts, however, that Honegger had anything more in mind than his own excitement over the idea of personified speed. On the other hand, there can be little uncertainty over the meaning of Mosolov's "Iron Foundry," so obvious is the identification of the music of machines with the hymn of labor.

The strongest argument advanced by the champions of proletarianism in art is that the creative artist should express the spirit of his age. Just why this obligation exists is not made clear, but they insist that it must be done. They would say that the "Iron Foundry," for example, is a forerunner of the music of the future, and that composers will turn more and more toward the materialistic. They argue that the age of romance and sentiment is over and done with, that the composer of today and tomorrow, living in an environment of standardization and "efficiency," must necessarily abandon his subjective dreams and imaginings and get down to writing hard-headed and objective music.

Experience has taught the human race that the spirit of any particular age is detectable only by the backward gaze of the historian, and that the average person living in that age is aware not of "the" spirit but of many spirits in active ferment. It is not until after events have happened that the historian can trace the impulses behind them and formulate those impulses into a hypothetical time-spirit. In every age there has been, and will be, a conflict of oppositions and from their impact results the line of movement taken by the social mass.

It is impossible for us, caught up at the moment in the whirl of doctrines and panaceas, to say what the spirit of our age is or whither it is tending. Detaching ourselves as best we can from the confusion, we behold contradictory forces at work: patriotism opposing internationalism, communism at odds with fascism, privilege making angry gestures at the underprivileged, low-brows grimacing at high-brows. We observe that our civilization is becoming ever more realistic, more dependent on mechanism and less tolerant of elegance and ornament, and at the same time we cannot help noticing that on the emotional side it is as shamelessly sentimental as the Victorian epoch which it derides. Is there anything more maudlin in old-fashioned romanticism than the lachrymose crooners and wailing torch-singers of the radio?

To insist that composers of today express in their music the spirit of the time is to be ridiculously logical on a false premise. Composers of the past who have yielded to such a mandate gained nothing thereby save the emolument. Beethoven wrote "The Battle of Vittoria" and Wagner composed a march for the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia in 1876, and neither added thereby a millimeter to their artistic stature, though they were supposedly celebrating important events.

It is the function of the composer to express not the externalities of his day but the fundamental humanism of his age and enduring essence of spirituality which is independent of time. Great music which has come down to us from the past owes its viability to that essence. No one can foretell what the verdict of posterity will be upon the music of the twentieth century or what works will be selected as representative of our age, but in all probability the choice will fall rather on the symphonies of Sibelius than on descriptions of factories and locomotives.

Josef Hofmann, eminent Polish-American pianist (below), who will be heard as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra on Tuesday evening in Constitution Hall with Eugene Ormandy conducting. Tito Schipa, famous Italian tenor of the Metropolitan Opera (left), who will be soloist with the National Symphony Orchestra this afternoon in Constitution Hall at the opening concert of the season under the direction of Hans Kindler.

Symphony Orchestra Starts Sixth Season This Afternoon

Hans Kindler Will Conduct First of Concert Series at Constitution Hall; Tito Schipa, Soloist, Will Sing Two Arias.

Under the direction of Hans Kindler, who has conducted the organization since its foundation in 1931, the National Symphony Orchestra will begin its sixth season at 4 o'clock this afternoon in Constitution Hall, with Tito Schipa, Metropolitan tenor, as soloist. With a schedule of twelve Sunday concerts, nine widweek concerts, ten concerts for young people, serjes in Baltimore and Richmond, and several short tours of the Eastern States, the orchestra enters upon its busiest year.

Tito Schipa will be heard tomorrow in two arias—"Una furtiva lagrima" from Donizetti's "L'Elisir d'Amore" and "Il mio tesoro" from Mozarts "Don Giovanni"—and in a group of lyrics with piano accompaniment by Federico Longas: "Amarilli" (Caccini), "Pesca d'Amore" (Barthelmy), "Ninna Nanna a Liana" (R. Bellini), and "Marechiare" (Tosti).

The concert will open with the stirring "Entrance or the Gods into Walhalla" from "Das Rheingold." This will be followed by Haydn's symphony in G major, No. 88. Mary Howe, resident composer, will be honored by the first performance of her latest work, "Spring Pastoral." Another American composer, Harl McDonald, will be represented by the first performance in Washington of his "Rhumba." The program will close with Liszt's symphonic poem, "Les Preludes!" played in observance of the composer's birth and the fiftieth anniversary of his death.

Replacing Frank Gittelson, who resigned last spring to devote his time to other work, Harry Farbman, a distinguished American violinist, will make his local debut as concertmaster of the National Symphony. He comes from New York, where he has served for several seasons as concertmaster of the National Orchstral Association. The complete membership of the orchestra is announced by George Gaul, personnel manager, as follows:

Violins: Harry Farbman, Bernard Robbins, Raul da Costa, Owen Lusak, Milton Schwartz, Paul Brightenburg, Walter de Lillo, Sam Udren, Leo Stein, Duward Bowersox, William Fallcucci, Francois Garziglia, Samuel Goldscher, Antonio Nobile, Charles Granofski, Jeno Sevely, Walter Nessul, Alfonso Rossi, Rufino Iula, William Jacob, Herbert Sokolove, Herman Rabinovitz, Jacob Rosenblum, Fritz Balzer, Albert Pergament, Edward Pratt, George Gaul.

Violas: Arthur Granick, George Wargo, Hendrik Essers, Samuel Feldman, Carl Holzapfel, Fritz Maile, Jerome Rosenthal, Herman Rakemann, Anton Pointner.

Violoncellos: Howard Mitchell, William Brennard, Roland Cresswell, Charles Cohen, Misha Niedelman, Joseph Harrison, Marcel Ancher, Alberto Martins.

Doublebasses: Milton Kestenbaum, John di Janni, David Koch, Frank Eney, Charles Cook, Emilio di Palma, Lazare Demetri, Daniel Hanlon.

Harp: Sylvia Meyer.

Flutes: Harold Bennett, Kenton Terry, Dominic Iascone.

Oboes: Harold Gomberg, William Schnable.

Clarinets: Gilbert Stange, Paul Garrett, Moris Bratman.

Bassoons: Leonard Sharrow, Franklin Biskey.

Horns: Jacob Wishnow, Attilio di Palma, Dominic Famoso, Nazareno Cipriani.

Trumpets: Lloyd Geisler, Charles Mueller, Raymond Peters.

Trombones: Robert Clark, Edward Gummel, Allen Ostrander.

Tuba: William Lansinger.

Percussion: Walter Howe, Carroll Bratman, Merlin Crawford.

Quartet's Debut Fixed for Friday

Coolidge Foundation Singers Will Present Program Honoring Founders.

Under the provisions of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, the recently established Coolidge Quartet will make its first public appearance in the auditorium of the Library of Congress on Friday afternoon at 3:30, presenting the annual Founder's Day program.

The members of the new organization, who need no introduction to chamber music auditors in Washington, are William Kroll, Nikolai Berezovski, Nicholas Moldovan and Victor Gottlieb. Mr. Kroll, formerly with the Elshuco Trio and South Mountain Quartet, has been associated from the first with Mrs. Coolidge's Pittsfield concerts. Mr. Berezovski, whose sextet for clarinets, strings and piano received its premiere at the Washington Festival of 1926, took part in a number of the foundation's concerts last season.

Mr. Moldavan brings to the ensemble experience gained with the Flonzaley and Stradivarius Quartets. Mr. Gottlieb, young American pupil of Felix Salmond, joins the group through the courtesy of the Philadelphia Orchestra, with which he was until quite recently connected.

Friday's program will consist of Haydn's Quartet in C, Op. 74, No. 1; Berezovski's Quartet, Op. 16, and Beethoven's Quartet in B flat, Op. 130.

Admission is free, but only by tickets, which may be obtained, until the supply is exhausted, at the T. Arthur Smith Concert Bureau, 910 G street, beginning tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock. Telephone and mail requests cannot be accepted. Because of the limited capacity of the hall, persons unable to use their tickets are asked to return them before the day of the concert.

Kedrov Quartet To Appear Here

Russian Group Will Sing on November 24.

Returning to Washington after an absence of several years, the famous Kedrov Quartet will give a concert in Constitution Hall on Tuesday evening, November 24, under the management of the T. Arthur Smith Concert Bureau. The members of this vocal organization are I. K. Denisov, T. F. Kasakov, N. H. Kedrov and K. E. Kaidanov.

For nearly 25 years this group has been popular in this country and abroad. Through long association the singers have attained a blending of tones suggestive of the quality of a fine string quartet. Their programs, drawn from the rich store of Russian folk music, are varied and interesting.

Marine Band Opens Series Wednesday

Under the direction of Capt. Taylor Branson, the United States Marine Band Orchestra will open its season with a concert Wednesday at 8 p. m. in the Marine Barracks auditorium. Musician Harold Cardy, horn player, will be the soloist in the following program:

Overture, "In Autumn" (Greig), Suite No. 4, "Mozartiana," Op. 61 (Chaikovski), Concerto in E flat major for horn and orchestra (Mozart), Symphony No. 5, Op. 82 (Sibelius), Symphonic Poem, "Stenka Razin" (Glazunov).

On Tuesday the Marine Band will participate in the Navy Day exercises at the Navy Yard and at the Paul Jones statue. On Wednesday the weekly "Shut-Ins Dream Hour" will be played at 3 p. m. in the barracks auditorium.

New Mozart Concerto Album Promises to Become Favorite

Record Presents Edwin Fischer and Barbirolli's Chamber Orchestra; Number Is Played With the Utmost Understandng.

By Jay Walz.

Unless you don't like piano concertos, or Mozart, the new album which presents Edwin Fischer and John Barbirolli's chamber orchestra playing Mozart's concerto in E-flat major (Victor Album M-316) would in no time become a favorite.

It's one of that group of pieces in which you always find just what you'd like to play for company—and then in between parties, for your own good, every once in a while. This concerto is not the soul-rousing work that the Beethoven "Emperor" and the Brahms piano concerto No. 2 are, yet it's a bet that, once heard, it will line itself up along with those mightier ones in your esteem.

Fischer plays Mozart with the utmost understanding. You never find him driving through the score, impatient for a climax. You don't find him striving for big moments. He is concerned with the style, as was Mozart. There is always the impulse to comment on his music, when it's played well, by saying "it had class." The remark is not so far out of place. Listen, for example, to the sensitive andante movement.

This concerto is catalogued as K-482, and was composed just after the opera "Marriage of Figaro." It was written for a pupil, Babette Ployer. The orchestration he wrote for it is for strings, and two each of flutes, clarinets, bassoons, horns, trumpets and drums.

Support Is Commendable.

The instrumental support led by Mr. Barbirolli is altogether commendable. It has style, too, and at the same time supplies that strength which, though needed in the finished composition, might have been a burden if given to the soloist's score.

Another great joy of the work and of this performance must not be overlooked—its spontaneity. Mozart wrote beautiful melodies—that's not news. But sometimes he gave himself more freedom with them—sometimes he didn't fit them too rigidly to the pattern. This concerto was apparently written in one of those times. The tunes begin and continue until he feels like dropping them. In the beginning, for example, the orchestra, instead of introducing as is usual the two themes of the movement, plays along with only one. And when the piano comes in, it is to start a new subject.

Before leaving the Mozartian spell for some modern works on the shelf of new discs, we will mention a single Victor record on which Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra present Vivaldi's concerto grosso in D minor. The music sounds like a Bach transcription. It is hard to say whether Vivaldi or Stokowski is responsible for this. In either case there is some pretty good music in it—some rich orchestral coloring, and some extra fine flute passages on the second side.

With all the modern unconventionalities he knows, Darus Milhaud, one of the French "Six," tackled the ancient Greek plays. And we have his incidental music for Aeschylus' "Choephori" in a two-record Columbia album (X-64), performed by the Antwerp Chorus and Orchestra.

Is Highly Effective.

This is highly effective music, in that it would undoubtedly heighten the tone of the drama for which it was written. The "Procession," for example, is the basis for a powerful episode. Milhaud's music at first seems the strangest of the strange. Yet, because it is so far from what you expect, it frees you from drawing the conventional up alongside. Instead you think only in terms of the music in front of you—and you soon get used to that. It is very much worth while to give it a thorough hearing.

Sir Thomas Beecham and the London Philharmonic give us, on another single-Columbia disc, some more Sibelius. It is "Festivo," No. 3 of "Scenes of Historiques." The structure of this has lines characteristic of the sweeping Sibelius. However, since it's 'tempo di bolero,' there are certain frivolities that come as a surprise. It is highly enjoyable, and sometimes almost convincing as Spanish music. The performance is a good one.

Alexander Tansman's "Triptyque" for string orchestra, as performed by the Curtis Chamber Music Ensemble, is available on a single Victor record. This piece sounds pointless and empty. That may be because I don't have the hang of it. I wouldn't mind working on it a little longer, if there was any hope of reward in the event of victory. The ensemble seems to do a good job.

Sklarevski Plays Recital Tomorrow

Alexandria Sklarevski, Russian pianist and faculty member of Peabody Conservatory, will give a recital tomorrow evening in Barker Hall, under the auspices of the Washington Music Teachers' Association. He will play the same program which he presented in Town Hall, New York, October 13, when his artistry received commendation from Pitts Sanborn, Julian Seaman, Francis Perkins, Hyman Taubman, Samuel Chotzinov and other metropolitan critics.

The program is as follows: Variations from Sonata in A major (Mozart), La Poule (Rameau), Capriccio in E major (D. Scarlatti), Sonata in C minor, Op. 111 (Beethoven), Etudes in A flat major, A minor, F minor and E minor (Chopin), Prelude in D major (Rakhmaninov), Gopak (Musorgski-Rakhmaninov), Arabesques on "The Blue Danube" (Strauss-Schultz-Evler).

Simon to Lead Quartet.

Otto Torney Simon will present his Orpheus Quartet (Hazel Gem Hughes, soprano; Elaine Sebring Ford, contralto; Jesse Nusseay, tenor; George Randolph Balthis, basso) at the Y. W. C. A. on Sunday afternoon, November 1, at 5 o'clock. The program will include two groups of quartets and solo and duet numbers.

He will also give at the Arts Club on Thursday evening, November 5, his scenario-lecture on Beethoven, entitled "Eroica."

Philadelphians To Give Concert Here Tuesday

Eugene Ormandy to Conduct Orchestra in First Event of Season.

With Eugene Ormandy occupying his new position as permanent conductor, the Philadelphia Orchestra will give its first Washington concert of the season at 8:45 p. m. Tuesday in Constitution Hall, under the local management of the T. Arthur Smith Concert Bureau. The soloist will be Josef Hofmann, who will be heard in the F minor pianoforte concerto of Chopin.

The program will begin with the first local performance of Lucien Cailliet's transcription of Bach's organ prelude and fugue in F minor. Mr. Cailliet, who was born in France in 1891 and is a graduate of the Dijon Conservatory, is a clarinetist in the Philadelphia Orchestra. The prelude and fugue which he has scored for orchestra was a product of Bach's later Weimar period, when he was influenced by the more severe of the Italian church composers.

The prelude, a movement of 86 measures, has a main section of 72 bars, followed by a presto passage in 2-4 time, a dramatic pause, and a concluding cadenza in adagio tempo. The fugue, which is considered one of Bach's greatest at this period of his life, is begun by strings alone, the violas propounding the terse, impressive subject. The finale builds up to one of those overwhelming climaxes that characterize Bach's greater organ works.

Schubert's C major symphony, like his unfinished symphony in B minor, was never heard by the composer in a concert performance. It was completed in March of 1828, during Schubert's last spurt of creative activity, and eight months later he was dead. In 1838, Schumann, on a visit to Vienna, rescued the symphony from manuscripts and took it to Leipzig, where the work was performed for the first time under the baton of Mendelssohn.

The symphony, "of heavenly length," in Schumann's enthusiastic phrase, has many beauties. The second theme of the first movement has a flavor faintly Oriental. The leading melody of the second movement has a lilting loveliness that could be only Schubert's. There is a scherzo in rapid waltz time, and the finale abounds in sparkling vivacity with the feeling of dance predominant.

Opera Quartet To Give Concert On November 8

Members of Edward Johnson's Staff Will Appear at Constitution Hall.

Four young American members of Edward Johnson's operatic staff will come to Washington as the Metropolitan Opera Quartet and will give a concert on Sunday afternoon, November 8, in Constitution Hall, under the management of Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey. The singers are Josephine Antoine, Helen Olheim, Joseph Bentonelli and Julius Huehn.

They will have Edward Harris as their accompanist in a program of arias, duets and quartets from such standard operas as La Forza del Destino, Carmen, Lucia di Lammermoor, Der Fliegende Hollaender, Martha, Les Contes d'Hoffmann, La Boheme, Il Barbiere di Siviglia, Samson et Dalila and Rigoletto.

Miss Antoine made her Metropolitan debut last January as Philine in Mignon, and received an ovation after her second-act aria, "Je suis Titania." A native of Colorado, she is still in her twenties and on the threshold of a promising career.

Miss Olheim was born in Buffalo, and arrived at the Metropolitan via the Eastman School of Music, the American Opera Company, and radio work. She was one of the featured singers in the "Showboat" broadcast. During the last season she sang in 22 Metropolitan performances and six Sunday evening concerts.

Joseph Bentonelli had 12 years of operatic experience in Europe before returning to the United States in 1934 to join the Chicago Civic Opera. He was added to the Metropolitan roster last winter; three days after his first audition and with no opportunity for rehearsal, he submitted for an indisposed tenor and scored an instant success.

Julius Huehn made his bow on the Metropolitan stage last December, and in the course of his first season sang Escamillo opposite Rosa Ponselle's Carmen. He is the tallest singer and the youngest barytone in the company to which he came by way of the Juilliard School of Music and a national radio contest.

Malda Fani to Give Lecture on Singing

Malda Fani, Italian lyric soprano, will give a lecture in singing on October 28, at 8 p. m., in the Salle de Recital, 1325 G street. Admission will be free to vocal students and to others interested in the priniciples of bel canto.

A graduate of the Rome Conservatory and a pupil of the distinguished barytone, Battistini, Mme. Fani made her operatic debut in "Tosca" in the Teatro Costanzi, Rome. Engagements followed at the San Carlo, Naples, where she sang the title role in "Fedora;" at La Scala, Milan, in Florence and at Monte Carlo.

From Europe, Mme. Fani went to Mexico, and at the invitation of the government taught in the national conservatory. During her residence there she made frequent visits to Washington, where she has become well known in diplomatic and social circles, and has made many public appearances.

Margaret Tolson, pianist, and Ina Holtzscheiter, lyric soprano, will present the program at the fourth evening concert in the Roosevelt Hotel tonight.

Cansino, Juanita Will Dance Here

Costume Recital Is Slated at Willard Nov. 7.

Paco Cansino and his partner, Senorita Juanita, will appear in the Willard Hotel ballroom on Saturday, November 7, in a costume recital of Spanish dances, under the management of Beren-Brook Artists. A native of Madrid, Paco is a member of one of the oldest families of professional dancers in Spain. In the days of the monarchy the Cansinos were the favorite dancers of the Queen mother, Maria Christina, and always figured prominently in the ballet at the Royal Opera.

Paco's five brothers and sister—Rafael, Angel, Jose, Edurado, Antonio and Elisa—were brought to the United States by Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, who introduced them in private programs. They attracted the attention of New York managers, and have been featured extensively in theatrical and cinema engagements.

Glee Clubs Combining For O'Hara Presentation

Under the direction of Harlan Randall, the combined glee clubs of the University of Maryland will give a concert of compositions by Geoffrey O'Hara on Wednesday evening in the agriculture auditorium at College Park. Mr. O'Hara will be present as the honored guest and will give a talk at the piano on "Everyone a Composer." The following numbers are announced: "I Love a Little Cottage," "Where Heaven Is," "Give a Man a Horse He Can Ride," "A Little Close Harmony," "My Angelique," "The Wee Little Home I Love," "Do you Fear the Wind?" "The Sexton of Dumbledownday" and "My Country." The program also includes Mr. O'Hara's arrangements of "Old Man River" and "America."

Szantho, Thomas Booked in Concert At Capital Dec. 28

After a summer of singing and studying abroad, Enid Szantho, contralto at Vienna Staatsoper and Covent Garden, will return to the United States for a full season of concert activities. She will be heard in Washington on December 28, when Mrs. Lawrence Townsend will present her in a joint recital with John Charles Thomas at the Mayflower Hotel.

Originally scheduled for participation in the festivals at Bayreuth and Salzburg last summer, Mme. Szantho cancelled the engagements in order to devote her time to preparing the role of Clytemnestra in Richard Strauss' opera, "Elektra," which she will sing in concert version with the Cleveland orchestra this season.

One of the most youthful and gifted of operatic contraltos, Mme. Szantho was called "a young Schumann-Heink" by the late Siegfried Wagner. She came to this country for the first time last winter to appear as soloist with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony. Her success was so marked that she extended her stay to four months, gave a number of recitals in New York and other cities, and was guest artist on an orchestral broadcast.

Musical Notes of the Week

Beginning November 10, meetings of the Felicia Rybier Music Club will be held on the first Tuesday of each month throughout the season.

Two new British operas, "Pickwick," by Albert Coates, and "The Wild Boar," by Roger Quilter, will be produced this season in London at Covent Garden.

Organization of the American Negro Opera Association has been made public. The director-general is Penman Lovingood, whose opera, "Menelek of Abyssinia," will be the first work of the group. It will be produced in November.

Sophocles Papas will present the second of a series of students' recitals tomorrow afternoon at 4:30 o'clock in his studio. Those taking part are Phyllis Nichols, Carol Mitchell, Carl Wismer, Vincent Strand, Merle Hite, Harry Broderick and Solon Bacas.

Under the direction of John R. Monroe, the Concordia Cantata Choir of 35 voices will sing Bach's "The Lord Is a Sun and Shield" at 8 o'clock this evening in Concordia Church, Twentieth and G streets northwest. The soloists are Cathreen Carrico, Henrietta Flynn and Howard Samsel.

Helen McGrew, young Washington pianiste, will give a recital in the Willard Hotel on November 18. As winner of the Naumberg Musical Foundation prize, she made her New York debut in 1930, and has concertized in this country and abroad.

Under direction of Robert Frederick Freund, the Gypsy Chorus will present the program for the hour of music at the Y. W. C. A. this afternoon at 5 o'clock.

Anna Benson Kochersperger, Swedish mezzo-soprano, and Mary Izant Couch, pianist, will be presented at the Women's City Club on Wednesday evening under the direction of Gladys Middlemiss. The program includes old songs of Sweden, songs by Mozart, Bizet and Massenet; piano etudes of Chopin and Pachulski, and compositions by Stojowski, Ravel and Dohnanyi.

Puccini's "Tosca" will be the subject of Arturo Papalardo's second lecture-recital on Tuesday evening at 8:30 in the Washington College of Music. Among assisting illustrators will be Emanuel Geneares, winner of the "Bobby Breen" contest here.

Dorothy Radde Emery, resident composer, has been appointed by Phyllis Fergus Hoyt, president of the National League of American Pen Women, as chairman of music for the first "celebrity breakfast" of the season on Saturday, November 7. Another American composer, Geoffrey O'Hara, will be the toastmaster. Among the artists to appear on the program is the Chicago soprano, Evelyn Ewert.

Under direction of George F. Kortzenborn, the Washington Oratorio Society will resume rehearsals tomorrow evening in Langley Junior High School, First and T streets northeast. Preparations are being made for the fourth annual presentation of Handel's "Messiah" during the Christmas season. Applications for membership are being accepted by the director at 1145 Connecticut avenue and at the school immediately before rehearsal.

Myron Whitney, president of the Washington Choral Society, has returned from his summer sojourn in New England, and will shortly call a meeting of the advisory committee. It is planned to present Brahms' "Requiem" on January 28 in Washington Cathedral. Louis A. Potter is conducting rehearsals on Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock in Central High School. Auditions for new members are held during the half hour preceding rehearsal.

Fritz Kreisler To Play Revised Fantasia Here

Schumann Number Will Be Given, Also Paganini's D Major Concerto.

Following last week's announcement that Fritz Kreisler planned to introduce to American auditors his revision of Schumann's C major fantasia and his new arrangement of the first movement of Paganini's D major concerto at a concert of the Chicago Orchestra this week, comes the good news that the eminent violinist will play both of these works at his recital tomorrow night in Constitution Hall. The recital is the first attraction to be presented this season by Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey.

As related on this page last Sunday, Kreisler's revision of the Schumann work is the fulfillment of an ambition stimulated more than 40 years ago by Johannes Brahms. The fantasia, which had been performed only by Joachim, to whom it is dedicated, showed signs of the composer's incipient insanity, and Joachim predicted that it would not survive. Brahms, however, thought that the work could be preserved for posterity by a judicious revision and an elaboration of the middle section. Kreisler's revision (the third attempt at reconstruction) was completed last summer.

During his long career Kreisler has repeatedly enriched violin literature with his own compositions, his pastiches of sixteenth century composers and his transcriptions of music by other writers. His latest achievement the restoration of the Schumann fantasia, will still further endear him to music lovers.

The complete program for tomorrow night's recital is as follows: Fantasia in C major, Op. 131 (Schumann), Adagio and Fugue in G minor (Bach), Konzertstueck: first movement of Concerto in D major (Paganini), cavatina, malaguena, rondo on a theme by Beethoven, La Gitana and Caprice Viennois (Kreisler). Carl Lampson will be at the piano.

Ross to Direct Capital Choirs

N. Y. Cantorum Conductor Will Open Local Series Tuesday Afternoon.

Hugh Ross, conductor of the New York Schola Cantorum, has been engaged to direct a group of local church choirs to be known as the Liturgical Choral Union. The organization is founded on broad educational lines and offers an opportunity for organists, choirmasters and singers to gain additional knowledge.

Beginning on Tuesday, a course of five monthly lectures will be given for organists and choir directors at 5 p. m. in the Church of the Epiphany. On Tuesday evenings at 8, the choirs will rehearse with Mr. Ross. The Liturgical Choral Union plans to give a public concert on April 6 in the great choir of the National Cathedral.

Organists and their choirs thus far engaged in the undertaking are: Adolf Torovski (Epiphany), Charlotte Klein (St. Margaret's), Percy Burness (Ascension), and Walter H. Nash (St. Alban's). For the present the headquarters of the organization are at 1723 De Sales street.

Capital Group to Offer Fe Alf in Modern Dance

Under the auspices of the Washington New Dance Group, Fe Alf, distinguished exponent of the modern dance, will present a program on Sunday evening, November 1, in the Wardman Park Theater. Beginning her training with Jurt Jooss when she was 12, Miss Alf entered the Hagemann School in Hamburg two years later. After graduation she studied for three years at the Wigman School in Dresden, and in 1931 she performed for six months in Munich as a member of Mary Wigman's group.

Late in the same year Miss Alf came to New York to be assistant to Hanya Holm in the Wigman School there, and in 1932 she opened her own studio. She has made frequent appearances in New York and Boston, and took part in the Juilliard School production of "Joseph and His Brethren." John Martin, dance critic for the New York Times, pronounces Miss Alf to be "a most engaging artist, fundamentally a dancer to her fingertips."

The World of Art—Criticism and Comment on Exhibitions, Old Masters Reappraised

U.S. Building Decorations Put on View

Sculpture and Paintings of Treasury Service Shown in N. Y.

Chaim Gross Is Designer of One of the Most Imposing Pieces.

By Alice Graeme.

An exhibition of sculpture and paintings for Federal buildings opened recently in New York in Whitney Museum of Art.

Though sculpture was not the major part of the display, an important group of some 30 items was shown. Both the mural projects, and sculpture, designed as embellishments for public buildings, are part of the work being done under the Treasury Department art program, administered as a branch of the supervising architect's office.

It functions not as an unrelated activity but as work co-ordinated with the established Federal building plan, and is in close affiliation with the Government's architects.

Forbes Watson, writing in the introduction to the present exhibition's catalogue, well expressed the significance of this relationship of the arts, when he said: "The present program is the first completely organized plan to co-ordinate painting, sculpture and architecture. This co-operation between the three great arts is what gives the program its essential character of permanence and its social and educational force."

The appointments for sculptors have been made through competitions, regional and national, with both sculptors and architects on the juries. That the Government's most important commissions are open to all artists of quality, judged by their peers, means an important impetus to the development of sculpture in this country.

Mail Carrier Statues.

One of the largest of the commissions is for the 12 statues of mail carriers, from different periods of our history, which are to be placed in niches in the reception room of the Postmaster General in Washington, D. C. As much variation as possible appears in the several statues, as not only has the element of time been considered but there are also figures to represent the carriers of different territories, of Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands. The finished material in which these figures are cast is aluminum, dull painted—a highly decorative medium.

Chaim Gross, winner of the competition for the Alaska snowshoe carrier has designed one of the most forceful of the group. The problem of representing a figure dressed in clothes of heavy skins was not easy, and required skillful handling. Yet Gross' design of a figure hooded and muffled against the cold has much dignity and appropriateness. The graceful form of a snowshoe, which the carrier holds at his side, is a part of the statue.

Concetta Scaravaglione designed a figure to represent the railway mail of 1863, and has succeeded in creating a statue of great charm. The man is standing at ease, his shirt open at the neck, a mail bag over his shoulder, and there is a pleasant rhythm of curving lines in his pose. The face is relaxed, almost indolent, with its drooping mustaches and parted hair, but there is a naturalness and simplification of form that give an effect of great harmony.

The stage driver of Sidney Waugh is in altogether different mood. Here stands a dramatic figure, in a great coat, whip in hand, with the hard, set face of a man prepared for the difficulties of those early days. The head is fine portraiture, and the whole stance, and compelling air of the figure one of confidence and strength.

The jaunty figure of the Hawaiian postman, by Louis Slobodkin, is capable, and pleasingly done; the Colonial foot postman, by Berta Margoulies, with his three-cornered hat, has much to recommend it; and Heinz Warneke's expressman, with a pistol at his belt, stands squarely and solidly.

Two Other Statues Planned.

For the same building both Paul Manship and William Zorach have designed statues, Manship, a figure of Samuel Osgood, and Zorach, one of Benjamin Franklin.

The pose in the latter is naturalistic, with the hands raised toward the shoulders and the cape, which falls back and in long folds. However, there is a lack of Zorach's usual fervor, and the statue, though competent, is not marked with a great distinction.

A number of bas-reliefs, placques and small sculpture to be used as decorative features, are also on view. The splendid overdoor panel designed by Helene Sardeau for the Ossining, N. Y., Postoffice, is unfortunately only shown in very small scale. The design, one of the most successful of the different panels, shows sailors landing mail in a skiff from one of the old-time Hudson River boats. The high relief of the figures, boat and wharf develop interesting shadows, and the whole mood is well sustained. This panel, in its actual size of some 6 by 4 feet, is now installed at Ossining on the wall for which it was designed.

The work of William McVey for the Ohio PWA Housing Project is a decorative scheme of seven panels for the facade of a building in Cleveland. The legendary figure of Paul Bunyan appears in the center, in low relief, with three smaller panels on either side. The arrangement and design is well carried out, with some originality. For an outdoor ampitheater Richard Barthe has carved a frieze of Negro figures in ballet attitudes.

Unusual Design.

Another artist, Domenico Mortellito, has tried an unusual medium for the decoration of a wall. He has designed a large panel of carved and lacquered linoleum, with the motif of Indian ceremonial dancers. From California, comes the work of Michael von Meyer, who has carved an overdoor in wood, with a number of figures relating to the early history of that State.

"Railway Mail Carrier—1863," by Concetta Scaravaglione, one of the group of figures designed as embellishments for public buildings, is shown at the Whitney Museum of Art in New York in the Treasury Department art program exhibition.

Studio House Shows Work Of 49 Contemporary Artists

Studio House is exhibiting, until November 7, a group of original prints by the American Artists Group. These lithographs, wood cuts and etchings by leading artists are being distributed on a plan and principle that is close to the early traditions of graphic art.

Instead of a print-maker issuing only a limited number of prints from one plate, these artists believe that prints should be sold in unlimited editions. In this way it is possible to bring the price within the range of any buyer. The print medium, after all, is planned for multiplication and provides the one product of the artist that can be widely distributed.

There are prints of every type in the current showing—landscapes, figure studies and a number of genre, and sport subjects. Wanda Gag, with her delightful and quite typical "Winter Garden;" the subtle and charming lithograph, "Side Show," by Andree Ruellan; Howard Cook's "Little Dolphin" are among the most interesting.

Several artists well known in Washington also have contributed prints to the group. "Chess," by Nicolai Cikovsky, is drawn from the larger oil of that subject which is currently on view at the Corcoran Gallery of Art; George Biddle also shows an amusing Southern composition with figures, and there is a good example, in "High and Dry," of the work of Prentiss Taylor.

In connection with this exhibition, Taylor is planning to give an illustrated lecture at Studio House November 2 at 8:30 p. m.

Two young sculptors, Henry Kreis and Charles Rudy, have both designed sculpture for the decoration of the new Bronx Postoffice.

Rudy's unusual figure of Noah, holding a young faun in his arms, shows both sophistication and delicasy, in a most pleasing design. Henry Kreis is an artist of considerable experience, and has been assistant to both Paul Manship and C. P. Jennewein. His figure of a Mother and Child, shows the simplicity and taste of an artist who works thoroughly and with talent. Both these sculptors were winners in a large competition for the appointment to design these decorations. Kreis shows another figure of a Mother and Child which he has done for the PWA Housing Project at Stamford, Conn. These two statues, both of tall, slender women with young children beside them, are much in the same manner.

Warneke Piece Praised.

The work of Heinz Warneke for the Harlem River Houses, of the New York City PWA Housing Project, is certainly as fine as anything in the exhibition. His "Bears," cast in dark colored composition stone, are massive, and yet delicately interpretive. There is feeling and quality here of a very high order. The composition of the two big animals, seem rolled into one large block of bear, solid and decorative.

His "Penquin" too, is most engaging, and both animals will make effective outdoor decorations. Warneke's "Mother and Child" also planned for the Harlem River Houses, is a superb piece of work. The woman is half kneeling, holding a small child with both her hands, a little dog rests his head against her side. The rounded contours, and the warm, ample quality of the whole thing, give a feeling of primitive harmony and earthy tranquility. The group stands over life-size, and is in terra-cotta, a medium which Mr. Warneke studied in Germany.

Again to quote from Watson's preface in regard to the quality of the exhibition "It is a social and realistic expression rather than the exercise of a highly specialized estheticism." The work is vitally alive, and part and parcel with contemporary life in its many phases. Its interpreters are men whose roots are in America, and who already have shown the promise of fine accomplishment with native, national flavor.

Famous El Greco Work Among Missing Spanish Art Treasures

Painter's 'Visitation' Now at Fogg Museum at Harvard University.

By Sibilla Skidelsky,
Art Editor.

Harvard, Mass., Oct. 24.—At the Fogg Museum, Harvard University, wandering from El Greco's tragic "Agony in the Garden" to the newly-acquired "Visitation," one cannot help recalling involuntarily that other canvas, his supreme work, "The Burial of Count Orgaz," in Toledo, at the Church of Santo Tome.

It has been several times reported that this painting, which is among the greatest of all times, had not been found at its usual place when rebel Spanish troops entered Toledo.

If creation and destruction of works of art are accepted as watermarks for the value of a civilization, then certainly the disappearance of Greco's masterpiece will be a terrible indictment against us.

"The Burial of Count Orgaz," which ranks besides Michelangelo's "Last Judgment" and Leonardo's "Cena" in its achievement as a painting, is besides this perhaps more than a wonderful work of art. There is about it a strange disembodied spirituality expressed by ordinary technical means—not insanity, as many have said—but something akin to a miracle. It may be a super-sensitiveness exalted into mystical fervor, a hallucinating intensity of faith which is expressed through extraordinary colors, elongation of figures, distortion of forms. To those who are religious the painting must convey emotion of the rarest type. But to those who are not it seems to contain some subconscious mysticism within us unexpressible to our very selves. In that it is a miracle.

El Greco's other works also contain that peculiar spirituality, but this one was his most complete creation. Can an epoch which destroys a similar painting profess horror and contempt for the madness and blindness of Inquisition years? But let them perish—the million millions, the myriad myriads—let them perish with faith in some remote ideal, if one artist can crystallize on a canvas whatever of god-like may still be latent in mankind! Such works are our redeeming monuments.

A certain similarity of historical turning points is one of the causes for our epoch's interest in El Greco. Interest which could not help the destruction of his famous canvas, but interest still, both among scholars and public. El Greco is considered "the" great modern painter.

He is the only one among masters that was recognized as such only in the nineteenth century. If we now could have a great contemporary modern master he could not possibly be in spirit any more modern than Greco. The rare quality and intensity of the latter's depiction of human torment makes him immensely suitable to our era.

For Greco's torment—though it was one of faith, and our epoch is not religious—could have taken any other form without losing from its essential tragic sense. It is simply the exaltation of suffering. Even in his ecstatic representation of Paradise we find no joyful state of bliss but suffering divinized into a sublimely ardent flame of adoration. Can there be anything more modern than the "Visitation" of the Fogg Museum?

The possessions of that museum are considerably better known among scholars than among the larger art-conscious public. Harvard has long been known as the first university in this country for history of art training. The Fogg Museum, with its rich and rather jealously guarded collection, serves usually as scholar's ground for studies.

The "Visitation," of El Greco, is one of the museum's most recent acquisitions. It is the gift of an anonymous donor.

Since the reported disappearance of "The Burial of Count Orgaz," collectors have felt an even stronger interest in all Greco's works safely kept in the United States. The "Visitation" is doubly precious, being the one and only replica of the artist on that particular theme.

Dominico Thertocopoulo, called El Greco, usually was fond of working out several versions of the same subject. His well-known biographer, Mayer, lists 16 versions of the "Crucifixion," 12 of the "Annunciation," 11 of "Christ Carrying the Cross," 8 of the "Adoration of the Shepherds," 7 of the "Agony in the Garden" and 6 of the "Purification of the Temple." He made, however, only two versions on the theme of the "Visitation." Mayer lists one of the versions, dated from 1591 in the parish church of Talavera la Vieja, province of Caceres, a remote enough place in normal times, which now may possibly be entirely erased from the globe. The other version is in the Fogg Museum and can be considered the only one we can see.

"The Visitation," an El Greco painting, which is on exhibition at the Fogg Art Museum at Harvard University.

'The Burial of Count Orgaz' Lost After Toledo's Fall.

Many critics, and particularly Mayer, have thought that this was part of a retable. The curve of the parapet, the exaggerated perspective of the architecture indicate that the painting should be viewed from below. Mayer, in a letter dated July 10, 1934, addressed to M. Knoedler and Co., expressed the thought that it may have served as the "Attica" (or pinnacle) of a retable. No documents, however, have been discovered in proof of the theory, so it must remain as pure hypothesis.

The first impression is one of modernistic baroque. The Virgin meets St. Elizabeth, on a parapet, in front of a rather plain Renaissance doorway. The figures are extremely monumental. The background is very simple. In spite of accentuated monumentality, there is nothing in any way peaceful or static about the work. Some tortuous, assymetric outlines, inherent sense of impending tragedy, convey, in spite of the grave and solemn subject of the painting, an unexpected feeling of drama.

This "Visitation" obviously belongs to El Greco's latter period.

At that time he had achieved such mastery over means of technique that he felt almost anything was permitted.

In order to express more intensely the torture in him that cried for faith, to a point where faith and pain were one, he broke off entirely with all tradition. He was himself without predecessors or successors. A Greek, belonging to the Eastern Orthodox Church, during youth trained in his native Crete to paint Byzantine ikons, he studied in Venice and assimilated the technique of Titian and Tintoretto. Then he went to Spain, together with several lesser artists called there by Phillip II, and found in Toledo the ideal soil where his work could expand. There is about Toledo some tragic mysticism, which Barres expressed n his famous book, probably real up to now, because it has been during the last few weeks a scene of so much blood and misery, with intermingled butchery and heroism. The same quality seems to adhere to it throughout the ages which then was so propitious for Greco. Some things do not seem to change for centuries, perhaps because they are composed of fundamental human elements. There, Theotocopoulo attained the full maturity of his genius. After "The Burial of Count Orgaz" came that last phase of his development to which the Fogg "Visitation" belongs. Other works of that period are the "Laocoon," now on loan at the National Gallery, London; "The Opening of the Seven Seals of the Apocalypse" in the Zuloaga collection at Zumaya; the "Pendecost" at the Prado, Madrid; "The Betrothal of the Virgin" at Bucarest; the "Nativity" at the Metropolitan Museum, which we all know; the "Adoration of the Shepherds" in the George Blumenthal collection, New York, and the famous series of saints in the Cathedral of Toledo, which now also may be destroyed.

It is a period when spiritual values are of such importance to the master he shows no hesitation in doing what none has done before him. He reduces planes and masses to a simplicity and broadness unknown to the sixteenth century. He reduces color to an almost unrelieved greenish blue, with quantities of white pigment, and occasionally a stroke of dull red for relief. The "Visitation" is entirely done in infinite tonalities of this greenish blue, with white pigment. Greco learned the use of this green originally from Veronese in Venice, but adapted it entirely to a personal use, so it has hardly anything in common with the Venetian tone.

That reduction of color to an almost unrelieved shade for a whole picture, as we see in the "Visitation," is more revolutionary perhaps even than the famous distortions of his very latest works. But form, too, is arbitrary here. The features of the faces of the Virgin and of St. Elizabeth are barely indicated. The profile is merely brushed. Attenuation is used to accentuate both the monumentality and the expressionism of the figures. This he does, too, in the "Betrothal of the Virgin," more usually known as the "Desposorio" of Bucarest. The Bucarest Virgin strongly resembles the figure of St. Elizabeth in the Fogg "Visitation," yet it precedes the "Visitation" for about five years. Both figures are entirely anonymous, carrying no distinct individual features. The Virgin of the "Visitation" bears resemblance to the figure of a young man standing with his back to the spectator in the "Laocoon" now on loan at the National Gallery, London. In both figures there is also no modeling of features, but clarity of profile.

Mr. James S. Plant finds that the only apparent Venetian reminiscence in the "Visitation" is the rather rigid architectural doorway, reminding of El Greco's master, Jacopo Bassano.

The cloud-swept sky, forming the only background of the "Visitation," is, however, most completely from El Greco's late period. As to form, or rather as to the entire shapelessness of the two women's monumental figures, one can only say that behind the agitated baroque draperies no bodies can be felt. As a Byzantine-orthodox, Dominico Theotocopoulo could not help retaining a dread of profane beauty, voluptuousness, flesh. Like in medieval sculptures, there are no feminine forms under the cloaks draping the Virgin and St. Elizabeth.

We feel, in those paintings, when the master was absorbed in preoccupations of the abstract and of the spiritual, a very definite recollection of his early Byzantine training as an iconographist, as a Greek Orthodox. Spanish Catholicism gave El Greco its somber sadness, the devouring fervor of its mystic exaltation, but without altering his own inner ego. The union of such two forces (unrepeated in history), created a unique art, sprung from one of the most sensitive, and yet of the strongest, human wills the world has ever known.

"High and Dry," a lithograph by Prentiss Taylor, is one of the exhibits on display at Studio House in the American artists' group show which will be open until November 7.

Art Glories of Spain Are War Prey

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 24.—Some of the art glories of Spain have suffered irreparable damage in the heat of civil war and others are threatened as the conflict approaches its climax.

The most excellent objects in the nation's collection, which ranks second in grandeur only to the priceless relics of Italy, today lie in the path of the fiercest fighting. Madrid, goal of the insurgents' latest drive, is a vast storehouse of art: Paintings, sculpture, tapestries and ancient armor. Magnificent canvases and beautiful old buildings elsewhere have been despoiled already by bullets and bombs, although both insurgents and loyalists claim to be doring their utmost to preserve the artistic shrines.

Disappearnce of El Greco's masterpiece, "Burial of Count d'Orgaz," admired the world over, was reported by rebel chiefs when they conquered Toledo early this month. Gone with that painting from the Church of Santo Tome were all the hangings and objects in El Greco and San Vincente museums. Canvases, they said, were mutilated by knives and bullets. Among these was Passano's Sixteenth century work, "La Vendima." Others were ruined, "by the score," in the Fifteenth century Holy Cross Museum.

Taken From Cathedral.

The famous embroidered mantle of Virgen del Sagrario, studded with 90,000 pearls in addition to diamonds, had been taken from the cathedral and packed for shipment. Other "missing church treasures" were not identified. They might include anything from the thirteenth century cathedral: El Greco's "St. Francis," Goya's "Betrayal of Christ," Titian's "Paul III," a Madonna by Rubens; the works of Cano, the sculptor; the 260 statues renowned Juan de Arfe made between 1517-1524 for the gorgeous Custodia in the Chapel of Canons; the three-volume golden Bible from the twelfth century; or the 40 magnificent sets of sacerdotal vestments of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. It is possible, but not likely, that among the missing is the virile inside the cathedral Custodia, where the Holy Sacrament is exposed. The virile is lined with the first gold taken from America.

Whatever doubt there may be about other art objects missing or destroyed, there is no question about the ruination of one of Toledo's oldest landmarks. The Alcazar, once the castle of Moorish and Castilian kings, was blown to bits with shells and dynamite in a 72-day siege before Fascists freed 1,700 persons imprisoned there. The Posada de la Sangre, nearby inn where Cervantes, author of "Don Quixote," once lived, went up in flames during the fighting late in August.

Cathedral Blown Up.

One of the war's earliest blows at art was struck on July 29, when the historic cathedral in Alcala de Henares blew up. Rebel munitions exploded in it. Three days earlier, monks escaping to Italy reported all Barcelona's churches had been sacked and burned. Art relics in them went up in smoke. Destruction of the roof of the beautiful seventeenth century cathedral at Palma, capital of the Island of Mallorca, was told by refugees from the Balaric Islands. They said government planes bombed it while the Fascists were barracked there.

At Zaragoza, long an insurgent headquarters, bombs hit the basilica of the Church of La Virgen de Pilar, built in 1686 around the pillar where the Virgin Mary is said to have appeared to the Apostle James 40 years after Christ's birth. Shells also have fallen in Granada, home of the Alhambra, built between 1248 and 1354. Granada's tombs are the best in Europe. Its works of art include those of Cano and El Greco. A chapel in the cathedral holds the casket from whence Queen Isabella took the jewels she pawned for Columbus' voyage of discovery. Damage done here is an unknown quantity, as in other civil war centers:

Burgos, long a Fascist headquarters, boasts a statue credited by some to Leonardo da Vinci. El Grecos and Murillos hang on the cathedral walls The hand carved priest's seat is one of the grandest pieces of church furniture in existence. The altar is encrusted with gold taken back by Columbus on his second voyage to America. Here the Cid, Spain's national hero, is buried.

Other Treasures.

The cathedral at Seville, another Fascist war center, holds Campana's noted "Descent From the Cross" and Murillo's "Version of St. Anthony of Padua." Luis de Vargas, Goya, El Greco, Zurbaran, Rubens, Velasquez and Herrera the elder are also represented.

Along the battle line now nearing Madrid is El Escorial, massive medieval palace in the Guadarrama Mountains northwest of the city. What happens here is of utmost importance to American historians, for the old castle holds the only copies of parchment reports of governors of California, Texas and Mexico to their Spanish kings.

Still deeper in the heart of the strife is Oviedo, where stands the Church Camara Santa, the palladium of Spain. Kept here is an ark from the Holy Land, the alleged winding sheet of Christ, in a superb casket of gold and blue enamel. The city has been bombed for weeks by dynamite-throwing Asturian miners. Fascists are now besieged there in what current dispatches describe as the last surviving buildings. This might mean that Camara Santa has been destroyed.

But the greatest art treasures are in Madrid. Foreseeing possible siege, loyalists already have moved the priceless works from Museo del Prado (National Museum of Painting and Sculpture) to places of safety. How safe these places will be if and when actual siege begins is the question. On the answer depends the fate of the prado's unrivaled collection of Velasquez canvases, including "Las Meninas;" its impressive list of Goyas, Murillos, Teniers; the works of Gallegos, Pedro Berruguete, Luis de Morals, Juan de Juanes and Navarrete; 9 paintings by El Greco, 40 by Murilo and contributions from Ribera.

With them are Italian works of Raphael, Andrea del Sarto and Correggio; paintings from the Venetians—Giorgione, 50 by Titian, Tintoretto, Veronese and Tiepolo; northern European canvases by Van Eyck, Rogier Van der Weyden, Jordaens and Van Dyck; 60 Rubens, Memline's "Triptych" and Holbein's "Portrait of a Man."

More treasures lie in Madrid's Escorial, built in 1582 for Philip II. Here is a marble crucifix carved by Benventura Cellini, and pictures from the brushes of Titian, Tintoretto, El Greco, Zurburan and El Mudo. In the royal palace, proclaimed a public museum by the Socialist government, hang 16,000 tapestries woverr in silver and gold and woolen yarns.

The imperial armory, also in the palace, is rivaled only by that of Vienna. It treasures the battle ax of Armadis de Gaul, the horn of Roland, Marribrino's helmet, horse armor apparently made for the Emperor Maximilian, Visigothic crowns from Guarrazar, and sharp Toledo blades wielded by such men as Hernando Cortez.

The Black Automatic

By William Byron Mowery

Synopsis.

Inspector Noel Irving, of the Canadian Mounted, dynamites the hideout of Frank Rocco, master criminal, not knowing two women were with him. Noel is discharged, disgraced, while Rocco becomes a glorified legend. Noel, in Winnipeg, receives a midnight call from a young stranger who calls himself Jimmy and asks Noel to be his partner in a secret enterprise and to help him outwit an unknown gang who are pursuing him. While they are talking Jimmy is shot dead. Noel sets out to clear his name and avenge Jimmy's murder. He learns the lad was recently in Fort McMurray and flies there in a monoplane which was Jimmy's, hoping to trap and learn the identity of the murder gang. At the outpost Noel introduces himself as Lanier, a prospector. He learns Jimmy's headquarters were at Manitou. Noel meets Harla De Long, a research worker for the Indian bureau, and realizes she is Jimmy's sister. Noel reluctantly agrees to fly her to Manitou. She obviously knows nothing of her brother's death. Harla recognizes the plane as Jimmy's and grows suspicious of Noel. Noel fears that Harla would be endangered if he told her the truth. On the trip to Manitou they are attacked by a mysterious plane and forced to land in the swampy wilderness. They are picked up by a river steamer bound for Manitou. Alice Wentworth, school mistress at Manitou, a friend of Jimmy's, is on board. Also Raphael Flood, whose advances Harla resents and whom Noel suspects to be the gang's leader. In Manitou Harla stays with Alice Wentworth. She catches Noel searching Jimmy's cabin. Flood tries to kill Noel with a gift of poisoned caribou steak. That night Noel rigs up a dummy in his bed and waits outside, expecting Flood. Instead he sees Harla go into his cabin with a gun. She takes aim at the cot, but is unable to fire.

Owls don't sit around on grassy slopes or hoot while on the wing. That call came from the lips of a man. It was some signal between his enemies. These men were abroad on this dark slope. Flood must have been listening for Harla's shot, and failed to hear any, and knew she had not carried through.

At the moment when he whirled again toward Harla the gun fell from her hand and clattered on the rough slab floor. As he clasped at the table to keep from falling the flash dropped and the cabin went dark.

"Noel, Noel"—she had broken completely down and was sobbing aloud—"how could you do that—to him? • • • He was all I had—my brother—Jimmy——"

Noel hurried across to her, quickly, and steadied her, his arm around her waist. "Harla! Come with me. Let's get out of here!"

Noel Identifies Self.

She recognized his voice. Noel felt her shudder when he touched her. She tried to push him away.

"You fool!"—he cracked the words at her like a whiplash, to rouse her, because the seconds were precious. And to keep her from fighting against him, he snapped out: "I'm your friend. I was Jimmy's. I'm hunting the men who killed Jimmy. Do you understand that? Stop crying. No questions now. Come along. Hurry it!"

He started to lead her toward the door, but she swayed and stumbled, and she was altogether too slow to suit him, what with those hoot owls on the slope. He simply picked her up in his arms carried her out of the way-cabin into the windy night, carried her on past the boulder to the fish scaffolding 40 yards beyond.

There, in the blackness, he stopped with her.

"We were lucky to slip them," he whispered. "As soon as it's safe I'll take you to Alice's cabin, and I'll watch the place myself while this dark is on. In an hour or two, when you're a bit steadier, I'd like to talk with you, Harla. You know some facts about Jimmy that I must have."

No answer. Only that heart-broken sobbing.

Still carrying her he groped in beneath some lean-to planks where they were sheltered from the icy rain, and sat down with her on an abandoned birchbark.

"Harla, please—those men are around. They might hear you." He smoothed back her disheveled hair and petted her as one might a child, to let her know that at least she had one friend in her black hour. She seemed so lost, so hopelessly bewildered in all this tangle of his falsehoods and Flood's lies; she seemed groping helplessly in a blackness like this storm-lashed night • • • He believed that for her to know the truth about this hunt might bring her a little way out of choas and put her feet on firmer ground.

In cautious whispers he began talking to her, while he kept glancing around in the dark and listening for any sinister footsteps. Not in self-defense—he no longer cared greatly about that—but to stop her from crying and to win, perhaps, later, a little co-operation from her, he began telling her of that Winnipeg night and of how a wanton laugh had brought him into this far north, a shadow trailing shadows . . .

A candleglow had appeared in Flood's tent.

As Noel sat through the spatters of rain and sleet, watching Alice's cabin while the 1 o'clock dawn came slowly on, he glanced up the slope occasionally at that glow and struggled with the temptation to go up there and kill the man.

Because of Flood inside that cabin a girl was crying her heart out behind that drawn blind. Because of Flood young Jimmy, down in Winnipeg—a splendid young life cut off . . . And how much other wreckage lay scattered back along this man's years only the devil's bookkeeper knew.

Noel's Desire to Avenge Jimmy.

To slip up to that silk tent and do a private piece of work on Flood would be easy enough, and he could get by with it. With one little bullet he could make sure that Flood would wreck no more innocent people's lives. Here was a clean cut chance to get Flood before the man got him or Harla or both of them.

But for all his temptation and his seething fury at Flood he refused to walk those hundred steps and end his hunt.

It was not fear or conscience that kept him sitting there in the rain, but a vague hunch.

For years he had been wondering where Raphael Flood had come from. A person of Flood's caliber did not spring out of nowhere. Flood had a background. What was it? What was he doing here in the north? Had his feud with Jimmy been the whole picture or merely a part of a larger canvas? Was this man an international adventurer? Or a person of two lives—a Jekyll and Hyde? Or what?

To these questions he had no answer; but he was convinced that he had flushed big game in the person of Raphael Flood. This hunt was no mere man hunt as he had imagined at the start, but something of depths and unpredictable possibilities. More or less accidentally he had stumbled onto a case which might pack more high explosive than the Rocco affair itself.

Besides his chance to wipe out the stinging disgrace of that hunt the mere thought of working on a case of national importance stirred in the bloodhound in his nature. Trailing and putting away obscure individual criminals seemed so futile and endless. Like plugging up rat holes that would be dug open the minute a person turned his back. Or like knocking over poisonous toadstools when a new crop was certain to spring up with the next rain.

But a case which had impact on a nation and exercised a widespread power for good was a different matter. That struck at the roots of crime by driving home a lesson. Those major cases come but rarely, two or three in a lifetime. To handle one of them successfully was an accomplishment of enduring worth.

While the gray dawn broadened he mapped out a line of action for himself. Providing he could manage Harla and keep her from ruining his plans he could explore this case thoroughly before breaking it open. Would dig into Flood. Find out who the man was. His background. His criminal hook-ups. And when he did have the goods on Flood he would take the man back to civilization alive. No more "gallant deaths" or maudlin sentiment over a dead criminal. . . .

When he stepped into the Wentworth cabin, near 1:30, he met Alice in the outer room. All excited and wrought up, the girl started pouring questions at him.

"Are you really Inspector Irving? That's what Harla said. She's been saying it over and over. And this about Jimmy—that can't be true! Is it true? It's all so dreadful. I can't believe that Mr. Flood had any hand——"

Noel cut her short. "It'll be worse than dreadful if you tell anybody what you've seen and heard here tonight." He had little patience with the girl: She had fallen for Flood too easily, on the Midnight Sun. With a sharpness that shocked and awed her he snapped: "I want you to forget everything you know, about this—who I am, Harla, Jimmy, everything. That's orders. I particularly don't want to see Flood or exchange one single word with him. If you disobey you'll find yourself arrested for obstructing justice."

Alice paled. "I'll do as you say," she agreed, and Noel saw she meant it. "I won't see Mr. Flood and I won't talk."

Noel relented with her. "That's good. Some time you'll thank me for that order." He motioned at the small north room of the cabin. "Will she talk to any one?"

"Yes. I was just in."

Noel crossed to the door and stepped into the tiny bedroom.

By the dim candle on Alice's dresser Noel saw Harla lying on the couch motionless, her face turned to the wall. She seemed to have cried herself out. She was very quiet—when he came in she did not look around or move.

Across the foot of the couch lay Alice's small-bore rifle, a half-filled clip of cartridges and a carton of shells partly spilled on the blanket. Sometime during the past hour Harla had evidently got up, secured the weapon and made a pitiable attempt to load it.

The rifle and cartridges were no surprise to Noel. Mute symbol of Harla's blind reckless vengeance, they merely warned him that he was in for trouble in managing her. A few hours more, till she pulled herself together, and the proverbial wild horses could not hold her.

He stepped over and sat down on the edge of the couch. He felt that he could really be a friend to Harla now, after what had happened within him in that way-cabin. An unselfish and stern friend, stern for her own good. He was looking back across his relationship with her as one would look back across a wretched journey which one has finished. With regret for what it might have been; with relief that it was over. He was no longer butting his head against a stone wall. He no longer hoped or wished for her friendship. That hope had snapped.

"Harla, will you talk to me?"

Harla turned and looked up at him, and Noel saw that she was thinking of her "visit" to the way-cabin. Her pale cheeks slowly colored. In her eyes he saw a shame and humiliation such as he had seldom seen in any human.

Jimmy's Mine.

"Harla, forget it," he said gently. "We all make mistakes. Your mistake was almost inevitable, under the circumstances. Let's bury it and never recur to it again."

She managed, falteringly: "It's not so easy as that, Noel. I can't bury it." She gazed at him questioningly, as though noticing his change toward her and trying to fathom it. "You despise me now, don't you, Noel?"

"You're awfully headlong in your conclusions, girl. First, you think I'm a decent sort, then you think I'm a criminal and worse, then you think I despise you—I wonder what will come next. As a matter of fact, I admire your courage for coming down here. Flood wouldn't ever have done it. In a showdown you've got more nerve than he or any of his men. And I admire your good sense in knowing, all along, that I was lying to you about myself. Now, let's get down to business, Harla, what was Jimmy doing here in the North? Did he let you in on his secret?"

"Yes, Noel. It was a placer, a gold placer."

"What? A placer? Are you sure about this?"

"I'm sure. He wrote me that it was a small pocket, but very, very rich. He said that the concentration ran higher than Fraser's Cradle, in the Golden Caribou."

"Where's it located?"

"I don't know."

"Why didn't he stake and file?"

"I wondered about that, too, Noel. I asked him why he didn't, but he wouldn't answer that question."

"How could his placer be illegal? Why was he afraid of the penitentiary?"

His words astonished Harla. "Penitentiary, illegal—was it that? Did Jimmy say that to you?"

Her question showed Noel that except for this one central fact of the placer she knew as little as he himself about Jimmy's venture. Probably because of this penitentiary angle Jimmy had kept silent to her.

"That must have been the reason," Harla said, "why he wouldn't let me join him. I wanted to get a leave of absence and come, but he said no. But when he wrote about these enemies, I came any way. I thought I could keep him out of danger. He was so headstrong and impulsive, and didn't know it."

Under any other circumstances Noel would have smiled at those words, from her. Headstrong, impulsive—the pot was calling the kettle black.

Refuses to Go South.

Though Harla seemed positive about this placer business, he himself was dubious. Why Jimmy hadn't staked, how his prize could possibly be illegal—those two objections were still as mountainous as ever. Maybe Jimmy had not told Harla the truth.

He put the tantalizing question aside. Just now his job was to handle Harla. She would wreck his whole program unless he could head her off. She had the courage of any man, she was a deadly shot, and she was wild with vengeance. She would either kill Flood or get killed herself.

"Harla," he said, "our goal is to settle up for Jimmy, isn't it? We must make Flood and his outfit pay. The burden of the job falls on me, as a trained professional. But you can help. In fact, you may be the difference between winning and losing.

"It's like this. I'm alone here at Manitou; I'm up against a brainy pack of killers; and there's the hard job of building a court-sure case against them. It takes a lot of evidence to put a noose around a man's neck. In other words, I've got my hands full to keep myself alive and hang those men."

Harla saw what was coming. "You want me to go away. You don't want the burden of keeping me alive too."

"That's about it. I'll arrange with Strap to take you south. When he comes back with Aklavik he can pick you up."

Harla stopped him. "He won't pick me up, because I won't go."

Here firm tones dismayed Noel. She spoke with such deadly quietness. That "won't" was as hard as a cannon ball.

She went on: "Noel, if you stay here all alone, you'll just get killed and Flood will get away. You haven't got a shred of evidence against him and you never will have. You yourself told me that those men left no tracks. You know and I know who's guilty. Why dig around for evidence? Or why run the risk that a court will turn these men free? Or why wait?"

Noel bore down hard on her. "Harla, you're being a hot-headed fool. You, a girl, with no training or experience, throwing yourself against a pack like this—it's suicide. And not only that, but you'll spike my chances if you stay. You've got to go."

His words bounced off of Harla like pebbles from a boulder. She had a mind of her own, and she had made it up.

"I'm not going, Noel. Please don't argue. I don't want you to protect me. I'll look out for myself. And I'm not asking you to—to go outside the law. This is my fight. He was my brother."

Her refusal left Noel floundering. He had planed on her going back south; had staked all his hopes on that. But she would never go. He saw this so clearly that he dropped the argument.

In the silence between them he reached out surreptitiously for the rifle clip and cartridges, and slipped them into his pocket. Anything to halt her and hold her, if only for a few hours—till he could scheme some other way of freezing her out of this.

"You're making a bad mistake in staying here," he warned, as he got up to go. "I only hope that you don't regret it too bitterly."

In the outer room as he left, he bade Alice: "Try to keep her in this cabin till I have a chance to cook up something. I thought I could manage her, but I found out different."

He gave Alice the clip and cartridges. "Hide these where she can't find them. And hide that jeweled revolver. If she starts on any rampage that you can't handle, come down and get me."

Shortly after sun-up, Strap Barclay, grimy and tired from his all night job on the Bellanca motor, trudged into the way cabin where Noel was trying to catch a little rest.

"Say Noel, this Constable Brannigan, the bush cop here at Manitou, has got a pretty kettle of fish on his hands. You'd better ankle down to the police building and give him a lift. He's hopping around like a chicken with its head off."

Noel wearily turned to the wall. "I'm not ankling anywhere. I've got a kettle of fish of my own."

Strap poured himself a mug of coffee. "Get off that bunk and do what I tell you. Brannigan's a jackass, and this trouble is serious. You're the only bozo around here with a pint of brains except myself, and I've got to beat hell-for-leather for Aklavik. Come on, let's have some revv out of you."

"What's up?"

"Plenty. Back here in the Silvertip Mountains there's a band of Smokies in devilish hard lines, the poor skites. A young runner just got into Manitou with the news. Something's got to be done, and fast, or there'll be billy hell to pay. These Dinokuis'll get completely wiped out, and not only that but——"

Noel turned around again. "Dinokuis?" He was so tired that it took him a moment or two to realize that these were the "queer tall Indians" in whom Harla was interested. "What's the trouble with them?"

Between gulps of black coffee Strap sketched him the story which the young runner had brought out of the northwestern mountains. Ten days ago a strange sickness had broken out among the Dinokuis—a devastating sickness against which their ancestral herbs and shaman potents were powerless. A dozen of the band were already dead and half the others were dangerously ill. Some of the men, panic-stricken, were on the verge of fleeing the camp and leaving the Dinokui range.

Sickness Breaks Out.

On his 150-mile trip to Manitou for help, the young runner, one of the few Dinokuis who had ever had contact with white people, had taken sick himself, but he fought on and on, and finally stumbled into the post an hour ago.

"I'll bet a leg it's smallpox," Strap concluded. "Been several little flare-ups along the Three Rivers this season. The police always throw in a detail and localize it. But if these Dinokui men pitch off from camp, they'll spread this to the Yukonlho-Tenneh and the coast Eskimos; and that will be a kettle of fish! Any little thing, even measles, mows those Smokies down like flies."

Noel sat up on the bunk and tried to shake off his weariness. Besides the humanity of the thing, that strange old tribe ought to be saved, if possible, because of their worth to anthropology. There were other Indians, but no other Dinokuis.

Strap brought him some coffee. "Here, swallow this, and we'll ankle."

As Strap and he went down the slope, the suspicion struck him that this Indian's account might be another of Flood's deadfalls for him. But when they pushed through the gaping crowd at the police cabin and stepped inside, he found that the story was all too true. The young Dinokui, a mere boy of 19, was lying huddled on a cot, limp with exhaustion and half delirious with fever.

Noel bent over him, took one good look, straightened up and nodded to Strap. "You hit it. Smallpox, all right."

Noel stepped across to him. "Constable, it'll be ten days or two weeks before that report of yours gets to Fort James. This is a crisis, and the hours count."

The distracted constable swung around. "Who asked you to come butting in? I've gotta make a written report, haven't I? In ink! That's manual orders. Whadda you know about mounted police work?"

Plans Made to Help Indians.

"Nothing, friend; nothing at all," Noel assured. "But why don't you send your O-C a wireless? As things stand, you're responsible for whatever happens here, but the minute you get word to him you're out from under, and he's responsible."

Brannigan's eyes popped open. "Why—why, that's so. I'll do it! What'll I tell the O-C?"

"I'll write your wire." Noel suggested.

He leaned over, penciled a message to Inspector Clevenger and handed it to Brannigan. "Here—sign this and tell the wireless man to click it through and get a confirm on it."

Brannigan grabbed his hat and hurried out the door. Noel stepped back to the Indian boy and looked down at him, thoughtfully. It would be tomorrow before a police detail could reach Manitou, with supplies meanwhile that stricken camp, the terrific danger that those men might flee, might scatter this sickness far and wide——

He turned to Strap. "Do you know the way across to this Dinokui camp?"

"Gosh, no! Those Silvertips are the devil's own hangout."

"Some of those men out there must know."

"They don't, I asked. Nobody ever goes back into those ranges. The police plane'll have to follow the Dinokui River, I guess, and try to spot the camp smoke."

The young Indian heard them and tried to sit up. "Want guide, huh? Tah-Gomaugh go 'long, show where camp, do the back-and-forth talk." Too sick even to lean on his elbow, he slumped back upon the cot.

"That boy's got stuff," Strap remarked. "Imagine whooping across those mountains when you're that near caving in. If he hadn't taken it on his own hook to come for help, we wouldn't know anything about this trouble. He's pretty sick, Noel. D'you believe he'll keep till tomorrow?"

"He should. He's a fighter. But this delay—I don't like it. Strap, you ought to whip across to that camp. A hundred and fifty miles is only an hour's hop."

"Man, I can't! I'm overdue at Aklavik now."

"You and the Bellanca and your vaccine are needed worse at this camp than at Aklavik. Aklavik's got two cases and a police quarantine, and back there are 50 cases and not a soul around. Why don't you take Tomkins and Brannigan, take that vaccine, rake together what medicine you can, and get over there? You could straighten the camp up a bit and stop those men from leaving. Tomorrow may be too late."

"I like that—loading it all onto me. What's the matter with your going along? I don't know anything about vaccine or medicines."

"I can't go, Strap. I can't leave Manit——"

He bit the word off short, with an idea volting through his brain. Here was deliverance, like a miracle, laid in his very hands, and he had almost tossed it away. If he should put his own plans temporarily on the shelf and go across to that camp he could persuade Harla to go along with him. He could get her away from Manitou. He'd get her over there, get her busy, pry her mind away from Flood and Jimmy. When the police detail arrived, so that she would be safe, he could quietly return to Manitou and set to work on Flood undisturbed, with Harla completely sidetracked!

"Of course I'll go, Strap. My brain was just foggy, and I couldn't think straight. We'll have room for Harla, won't we?"

"Sure. The Bellank's a six-placer. Think she'll go?"

"She'll go if we have to kidnap her!"

H. I. Phillips Sees Trouble in Utopia

H. I. PHILLIPS

Dumm and Dummer

By H. I. Phillips.

"Let's take a little auto ride," suggested Representative Dummer to his colleague, Senator Dumm.

"Don't be foolish. You can't take an auto ride these days," snapped the Senator.

"Why not?" demanded Dummer.

"Every road in the country is either torn up or about to be torn up," said the Senator. "Life has become one detour after another."

"I didn't have any special destination in mind, anyhow," admitted Dummer.

"Well, if that's the case, an auto ride might satisfy you, but if you meant to get anywhere in particular you might as well get on a revolving floor," declared Senator Dumm. "I have lived all my life in the United States but never have I seen the land so littered with 'Road Under Construction—Proceed at Own Risk' signs. No wonder aviation is having a sudden boom."

Good Roads in Prospect.

"Think of all the good roads we will have when they are finished," said Dummer.

"When they are finished is right," barked the Senator. "From the looks of things now I don't anticipate living that long if I survive until I'm 100. It seems to me that as fast as a road is finished they tear it up and start laying a fresh one over the same ground. Of course it may be just the inexperienced labor. Possibly the roads don't last more than a couple of weeks and the Government has to keep the boys replacing 'em."

"I'll admit the detour signs you encounter today are pretty exasperating," nodded Dummer.

"They run about six to a quarter mile, if you ask me," roared the Senator. "One detour leads to another and just when you reach it you are detoured back where you started from. It is all very confusing and I think it is one reason why the people of this country as a whole seem so dizzy."

"We gotta have roads," argued Dummer.

"Well, we are certainly getting 'em," said the Senator. "We are getting pavements over cow-paths, sheep runs and lovers' lanes. It looks to me as if every time the Government discovered a footpath it rushed through money for the laying of a modern highway over it. It ain't the road building activity in the cities that astounds me. It's the activity in the obscure districts. Back in my old home town there used to be a sort of a chicken run through the bushes just back of the old farm. I went home for a visit last week and the PWA was paving it!"

• • • •

"Do you remember away back when it was difficult to get roads improved unless they were used a little?" asked Dummer.

"It seems like yesterday!" exclaimed the Senator. "It used to be necessary to show that a road had connecting links, and that it was of some importance to somebody before you would dare suggest grading it or even scraping it. Today you can get the path from the kitchen down to the cornfield surfaced, widened and made as good as Fifth avenue by merely dropping a postcard to the Democrats."

"My old lady is trying to get Roosevelt to lay a cement highway under clotheslines in the back yard," said Dummer.

Fallen Arches.

"She won't have much trouble," predicted the Senator. "I used to get a kick out of hopping into the flivver and going into the back country to enjoy the quiet of the old-fashioned dirt roads through the woods. You can't get through 'em today on account of the way they're congested with road-building engineers, foremen and helpers. They tell me the quail, chipmunks and squirrels are getting fallen arches through having to travel on hard highways in the forest primeval."

"Some of the finest roads in America are being hidden away where nobody will ever find 'em, I hear," mused Dummer.

"A trip into the obscure and isolated portions of America is worth while these days. You will find million-dollar viaducts running through a section where the only resident is an old turkey hunter whose nearest neighbor lives 50 miles due north and who hasn't seen a white man in 20 years until the WPA agents came through and started laying a 100-foot wide highway past his shack."

"It must be scaring fellows like that half to death," said Dummer.

Pretty Disturbing.

"Of course it is. It is pretty disturbing to have spent all your life thinking you were so far from civilization that nobody could find you, only to look out some morning and find the woods full of road rollers and steam shovels direct from Washington."

"Is there any plan back of it all?" asked Dummer.

"The plan, as far as I can see, is to make sure that woodchucks don't get stuck in the mud any more, and that when a chicken crosses the road it will have smooth going under all conditions. I wouldn't be a bit surprised if the next step is to ask Uncle Sam to erect up-to-date stop and go lights on all cow-paths in America."

• • • •

"What do you think of the sidewalk movement?" asked Dummer with a chuckle.

"That's another laugh," declared the Senator. "There are more sidewalks being erected in this country with Government money than there are people to walk on 'em. It's getting more and more difficult for a man to find a place with no sidewalks. A bird hunter can plunge into the deepest woods and find an interlocking system of sidewalks from bird to bird."

"The Government does the work if the owner buys the material or vice versa, doesn't it?" asked Dummer.

"Yes," replied the Senator. "You can get a sidewalk laid now for very little cost except to your children and grandchildren. I believe in sidewalks, and think they are a necessity in the city, but they are slamming 'em down today along long stretches of country land where even a bird dog hasn't been seen walking in years."

Little Bit Confused.

"What's the idea?"

"It is too deep for me. I visited an isolated country village last week. The main street has about four houses and a barn on it. The same people have lived there for 50 years or more and they never knew what a sidewalk looked like except when they went to the newsreel theaters. They needed a sidewalk about as much as a snake needed hips, but they've got 'em now. They seem a little bit confused by it. One or two of 'em seemed to think it compulsory. The contrast between those new white sidewalks and those old weather-beaten homesteads is pretty sharp."

"I suppose if a man was a real patriot he would run a sidewalk all around his house," suggested Dummer.

"Precisely. 'Bigger and better sidewalks' is the slogan just now. I expect to see 'em running along the side of trout brooks by spring."

"Is there any truth in the story from Maine that the moose won't come out where they can be shot at any more unless they find either a brand-new sidewalk or a modern highway to travel over?" asked Dummer.

"I wouldn't be surprised," replied Senator Dumm, "but, believe it or not, I went into the farming country a few days ago and found a system of fine paved walks all over the cow pasture. And do you know what bowled me over?"

"What?" asked Dummer.

"The barefoot lad who used to chase the cows home was doing it on roller skates!" snapped the Senator, whirling away in high dudgeon.

Overcomes Obstacles to Become Pilot

Wouldn't Let Swarm of Bees Get Her Pet Goat

Stings Well Worth Price, Says Heroine

Honey House Is Upset by 'Honey'—and 'Honey' Gets the Bee.

Rose Esther Grimaldi has a healthy respect for bees but she won't let them get her goat!

Thus it was that the Feeding Hills, Mass., girl braved a swarm of the maddened insects to save "Honey," her pet goat, from being stung to death. Though stung herself, she dragged Honey to safety.

Rose Grimaldi.

Rose was inside her home at 27 Garden street, when she heard plaintive bleats. Then she saw that bees, whose hives were near the spot where the goat was tethered, had gone after the wrong Honey.

"Honey lay helpless on the ground with a swarm of bees around her," she relates. "She couldn't run because she was tied. Evidently she had walked too close to the hives.

"For a moment I stood helpless, I couldn't stand there and see Honey suffer.

"I dashed in the house, put on a heavy fur coat and wrapped some cheesecloth over my head and face and untied Honey's rope. I was scared stiff and the rope seemed to have 50 knots. The bees stung me right through the cheesecloth.

All Wet.

"I dragged Honey to a faucet and wet her all over. This made the bees stick to her coat, where I killed them one by one. Honey's tongue was swollen twice its size and for two days she couldn't stand. But she's all right now. My few stings were well worth taking."

Newsfacts—A honey bee's wings vibrate at the rate of 440 times a second . . . Bees have little sense of direction, for if taken any considerable distance they cannot find their home hives . . . Bee's stings are barbed like fish hooks, with a groove or channel through which the poison is shot.

Indian Boy Refuses to Cry—Even for Movies

An Indian just doesn't cry. Not even a 5-year-old Indian. Not even when the 5-year-old is supposed to cry for a movie sequence.

The script of "Ramona" called for little Black Eagle, a Mesa Grande Indian "bit player," to break down and weep. But the stoicism of his ancestors persisted in Black Eagle. Nobody was going to see him cry! Finally the script had to be altered.

Opportunity Answers the Doorbell

Richard Gregory Left His Home to Deliver Magazines for His Sick Brother and Returned as the Tom Sawyer of the New Edition of the Great Book.

Become 1936 Model of Tom Sawyer and Pal

The modern Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn found fame in much the same manner that Mark Twain's characters found adventure—unexpectedly.

Until recently Richard Gregory and Charles Schudy, both of New Rochelle, N. Y., lived ordinary lives. Then Artist Norman Rockwell, who was illustrating a new edition of "Tom Sawyer," picked them as models for Tom and Huck, respectively.

Charles Schudy—Shoted Into the Pages of Magazines.

Just The Type.

Richard writes Parade from 80 Mildred parkway, "I was delivering magazines for my brother who was sick. Mr. Rockwell came to the door for his copy, told me I was just the type for Tom and hired me."

It was just as suprising, too, for Charles, who lives at 480 North avenue. "He was roller skating in front of the artist's house when Mr. Rockwell stopped him and asked him to pose as Huck," says Charles' mother. Neither boy had known Mr. Rockwell before.

Hollywood Hopefuls.

Since, Charles has posed for magazine illustrations by Mr. Rockwell, and for another artist. Both took screen tests for the coming movie version of "Tom Sawyer" and may reach Hollywood.

Newsfacts—"Mark Twain" was the cry of Mississippi River pilots as they took soundings. It meant "mark two fathoms." Samuel Langhorne Clemens, the author of "Tom Sawyer," who realized a boyhood ambition to pilot a steamboat before he began writing, took it as his pen name. All the characters are real. Tom was the composite of three boys, Clemens included. The manuscript was one of the first books copied on a typewriter.

Two by Two.

Denmark could change its name to "Twinland" and get away with it. Reason: more twins are born in Denmark than any other nation. The world average is one set of twins to every 85 births. Denmark's is one out of every 63.

No Money, No Airport But Attains Ambition

Airman-to-Be Makes Himself Useful About Field and Is Given Instruction in Flying; No Bounds to Career in Air.

Thomas E. Gallagher had no money for flying instruction. His home town, Wayland, N. Y., had no airport. But today 16-year-old Tom is a pilot!

Tom had only a burning desire to fly. Then he discovered that Dansville, a town six miles away, had an airport. He pedaled over on his bicycle to see what he could see.

He saw an opportunity to make himself useful doing odd jobs. In return, Maj. Merrill K. Riddick, the field manager, offered to teach him to fly.

Tom dug into his school work a bit harder to provide more spare time. He kept his bicycle moving between Dansville and his home at 105 Washington street, Wayland.

Thomas Gallagher — Surprised He Soloed So Soon.

"I was allowed a generous amount of time on dual instruction in pay for whatever service I rendered," he says. "Three hours prepared me to solo. I was surprised that I was ready so soon.

"During the solo, I remember the sudden increase in climb due to the absence of another person. I had an exhilarating sensation of self-reliance and accomplishment.

No Limits.

"I am sure that without financial backing, the average person can do what I have done. The career end of aviation has no limits. Not everyone wants to be a professional pilot. But the mechanical, business and administrative fields offer splendid chances for boys and girls."

Newsfacts—Other airmen have conquered obstacles in rising from the ranks. For example, Lindbergh earned money as a wing-walker to pay for flying lessons . . . Amy Johnson Mollison, like Tom Gallagher, puttered around a flying field before soloing . . . So too did Edward F. Whitney who, at 18, was an airline pilot . . . Mary Campana, Youngstown, Ohio, girl labored in a five and ten-cent store to earn money for air instruction.

Girl Bomber

Helen Packs the Sock in Woonsocket.

Seven bouts, seven victories!

That's the record of Helen McMann, female fisticuffer No. 1, of Woonsocket, R. I.

On the playgrounds, boxing matches are arranged. It was jokingly agreed that girls could enter. But Helen, 10 years old and weighing just 72 pounds, took the offer seriously.

She began knocking out the boys, most of them older and heavier. She left no doubt as to who had the sock in Woonsocket!

Really Good.

Helen's ability is no accident. Her father is a police sergeant and former boxer. "I have taught the art of boxing to all my children, but Helen's ability is outstanding," he tells Parade. "It was while teaching her brother, 11, that I found out how good she was."

But Helen is really a peaceful girl. Among her favorite diversions are knitting, embroidering and sewing doll's dresses. She lives at 139 Front street.

Helen McMann—She Knits, Sews and Embroiders, Too.

She is a sixth grade pupil at Harris School, Woonsocket.

System Gets Results; 800 In Collection

Autograph Hunter Says Hobby Leads to Many Acquaintances.

Adele Ferguson's autograph collection reads like a page from "Who's Who."

The Reading, Pa., girl has 800 signatures including those of 5 Presidents of the United States, 9 Kings, 24 presidents and former presidents of foreign nations. With these are 160 autographed photographs of the world's greats and near-greats.

The 16-year-old collector, a high school senior, has built up her hobby by a systematic method. "I have obtained most of my autographs through direct, written requests," she writes Parade from 133 S. Eighth street.

Uses Directories.

"From time to time I compile a list of persons whose signatures I want. For addresses I consult various national and international 'Who's Who's' and city directories of foreign cities. Sometimes I write foreign newspapers.

"I have kept no record as to what percentage of my direct requests are granted. Sometimes relatives or friends of the persons send me autographs. Other valuable documents have been given by my parents or persons interested in my hobby. I always include in my letters sufficient postage for the answer."

A year ago Adele was made a colonel on the staff of the Governor of Kentucky in recognition of her success.

More Than Hobbies.

Now she has a new collection well under way. "I have a fine collection of original political and comic cartoons and sketches," she says. "They have been sent by famous cartoonists of the United States and Canada."

But the collections are more than hobbies to Adele. "Through them I have made the acquaintance of many famous persons," she continues.

More Portsiders.

There are more left-handed boys than girls, claims a German scientist. He took a census of 7,000 youngsters and found the "southpaw" proportion three boys to every two girls.

Happy Birthday to You, Prince Michael!

Happy birthday to you, Prince Michael—on your fifteenth!

The royal Rumanian boy is the world's only ex-King who is likely to be King again.

Prince Michael.

Born October 25, 1921, Prince Michael ascended the throne when he was 5 years old, upon the death of King Ferdinand. Prince Carol had previously fled the country and renounced his right to the throne.

After ruling three years, through a council of regents, King Michael was succeeded by his father, who returned to the country. And Michael became the Crown Prince.

And Crown Prince he has remained, preparing himself for the day when he may rule again—hunting and attending camp with other Rumanian boys whose blood is non-royal or not-so-royal.

Can't Make a Monkey Out of Chico in Water

"A monkey would rather go through fire than water," so the old saying goes. But not Chico, a pet rhesus monkey. Chico is not only an expert swimmer, but a diver as well.

"I brought Chico home with me from India on a vagabond journey around the world," writes the monkey's owner, Mr. Ronald A. Keith, 10028 Eighty-ninth avenue, Edmonton, Alberta.

"Camping at a nearby resort with 40 boys as companions, Chico found he could enter into all their activities except swimming.

"Finally it was too much for him. He waded into the shallow water, then learned to sit down and breaststroke with his hands, much in the manner of an elderly lady trying to show she is not afraid of the water.

"It wasn't long before he took his first swimming strokes. The rest was a cinch and now he can make a monkey out of many humans considered good swimmers.

"Chico learned to dive in an amusing manner. He was hopping about gleefully on the end of a springboard one day when, suddenly sighting a bug on the water, he forgot all else and dived for it."

Officer's Son Cops Prizes On Blossoms

Likes G-Man Games and Movies, as Well as Flower Raising.

When it comes to raising prize-winning gladioli, Michael Sullivan can compete with the best. In his first two flower shows, the 8-year-old Newport, Rhode Islander walked away with six first, four second and two third prizes.

"I began raising gladioli," writes Michael from 22 Van Zandt avenue, "because my daddy, who is a policeman, raises them. Last spring he gave me 1,000 gladioli bulbs and a small plot in his garden. I planted the bulbs and weeded them myself.

Boston Bound.

"When the blooms came out, I told daddy I was going to cut them myself and take them to the New England gladiolus show in Boston.

"At last the great day came. The judges looked over all the flowers in the junior section and finally called my name. I almost jumped out of my shoes when they told me I had won four first, three second and two third prizes, as well as a medal for the most points.

To Keep Up Good Work.

"Later I showed at the Newport flower show for amateurs and won two firsts and one second.

"I am going to keep on raising flowers for show, but do not intend to spend all my time on them, as I like to play G-man games and see movies about cowboys and Indians."

Newsfacts—The name "gladiolus" comes from the Latin for small sword. It refers to the sharp-pointed leaves of the plant . . . Gladioli originated in South Africa. The cultivated variety has just about supplanted the wild kind and the United States, particularly Michael's section, is the world's leading producer . . . Undeveloped buds on cut gladioli will blossom if the stalks are kept in water.

Writes 'Advice To Lovelorn' in His Newspaper

Billy Callow insists on publishing a "complete" newspaper, no matter how much work it takes.

The Toronto (Canada) Sunday Post, which he has been putting out for three years, therefore contains news, advertising and all kinds of features. Even an "advice to the lovelorn" column is included.

Billy Callow.

The Post comes in three sections and sells for 5 cents. The 11-year-old editor typewrites every line of it. "I use a rubber stamp for the headings," he writes from 7 High Park Gardens.

"My short stories and features I think up myself."

But it is "Mme. Dora's column" that makes his paper different. He writes that, too, giving his own views on love. "Then, once a month our maid asks questions and I answer them in my own way in this column," he says.

Sounds Like Bull to Us, But So the Story Goes

This is no bull—or, rather, it is some bull—depending on how you look at it. At any rate, a Holstein bull around Lacolle, Quebec, Canada, butted a 5-ton-truck right off the road!

The truck was red. The bull, being driven along the highway, glimpsed the color and went into action. Result: Damage to the truck and occupants, but no damage to the bull. Some bull!

Ducky, Eh?

'Joe Penner' Has Three Legs and Four Feet.

"Wanna buy a duck?" Well, you can't buy "Joe Penner." Gus Bleich, jr., of Cazenovia, N. Y., is very much devoted to his odd three-legged duck.

That's right—"Joe Penner" has three legs! "The extra one is attached to the body about two inches back of the normal right leg," writes Gus. "It is slightly smaller than the other legs, and has two full web feet on it."

In every other respect Joe is as normal as the 26 brothers and sisters hatched with him last July 5. "He walks just like the others," Gus says, "but when he sits down he looks as though he were sitting on the extra leg."

Gus has ambitious plans for Joe. "I'm anxious to raise him until next year," he confides, "and then see if I can raise some more three-legged ducks like their dad!"

Goes Down With Ship, Lives to Tell Story

Heroines Pull Infants From Under Trucks

Mona Casler Gets Medal; Phyllis Ciesla Is Struck on Leg.

From similar near-tragedies, occurring in nearby States, emerged two girl heroines. Even the youngsters, whose lives they saved from beneath the wheels of trucks, were the same age—a year and a half!

Eaton Rapids, Mich., hails 11-year-old Mona Casler; Milwaukee, Wis., has its Phyllis Ciesla, 7.

The whole town turned out recently to honor Mona. The occasion was the presentation of a bronze medal. Some months ago she dashed into the main street of Eaton Rapids, grabbed little Shirley Warfield, who had fallen from a cart into the path of a truck.

Phyllis Ciesla.

Mona "can't see the reason for all the fuss" that is being made over her, but she is proud of her medal. It is awarded by a St. Louis (Mo.) food company to outstanding boy and girl heroes.

Dash and Push.

While Phyllis was playing she saw Donald Wenzel running up a street and a truck backing toward him. She dashed after the baby and pushed him out of danger, but had no time to save herself.

Fortunately, the truck only hit her leg. She escaped with bruises. "I was too busy trying to get the baby to think of being in danger myself," says Phyllis, who lives at 19 West Howard street.

Neither of the babies heeded the cries of onlookers and only swift work saved their lives.

Roman Days

Model of Forum Makes Cicero Easier.

Latin students at the Caldwell (N. J.) High School can see the Roman forum practically as it was in Cicero's time, thanks to the ingenuity of last year's Latin classes.

Eight months' work went into the making of the model, which depicts the scene during Cicero's consulship (64—63 B. C.). Most of the buildings were made of wood, though two are of modeling clay. The background is cardboard with a wooden frame.

"Twenty pupils contributed to the forum," writes Mrs. Elsie M. Benson, Latin instructor who conceived the project. "But Herbert Kurz, John White, George Harhen and George Zabriskie made the most important contributions."

Hospital Like Home, Sweet Home

When an aching appendix took Claude Pierce, Edison, Ohio, 10 years old, to the City Hospital in Marion he was greeted by his brother, Jimmy, 8. Jimmy was there with a bad foot, cut in an encounter with a lawn-mower.

"I was in the hospital about a week," writes Claude. "We were in the same room and came home together in the same ambulance.

"My brother can walk all right now," Claude adds.

On a Bicycle Built for Two

Builder of Sidecar Plans to Earn Money by Making Others and Peddling Lunches.

Joseph Jacobi and His Grandfather—Side by Side.

On a bicycle built for two Joseph Jacobi whirls through the streets of the Bronx, N. Y., With 85 cents and a week's work, Joe doubled the capacity of his bike by adding a sidecar.

The sidecar has not only increased the 15-year-old's popularity in the neighborhood, but next summer will earn him money. His aunt plans to open a refreshment stand near where New York City is building its World Fair. Joe will load his sidecar and pedal among workmen, selling lunches.

In the meantime he plans to earn Christmas money by building several sidecars for his friends.

Writing from 284 East 137th street, Joe says, "In looking over an issue of a magazine I saw plans for the sidecar. This gave me the idea."

Joe also had proper tools and knew how to use them. His father is a mechanic.

One of his first passengers was his grandfather, Mr. Joseph Kinzig.

Rescuers End Terrible Nightmare After Crash

Editor's Note: One of the year's narrowest escapes was that of a 15-year-old English girl from a watery grave. Beryl Thompson, who lives at Carrigmore, Fronk's road, Dovercourt, Essex, actually went down with her uncle's yacht, after it was run down by a pleasure steamer. But she lived to tell of it and writes her story here for Parade readers.

Beryl Thompson.

By Beryl Thompson.

I was on a fishing trip with my uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Snell, on their 43-foot auxiliary yacht. Returning to Ramsgate Harbor (off the coast of Kent) about 3 p. m., we saw a paddle steamer coming up.

We expected her to give us a wide berth, but she bore down on us. I saw our dinghy smashed by the paddle wheel, then looked up at the passengers on the deck towering above me.

Whole Life in Review.

I immediately jumped overboard, but our boat turned over on me and I was taken down with her. In those few moments, which seemed hours, my whole life passed before my eyes. Finally I felt myself gradually rising to the surface.

When I came up I could not swim because of the weight of my wet clothes. Fortunately, a bit of wreckage floated past. I grabbed it and hung on for dear life. I saw my aunt floating and my uncle and a friend, who had come with us, clinging to the yacht's mast, which projected a little above water.

Pulled Into Boat.

After at least a half hour a boat from the steamer picked us up. I knew if it hadn't been for that piece of wreckage I would have gone under long before. As I was pulled into the boat I felt a terrible nightmare had ended.

Later I learned the depth of the water was 36 feet at low tide. You can guess how far down I went!

My aunt and uncle, like myself, suffered only shocks.

Charles Takes to Roof When Tree Is Cut Down

Two years ago Charles Brenner, Chicago, Ill., was such a timid 3-year-old that his parents sought to teach him confidence and self-reliance.

Did they succeed? Well, recently firemen had to get Charles down off the Brenner roof. It was the firemen's fourth call in three months. The three previous times, Charles was rescued from a tree. The tree had been cut down to stop Charles' aerial acrobatics. So he took to the roof.

'He' Lays Eggs!

Emma, Ella and Jackie Vallve—Literally Lifelong Pals.

Pigeon Pal of Two Mistresses

Wherever Emma and Ella Vallve go, "Jackie," their pet pigeon, is not far behind.

"Jackie" has been with the San Francisco, Calif., twins all but a few months of their six years.

"Jackie was still too young to fly when he was given to the girls," writes Mrs. Vallve, from 551 Twenty-second avenue. "He was so cute we named him for a little boy who was very cute, too.

Rides the Mail.

"Soon he was following Emma and Ella step by step. He learned to ride in our auto and now flies to the door whenever he hears the engine running. He disappeared twice but returned each time.

"He is friendly with all people, especially the postman, on whose shoulder he rides all the way up our walk. Every family for blocks around knows him. He pecks at their windows until they let him in."

It's Jacqueline Now.

But Jackie was not what "he" seemed. "One day 'he' layed an egg, so I guess we should call 'him' Jacqueline from now on," says Mrs. Vallve.

Newsfacts—Pigeons are among the friendliest of birds, and easiest tamed . . . There have been many instances of "palship" between pigeons and cats, also dogs, and even a rat and pigeon . . . In the World War, pigeons won fame as message-bearers under fire . . . Messages are inserted in metal tubes affixed to the birds' legs . . . Thus employed pigeons have been released from tanks and also submarines . . . Earlier, in the Franco-Prussian war, pigeons rendered invaluable service during the siege of Paris, carrying 150,000 official messages, more than 1,000,000 private ones . . . Many fishing boats at Miami, Fla., take carrier pigeons on trips to keep the home folks informed of spectacular catches . . . A homing pigeon can fly better than a mile a minute.

MARLA SHELTON, the movie player, was a licensed professional radio operator when only 12 years old.

. . . Despite Sickness and Poverty

Poverty, lack of opportunity and illness could not throttle the genius of a 15-year-old Rumanian artist.

Five years ago in the town of Cernauti, Moses Barasch began to paint. He was too sick to attend school and too poor to take art lessons. Today his paintings and essays have been exhibited widely in Europe and America.

Moses Barasch.

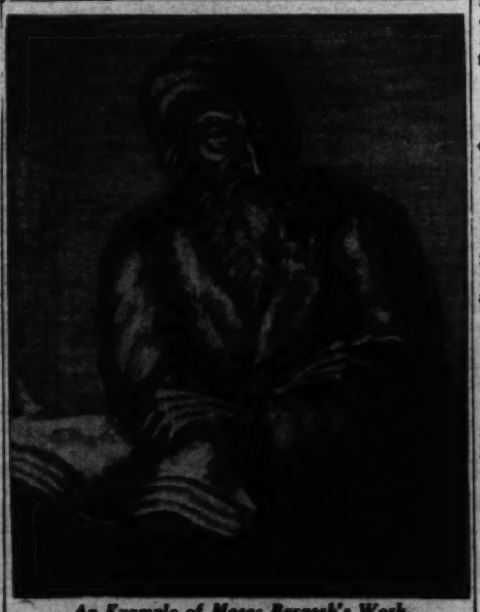
Moses writes: "My childhood was wrapped in dark clouds. For years I was chained by illness to my bed. Then, suddenly, I was inspired with an urge to create. Without understanding of any kind of technique, I began to paint.

"It's still a mystery to me how I did it! One thing is sure: it was the necessity of my soul to paint. The urge forced me to express myself in my work."

A member of the Rumanian Parliament became interested in Moses and offered the use of his library which contained many books on painting. This same man promoted the first exhibition of Moses' work in Cernauti.

Art Exhibited and Essays Published.

Soon after, his paintings were shown in Prague, Czechoslovakia, receiving the praise of art critics. Since, his paintings have been shown in New York City, Boston, Mass., and Baltimore, Md., under the sponsorship of Mrs. Stephen S. Wise, president of the Women's Division of the American Jewish Congress. A group of his essays, written in German, were published last year by a group of friends.



An Example of Moses Barasch's Work.

Moses, now in alestine with his parents, is continuing both his writing and painting, though still hindered by lack of finances.

Around the World in News, Scien

Great Scrapper.

1 A hog is normally as peaceful as a lamb. But when his anger is aroused —watch out! Just the other day, near Antlers, Okla., two wild boars slashed each other for 72 hours—three full days!

But perhaps the greatest scrapper of the pig family is its ugliest member, the warthog of Africa. It is about half as large as a domesticated pig, but packs a couple of tusks 15 inches long.

Wild dogs, leopards and even lions won't attack it, except from the rear where the tusks are less effective. Once a leopard pounced on a warthog. A few slashes and the leopard took to a tree.

The size of the enemy is of little importance. A warthog will even attack an automobile.

Old boars will join a zebra company or an antelope herd and live as contentedly as if hobnobbing with their own kind.

When Mr. Warthog is "in his cups," he is even more absurd than usual. It seems that he fancies the berries of a certain African tree, especially those which have fallen to the ground and fermented. After the banquet, he stumbles drunkenly from the scene, describing comical circles and zig-zags until finally overcome. And then he sleeps it off.

Changeless Land.

2 Fierce clashes between Jews and Arabs in the Holy Land have forced the British to clamp down with martial law. Britain holds a League of Nations mandate over Palestine and is responsible for its internal order. By guerrilla warfare, which has already claimed 1,000 lives, Arabs hope to drive out Jewish colonists who have settled there since the war.

These Zionists, as they call themselves, have wrought great changes in Palestine, but still the land is much the same as in the time of the Gospels. Then there were three official languages—Latin, Greek and Hebrew. Today there are still three —English, Arabic and Hebrew.

Sad old Jews still lament at the Wailing Wall in Jerusalem.

Yet the people are not the same. In Bethlehem, for instance, live Christian Arabs who are said to be descended from the Crusaders, and who "look at you with their blue European eyes."

Goblin Time.

3 Hobgoblins, ghosts, witches and ferocious pumpkins—and another Hallowe'en is on deck.

Hallowe'en is an old pagan custom. Since the rise of Christianity it has been associated with the vigil of All Hallows or All Saints (a feast day for all the Saints).

Hallow'een was the last day of the year for the Druids. They built huge bonfires to scare away the ghosts and witches which were supposed to wander about at the close of the year.

In Roman times, Hallowe'en was a festival in honor of Pomona, goddess of the fruit of trees. Roman boys and girls roasted nuts and indulged in "apple ducking." This consisted of seizing an apple floating in a tub of water with the teeth and has survived through the centuries to this day.

Day of Reckoning.

4 Russia is going to try to count all its people in one day. The census will be made in January, 1937, by 1,200,000 registrars who are being trained by 120,000 instructors. One thousand tons of paper will be used.

A census may be taken of almost anything. Near Tucson, Ariz., forest rangers are now counting the wild big horn sheep which stay in the most inaccessible heights of the Catalina Mountains.

Every four years the Romans enumerated not only the people but also the livestock, slaves, freedmen and land of each family. The Normans, who conquered England, in their famous Domesday Book, included cows, pigs and chickens.

In 1889, the English Society of Psychical Research even took a census of people who had received premonitions that they were going to die!

Jousting—1936 Style.

5 Germany, which has already revived several ancient sports, is now going in for knightly tournaments. Nor is the jousting a mock affair. Pictures from Dresden show armored "knights" being roughly unhorsed.

A tournament, or joust, was the medieval equivalent of our modern war games. At first the lances and other weapons were the real thing; later lance points were blunted and sharpened swords were forbidden.

Jousting lasted from the eleventh to the seventeenth century. In its heyday, jousters traveled from land to land, like modern prize fighters, offering and accepting challenges.

Jousting armor started with the simple shield and gradually became more and more cumbersome and complicated. By the fourteenth century, a knight in full armor was so weighted down he had to be lifted onto his horse.

In certain parts of this country today jousting is a sport. "Knights" thrust blunted lances through suspended rings of iron from horseback. The rider with the highest number of bull's-eyes is declared winner.

Dangers of the Blue.

6 Although he had to slash his helmet with an emergency knife to avoid suffocation, Squadron Leader F. R. Swain, of Britain's Royal Air Force, has apparently established a new world's altitude record of 49,967 feet.

Contrary to popular belief, air contains proportionally as much oxygen at high altitudes as at sea level. Suffocation, in the higher air, results because there is not enough pressure to force oxygen through the walls of the lungs into the blood.

This gives rise to some curious symptoms. At about 23,000 feet, fits of laughing or crying, impatience, rage or other emotional disturbances may overcome the pilot. At greater heights, unconsciousness usually intervenes.

Then there is the case of the passenger who began to notice, at about 20,000 feet, that his pilot had a red sunburned neck. As the climb continued, the neck became very annoying to him. Finally he became so enraged that he tried to kill the pilot. Lack of oxygen had given the passenger what psychologists call a "fixed irrational idea."

Motor Caravans.

7 Motor caravans are replacing camel caravans in the Chinese deserts. One such caravan, started not long ago, consists of 12 American cars. It makes regular trips from Sulyuan to Sinkaing, a distance of 1,200 miles.

The caravan carries passengers, mail and freight. It halts anywhere on the trail at night and the passengers must pitch their own tents.

A caravan is a body of traders traveling together for greater security against robbers. The camel is the usual beast of burden, but mules and donkeys also are used.

Some ancient caravan routes, which pass through burning deserts infested with robbers, are lined for miles with the bones of men and camels.

'Isles of the Blest.'

8 Two islands in Long Island Sound have been offered for sale. At present owned by the Dominican Fathers, they have been used for many years as religious retreats.

Islands have figured prominently in religion since remote times. The Greeks, for example, thought paradise was located on a group near the edge of the western ocean. Called "Isles of the Blest," or "Fortunate Islands," they were said to be peopled, not by the dead, but by mortals upon whom the gods had conferred immortality. The priests described the land as bathed in perpetual summer and overflowing with an abundance of all good things.

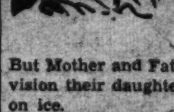
Ice Dancer.

9 At 2, Sonja Henie first glided on ice skates and—fell, even as you and I. But at 11, she was Norway's champion figure skater. At 14, champion of the world.

At 23, lithe Sonja Henie has left the amateur ranks, undefeated for ten years. She is going in the movies.



There probably was an omen in the blizzard that swirled through Oslo, Norway, the night Sonja was born. For it left the streets coated with ice. But Mother and Father Henie didn't vision their daughter rising to fame on ice.

Sonja studied dancing before she ever strapped on a skate. It was her ambition to be a ballet dancer. At that, she continued dancing until she was 20. When she began to skate, however, her feet were already "educated."

She literally ran circles around her older competitors in winning Norway's figure skating title. The same year she went to the Olympic games, not with the hope of winning, but just to see how much she didn't know.

She found out. The result was she retired from competition for a year. She practiced three hours, morning and evening. The next year she was crowned world's champion.

The same stick-to-itiveness that brought her the crown enabled her to keep it. For three years she practiced the "toe whirl" before she performed it in public.

Blond, vivacious Miss Henie is the darling of most of Europe's monarchs. They eagerly await her appearance on the ice. Her own ruler, Haakon VII, sends her a telegram before each performance. When 18, she gave a command exhibition for the late George V and blandly suggested to Queen Mary that the queen try roller skating.

"Pert" is a good one-word description of Sonja Henie. Her brown eyes twinkle when she talks. She laughs frequently, walks briskly. She likes to wear colored hair ribbons.

Though so small—5 feet 2—she never worries about her weight; "goes" for candy and ice cream in a big way. Superstitious, she wears a rabbit's foot on her dancing costume and prefers old skates.

Her immediate plans call for work as an actress and dancer. A few skating exhibitions will be sandwiched in between. Eventually skating will become just a hobby. Sonja is a little tired of competition. There's no one to furnish it.

Racing Around th

10 The race of three New York reporters around the world demonstrates that it is at last possible for the ordinary man to buy a ticket on regular airlines which circumnavigate the globe.

Nor need he spend years, as did Magellan and Sir Francis Drake, making the trip. He can do it easily and comfortably during his vacation.

The dirigible Hindenburg will carry him from Lakehurst, N. J., to Frankfort, Germany.

After a short ride on Lufthansa and Italian air lines, Imperial Airways will wing him to China. The only boat trip is between Hongkong and Manila, where the China Clipper will rush him to San Francisco and regular airliners across the United States.

It is now more than four centuries since the first man, Ferdinand Magellan, sailed around the world. But while his time has been reduced from 1,083 days to a little less than 8, it cannot be said that any circumnavigator has ever surpassed him in bravery.

In those days even the shape of the world was in doubt. Those who held it to be round thought it was only a little globe. Had the early navigators even suspected its real size it is doubtful if they would have dared to explore it with their tiny ships.

Magellan had no idea of the vastness of the Pacific, and his food ran out before he was half way across. From then on his men had to eat stewed leather and rats until they reached the Philippines.

Sir Francis Drake made the second voyage nearly 60 years later, cutting a month off the time of the Spanish expedition. And then came the record-smashing voyage of Thomas Cavendish in two years and 51 days.

Both Drake and Cavendish made their record voyages more for the sake of plunder than geographic knowledge. Drake raided Spanish ships and towns until his men were satiated with spoils. It is said that Cavendish's sailors were clothed in

"Around the World in 80 Days." This story is about Phineas Fogg, a phlegmatic Englishman who bet half his fortune that he could accomplish the trip in that length of time—and did.

The first trip inspired by this book was the journey of Nellie Bly, reporter for the New York World. She made the journey by boat and rail in 72 days, 6 hours and 11 minutes, in 1889.

Several persons bettered this mark in the next decade. In 1913 John Henry Mears made the journey in 35 days, 21 hours and 36 minutes. This was the last record set by conveyances on the earth's surface.

The United States Army first flew around the world. Five planes left Seattle, Wash., on April 6, 1924. One hundred fifty days later, two returned after flying a zigzag course around the world which took them from the Arctic to the tropics.

The Graf Zeppelin established a mark in 1929 when she flew around the world with a load of passengers in 21 days.

Two years later Wiley Post and Harold Gatty accomplished the impossible by flashing around the northern circumference of the world in a little over eight days. During the trip, Post got only 15 hours' sleep. They battled storms and fog almost all the way, and got stuck in the mud at Blagovestchensk, Siberia. The plane was buried so deep that a tractor had to be used to pull it out.

Post lowered this record in 1933. Using the same plane and the same engine, he flew around the world in a little more than seven days.

He was not only the first to make a solo flight around the world, but his record still stands.

Star Thinker.

11 Because James Jeans studied the literature of ancient Greece and Rome, he has become one of the world's greatest mathematical astronomers.

How? Simple enough. The old writers were scientists at heart. They speculated on the earth, the heavens and the universe, even though they couldn't back up their statements. Reading them, James Jeans decided to forsake the classics for science before he left England's famed Cambridge University.

Now 59-year-old Sir James Jeans is president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science and probably the most popular scientific writer alive.

Born in Lancashire, England, Sir James was teaching before graduation from college. In 1905, four years after taking his degree, he was invited to lecture at Princeton by the then president of the university, the late Woodrow Wilson.

Thus he made his debut to the American people, who have received his books so well and furnished him with his first wife. She died in 1934 and he has remarried.

English right down to his boot tops, sleepyeyed, pipesmoking, Sir James lets his imagination run as freely as does a detective story author. Yet his visions are based on scientific facts. That's why his books are so popular.

When Sir James says the future peoples of the earth may be swept into oblivion by immense tides, he is basing his assumption on the fact that the moon is moving earthward. If it continues its course it will increase the size of the tides.

Although he deals in unrealities, Sir James is not the "absent-minded professor," though he sometimes looks the part. He is realist enough to be able to inform the man in the street what the giants of science are doing.

Knighted in 1928, he lives in Surrey, England, quietly and simply. No astronomical paraphernalia litters the house.

On the rare occasions when Sir James studies the heavens, he journeys to California's Mount Wilson Observatory, to which he is attached.

For, he explains in his deep voice, the day is past when an astronomer has to keep his eye glued to a telescope. He can study the photographs and, seated comfortably at his study table, finger a slide rule and unfold the mysteries of the universe.

Venerable Oak.

12 The great white oak of Mingo County, W. Va., is dying of old age. Said to be the largest of its species, the 145-foot giant was an acorn about the time of the last Crusade.

The white oak of Europe, very similar to the American species, is the oak of myth and poetry. Celts and Britons worshiped it, and the Druids built their sacred fire under its branches.

One of the most famous oaks was the Charter Oak of Hartford, Conn. Indians asked the colonists to spare it when clearing the land because it had guided their ancestors for centuries as to the time of planting corn. "When the leaves are the size of a mouse's ears," they declared, "then is the time to put the seed into the ground."

The tree was spared and later became famous when Connecticut's colonial charter was hidden in it to prevent invading British from taking it away. A windstorm blew the tree down in 1856. It was so venerated that the bells of the city were tolled and a band played funeral dirges over its ruins.

Lest We Forget.

13 The public has probably forgotten the great forest fires which ravaged large areas in Oregon and California. For, while forest fires rank with floods, pestilence, famine and earthquakes, they seem to be more quickly forgotten.

Almost anyone can tell about the great San Francisco earthquake, for example, but very few can recall the name of even one great forest fire.

Who knows offhand about the Miramichi fire of 1825 which laid waste 3,000,000 acres in Maine and New Brunswick and burned 160 people alive?

And who can tell about the unprecedented forest fires which occurred in Minnesota, Washington, Oregon and Idaho in 1910? The smoke could be detected 500 miles out in the Pacific.

In Idaho thousands of small fires were fanned into one immense conflagration by a hurricane. Forest rangers were almost blown from their saddles and the fire leaped rivers a quarter of a mile wide.

Cow Whistle.

14 A Florida railroad recently fitted an engine with six whistles and tooted them in 20 towns along the line. Citizens were then asked to choose the one they preferred. When the votes were counted, a whistle with a cow's "moo" won.

There is an almost endless variety of whistles, from the puckered lips of the schoolboy to the giant whistles on ocean liners.

The United States and Canada use whistles in lighthouses. Buoys are often similarly fitted.

In the shallow oil fields of Oklahoma, many power houses have whistles on the engine exhausts. These enable the operators to tell whether the engines are running, even if they are miles away.

One, near Alluwe, Okla., can be heard for 10 miles on a still day. It emits a hair-raising screech.

Many musical instruments, such as flutes, are also little more than whistles, with trappings.

Pottery Find.

15 A pottery kiln used by the Romans has just been discovered under a street in Lincoln, England. It contained four stacks of cream-colored bowls which had been fired but never taken out.

There are two main types of pottery—stoneware and porcelain.

Stoneware is made of coarse clay, often mixed with sand. It is baked only once. Common salt, put in the kiln before firing, forms a vapor which glazes the stoneware and makes it water-tight. Stoneware is used for pickle jars and crocks.

Porcelain, or chinaware, is made of a special white clay called kaolin. Originally, kaolin was found only in China, but now in many parts of the world.

Porcelain is made the same as other pottery, but is shaped thinner and with more care. It is often as thin as heavy wrapping paper and quite translucent when held up to the light.

Anything made of baked clay, however, is pottery—even bricks.

Rats!

16 The cat is not the only animal that likes to catch rats, as Ted Mouncer, storekeeper of Satsop, Wash., discovered the other day. Finding an injured owl, he took it to his store, bound up its wounds, and left it for the night. Next morning he found that the owl had killed six rats.

Another natural enemy of the rat is the ferret, a domesticated form of the European polecat. These slim, slinky animals crawl down rat holes and give battle to the rodents in their dens. They have been used as rat-catchers since before Roman times.

Still another is the skunk. Farmers often encourage wild skunks to den up in a barn. When a skunk moves in, rats move out. Some farmers even keep tame, deodorized skunks as rat catchers.

But perhaps the strangest custom is keeping snakes as rat catchers. Pythons and other species are widely employed for this purpose in many tropical lands.

50-Year-Old Miss.

17 On October 28 the Statue of Liberty, which commands New York Harbor, will be 50 years old.

First conceived by the great French sculptor, Frederic Bartholdi, when he saw the eagerness with which immigrants crowded the side of boats for their first glimpse of America, the statue has become a symbol of the American spirit of freedom.

Executed by Bartholdi with funds raised by a popular subscription in France shortly after the Franco-Prussian War, the statue was given to the United States by the French government to commemorate the centenary of American independence.

It is made of thin bronze plate on a steel framework and weighs 225 tons. The figure of Miss Liberty is 111 feet high and the torch which she holds aloft increases the height to 151 feet. Forty persons can stand in the head, 300 feet above the water. The base is so firmly anchored, engineers say, that Bedloes Island, on which it rests, would have to turn turtle before the statue would fall.

Good and Bad.

18 While rain has settled the dust in our own "Dust Bowl," word comes from South Australia that a similar dust bowl is developing there. Overgrazed by sheep, the barren soil is being turned into a desert by the wind.

While a nuisance to farmers, dust serves a useful purpose in the atmosphere. If there were no dust, drops of rain could not form. Thus there would be no clouds and the atmosphere would finally become so saturated that water would fall all at once. Imagine millions of tons of water suddenly falling on a big city like New York!

Without atmospheric dust, there would be no haze in the atmosphere. The sky would be black as ink. The sun would seem to shine through a hole in the blackness. There would be no twilight.

Washboard in 'G.'

19 While strumming his musical washboard at a recent lodge meeting in San Jose, Calif., Hubert Hood discovered that the instrument was out of tune. Ever since he has been asking hardware stores for a washboard in the key of G.

Music can be gotten from almost anything. In London, a fiddle made from empty shell cases of the famous French "75's" is played nightly in a restaurant. Said to be the only brass fiddle in the world, it was made behind the French lines during the World War to cheer officers at mess.

WINGS OF THE WORLD

"Airplanes will put railroads out of business!" That was the cry of overexuberant air enthusiasts a few years back. It was not true, of course. But railroads were on the defensive.

Airlines were speeding schedules, installing larger, safer, more luxurious planes. Then something happened. Railroads woke up, developed streamlined trains, electrified some routes and finally sliced fares. Now airlines are on the defensive.

Cheaper Rides—First airline to hit back at the railroads is Transcontinental and Western Air, Inc. While cutting an hour and a half off its coast-to-coast time, it has pared cross-continent fares from $160 to $118.96, beginning November 10.

TWA has asked the Government to pay it more for hauling air mail. The line hopes to offset the fare cut with an increase in air mail rates.

It is fairly certain that TWA's fare cut will reduce rates on the other transcontinental services, United Air Lines and American Airlines. When one line reduces rates its competitors generally follow suit.

Then and Now—Comparatively speaking, folks who flew back in 1930 were hardy souls. A passenger from New York to Washington would pay $15, then climb into a big, noisy Ford or Condor transport or a smaller single-motored Lockheed Vega or Orion.

Today that same person pays $12.20 for a swift ride in a comfortable, sound-proofed Douglas or Lockheed Electra, both bi-motored craft.

In spite of the fact that Pennsylvania Railroad now whisks passengers from New York to Washington in slightly more than three hours, for about $5, Eastern Airlines doesn't plan to cut fares.

Flying Junk—Flying across the country was more expensive in 1930, too. Passengers paid $200. They were carried in Fords, Boeings, or Travelaires. From New York to Chicago fare was about $70. TWA's new New York-Chicago rate is $34.

Planes used half a dozen years ago were the best obtainable. But beside a present transport they'd almost be junk.

BOOK OF THE WEEK

"Starlight," by H. Mortimer Batten. $2.00. D. Appleton-Century Co., New York, N. Y.

When Starlight scrambled out of the den with his brothers and sisters, he fell off a ledge. The fall saved his life. For, while that was going on, the other wolf cubs licked the muzzles of their dead parents, which hunters had sprinkled with strychnine.

Thus, in puppyhood, Starlight had to forage for himself. Then, as he grew older and wiser, he took his place in the wolf world, mated, fathered cubs and finally swung off at the head of his own pack to hunt down the wild cat killers of his mate, Aurora.

In this sweeping story of wild animals living by fang and claw, the author brings to light interesting facts about Starlight and his kind. For instance:

Wolves are not fleet of foot . . . When they are puzzled over any object they bury it . . . Animals cannot see in the dark, but can distinguish even the faintest light better than humans . . . Wolves travel alone or in pairs in summer, forming packs in winter . . . A luscious blueberry patch makes friends of the bitterest enemies . . . Wolves and their arch enemies, wildcats, eat in the same patch . . .Old wolves whose cubs have matured band together to form the largest and most ferocious packs.

Author—H. Mortimer Batten, born in Singapore, grew up to manhood in Canada and now lives in Scotland. In Canada he obtained the knowledge of wild life that is revealed in this book. Edits an animal magazine, has written other books.

STAMPS

The Stamp—This adhesive, issued in 1926 by Greece to commemorate the fall of Missolonghi in the Greek war of independence, is valued at 5 lepta (about 1 cent). It shows a small vessel negotiating the picturesque Corinthian Canal.

Strangely enough, the fall of Missolonghi was not a Greek but a Turkish victory. Besieged for 12 months, the Greek defenders finally rushed forth to attack the Turks. They became confused by a mistaken order, were thrown into a panic, and the Turks captured the city.

But the fall of Missolonghi brought Greece's long struggle against the Turks to the attention of the world. A substantial loan was made and Russia, France and Great Britain united to help her win independence.

Corinthian Canal—The Isthmus of Corinth, between the Gulf of Corinth and the Saronic Sea, was the bane of ancient mariners, as they had to drag their ships across it.

Nero, in 67 A. D., began the first canal across the Isthmus, but the project was abandoned. The present canal was begun in 1881 by a French company, which ceased operations in 1889. A Greek company completed the undertaking. The canal is about 4 miles long, 70 feet wide and 26 feet deep. At some places it is cut through solid rock.

DOGS

Pup popularity has reached a new "high." Mr. Pooch now is accepted as an airplane passenger.

For some time dog owners have tried to get airlines to carry their pets. They pointed out accommodations for dogs on railways and steamships. Success came when Transcontinental and Western Air, Inc., announced that dogs will be carried in special compartments behind passenger cabins.

Air Stowaways—For some time air passengers have been smuggling their pets aboard planes. On several occasions small pups have stuck their noses out of suitcases or from under owners' seats after ships were well on their way.

But, despite the clamoring of owners, dogs continued to be barred. First signs of weakening came when the airlines granted permission to blind passengers to carry their dog guides.

Profit in Pups—It's hard to believe, however, that the airline revised its regulations out of charity to pet owners. Willingness of dog owners to spend money has captured the eye of industry. Incidentally, the dog food is the second largest canning industry.

Significant is the fact that TWA's announcement concurs with the major dog show season. Pure-bred dogs travel some 300,000,000 miles yearly to shows. An average of 100,000 show dogs visit at least 30 of the 300 annual shows. Average distance from kennel to show and back is 100 miles.

For auto transportation alone dog owners spend millions yearly.

Well, Donald, a frog certainly does make warts! I once knew a guy who had a frog in his throat, and the first thing he knew he was singing, "Warts the reason I'm not pleasin' you?" (Oops.) . . . And here's the proof: Frogs make a noise at night. Noises make people lose sleep. Losing sleep makes people irritable. Well, warts make people irritable, too. DANGER FLIGHT

By RUTHERFORD G. MONTGOMERY

Illustrated by Robert Pilgrim.

Installment I.

HENRY LARSON'S office was a dingy, cobweb draped place. Cases filled with odd specimens lined the walls. Every out-of-the-way spot on earth was represented. One case contained a set of head hunter's spears from the South Seas. Another contained rare Ming daggers from Old China.

Henry Larson sat at a battered desk and smiled thinly across its scarred top. He was just back from the upper Amazon and had called in his nephew, Bert Larson, known out at the flying field as Bat Larson. Beside Bat sat his flying pal, Tommy Kelly.

"I have something here that is bigger than mere specimen hunting." Uncle Henry tapped the top of his desk nervously and leaned toward the eager boys.

"May we see it?" Bat asked.

• • • •

"NO. If you did see it, it would mean nothing to you. It is a set of engraved plates. I am certain, from the slight knowledge I have of ancient Inca characters, that it is valuable." He spoke in a guarded voice that was little above a whisper.

"A secret map or something like that?" Tommy cut in. He was eager and excited by Henry Larson's mysterious manner.

"I have a theory and certain developments since I got these plates lead me to believe I am right." Henry Larson could not cover up the fact that he was nervous.

"Inca jewels and gold?" Bat breathed.

"I do not know. Possibly just important religious data. But the few survivors of the ancient tribes have a cult that is strong. It is not generally known but they do have members, even in this country. These plates interest them very much." Henry Larson smiled again.

"And you would risk almost anything to get a chance to decipher those plates?" Bat was grinning. He knew that a thing like this would make his uncle take any sort of a chance.

• • • •

"I AM being watched, I know that. I dare not keep these plates here. If those who are watching me were sure they were here I would find my office ripped to pieces tomorrow morning. I am sure of that." Uncle Henry laughed. "But I fooled them. They have been in here twice and missed the hiding place."

"What do they look like? Who are they?" Tommy asked eagerly.

Henry Larson shrugged his thin shoulders and rubbed a bony hand over his chin. "I don't know," he admitted. "I have seen a dark face in the alley—just a flash of gleaming teeth and black eyes. Once I heard soft footpads I would have sworn were made by naked feet—that was under the window at my apartment." He stared at the wall. "One develops a keen sense of detection prowling in jungles and ancient places."

• • • •

"I HAVE that feeling right now," Tommy declared.

"And I have it, too," Henry Larson said slowly. "But no one can hear anything we are saying."

"What do you want us to do?" Bat was a bit suspicious. He did not take much stock in hidden menaces and prowling priestcraft, but he had a hunch that he would not care to be made custodian of those silver plates.

"I have a number of men working for me and they are being watched, but you boys will not be bothered, I am certain." Henry Larson smiled thinly at Bat.

"Sorry, Uncle Henry, but we have a circus that gives us troubles enough without trying to keep two jumps ahead of a flock of Inca daggers." Bat laughed good-naturedly.

"There is only one man who can decipher those plates. That is, only one who can do it undisturbed. It will take him several weeks, but he will get me a translation. He lives in Tolec, N. Mex." Henry Larson got to his feet. "He is Prof. Zelargo."

"I'll take no chances with a flight over the Continental Divide in the winter—not in the Darney," Bat said flatly.

Tommy jumped to his feet eagerly. "You want us to deliver those plates to this professor in Tolec?"

"That is my idea. And I will hire your whole circus for a week. There will be an extra five hundred in it for each of you if you get them through today! I have to leave for Peru on the 15th of next month and I must have a report on them to take with me."

• • • •

"YOU are to inform no one of your destination or your route. I will make a hurried trip up into the mountains to my summer cabin and that will draw their attention from you. I will give you the plates and you can place them under your leather jacket. We will part at the curb before my office. Some one may follow you, but when they learn that you are just going for a short flight they will leave the field. Then you can gas up and be off."

"We are to say we are making a short flight, possibly take up a passenger? Just to fool them?" Tommy grinned.

"Then we hit for Tolec," Bat said.

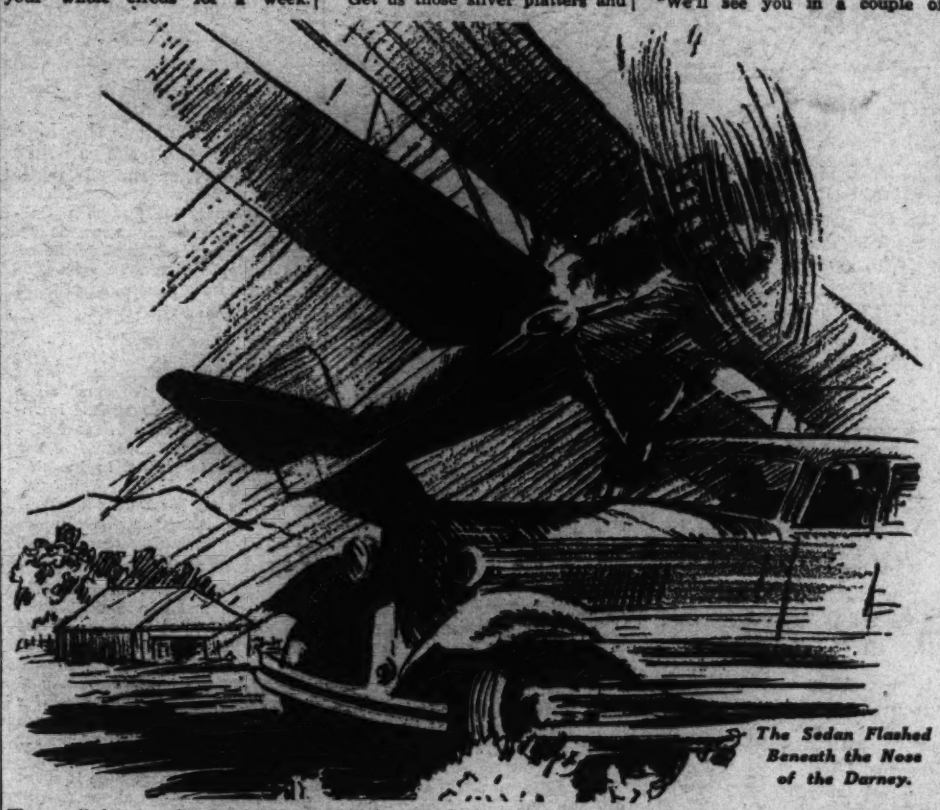
"I will take some notes and data with me and if I get snowed in I'll stay for perhaps 10 days working on my records. In that case I'll be away from a phone. But do not try to get in touch with me till you get back here. I do not want these plates traced to Tolec." Henry Larson was talking rapidly.

"They must be hot stuff, you are in such a hurry to get them off your hands," Bat laughed.

"I should say they are the most dangerous pieces of silver I have ever seen." Henry Larson spoke grimly.

"And I say we will move them fast!" Tommy promised.

"Get us those silver platters and we'll be off. I never had $500 offered me for such an easy job," Bat grinned.



The Sedan Flashed Beneath the Nose of the Darney.

Henry Larson looked at Bat for a few minutes, then he turned and walked toward a wall case filled with Hopi and Zuni Indian headdresses. He bent, and a creaking of boards came to the two boys, then he straightened and faced them. In his hands he held a leather case 10x12 inches and perhaps an inch in thickness.

"This must be hidden carefully in your clothing." He faced Tommy. "Slip it under your leather jacket."

Hastily Tommy slipped the leather packet up under his flying coat. It was heavy and sagged a little, so he tightened his belt over it.

"There now, we are off," he laughed.

"Remember, do not wire or call me from Tolec or from any point on the route. Report here when you get back." Henry Larson spoke nervously.

"We will be heading straight over the Rocky Mountains and the only towns we will go over will be ghost mining towns. We will not be sighted until we land," Bat said impatiently.

Henry Larson produced a worn pocketbook and opened it. He peeled off four big bills and handed two to each of the boys. They were 50s. Tommy grinned happily. This would pull the circus out of the red and buy him a new parachute besides.

"Thanks," he said quickly.

"We'll see you in a couple of weeks and collect the rest," Bat said.

The three of them moved toward the heavy door that led to the street. Henry Larson unbarred it. He wrapped his muffler tightly around his neck and started out into the frosty darkness.

• • • •

HIS big sedan sat at the curb. His driver, who was also his bodyguard and general handy man, sat at the wheel nodding. Behind the big car sat Bat's and Tommy's tin roadster. Henry Larson spoke in a distinct voice to the boys.

"I am taking a quick run up to my cabin in the mountains. I'm sorry I can't put any money into that crazy circus you two are promoting. Get into something sane and I'll help you." He stepped to the side of his car.

"O. K., uncle, we'll try to worry along," Bat answered.

Tommy said nothing. He had caught a flicker of a dark form in the deep shadows along the wall of the office building. He was sure two black eyes were spying upon them.

"Let's get going," he said to Bat. After all, it was he who was packing those silver plates against his chest.

No one was about at the airport when they arrived. A raw wind was blowing out of the foothills. Two attendants yawned at Bat and Tommy entered the hangar. The silver colored Darney was rolled out and Bat began checking her over.

• • • •

TUNING up took perhaps 15 minutes. Bat insisted upon checking a hum in the powerful radial motor. Tommy clambered over the side and pulled his flying suit on over the leather jacket. The Darney was an open-cockpit job and plenty cold for winter flying. He tightened the fur collar around his neck and watched Bat clamber over the side. Bat got into his suit, grumbling about the weather.

"Reports say we are due for a blow and plenty of clouds," he grunted.

"Well, just slide up top side and forget about the clouds," Tommy grinned. "We have to cop those two $500 bonuses."

"I'd fly the old Darney to the South Pole for that much," Bat answered, as he slid into the seat. The motor began to roar under throttle pressure and the ship quivered, then slid off across the tarmac to the far side of the field where they would head into the wind.

• • • •

THEY bumped along and finally Bat swung her around and headed her across the field. The motor eased, then burst into a full-throated roar that shook the ship. Drifts of dust and sand slipped off in the propeller stream and they were away. Bat leaned over toward Tommy. "Think we better make a short turn and then come down?"

Tommy nodded.

They were roaring along when Tommy looked out and saw a black sedan careening across the field directly at them. Bat saw it in the same instant and his arm muscles tightened. He kicked the Darney wide open and leveled her off. That sedan would crash into them unless it swerved.

The Darney shuddered and heaved off the ground a foot, then settled back and heaved again. This time she held air under her but she could not get a fast lift. The sedan was bearing down upon them! Tommy braced himself.

• • • •

THE sedan flashed beneath the blunt nose of the Darney. The lashing prop missed the top of the car. There was a crash and a rending sound. The Darney swayed but kept on, straight down the course. Bat had almost lifted her over the sedan.

The Darney gained altitude. Tommy could see attendants rushing out from the field hangar. The sedan had stopped and men were getting out of it. Its top was torn badly and strips of black cloth flapped in the wind. Bat put his mouth close to Tommy's ear and shouted:

"We are headed for Tolec! I am beginning to believe Uncle Henry was not kidding us a bit."

"I'll have a look at our underrigging!" Tommy shouted back. He heaved himself up in the seat and leaned over the side. What he saw made him jerk back quickly. Bat looked at him questioningly.

• • • •

"HOW much?" he shouted.

"We are minus a landing gear!" Tommy answered and settled back. Both had chutes and could bail out at Tolec. He put his lips near Bat's ear. "Looks like the folks down at Tolec will get to see a double chute jump"

Bat glared at him and screamed back. "I'm setting the Old Darney down on her slick side. You just watch me!"

"I'll be watching—from my trusty chute!" Tommy howled back.

Bat settled himself and leveled the plane. He headed her straight for the blue line of mountains that marked the Continental Divide. Five hours away and over those cold barriers lay Tolec, and he was not going to worry for 4 hours and 30 minutes. That was Bat.

Rutherford G. Montgomery.

Introducing—Mr. Montgomery.

THE author of this thrilling serial is Rutherford G. Montgomery. He wrote the book "Carcajou," which was a Junior Guild selection. We can best introduce him to Parade readers in his own words:

"I was born in North Dakota 40 years ago, brought up on a Montana ranch in the Rocky Mountains, and served in the air service during the World War.

"I have camped and hiked and ridden over most of the western and northern canyon and mesa country. It is my home and I feel out of place and uneasy, like a big cat, in a city or on a flat endless prairie. My interest in wild life began as a small boy gifted with a great curiosity and an intense desire to know about the brothers in fur and feathers who lived near me.

"My writing began as a hobby in 1930 and got out of hand a few years later, causing me to write for magazines and to make several books.

"My regular everyday job is that of judge at Gunnison in Gunnison County, Colo."

LETTERS

From Angels Camp.

Parade: I am 14 and enjoy reading Parade, especially some of the adventures of boys and girls. I agree with Readeress Anglina Armentano, that we should have a column for cowboy songs. I would like to exchange postcards with other Paraders and hear from some one collecting stamps.

MARGARET MILLS.
Angels Camp, Calif.

Parade is thrilled to hear from a Parader at Angels Camp. The place is known as the "Home of the Jumping Frog," made famous by Mark Twain's story, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County." There every year is held the Jumping Frog Jubilee, with a real frog-jumping contest. Frogs come from as far away as Oklahoma. Angels Camp is one of the towns made famous in the days of the '49 gold rush. It is located in the heart of the gold mining section of the State. —Ed.

Over-Seas Challenge.

Parade: Perhaps among your thousands of readers there are some chess players who would like to enter a correspondence chess match with our boys. Whilst our elders are engaged in similar matches, why should not our juniors have a little private scuffle? Don't forget—our oldest player is only 12 years. And we are none of us infant prodigies—just merely healthy, well-trained youngsters who glory in a fight. Perhaps you could put us in touch with some American boys of our own age and standing who would like to match their brains against ours in the only game which can be played with an ocean between players. I would hold myself responsible for organizing such a match if you would supply me with the names and addresses of any of your Readers who are attracted to the idea. About seven players to a side would do to start with. Such an event would do much to promote a friendly feeling between the boys of our two great nations, for chess is the most international game in the world.

EDGAR PENNELL.
Salisbury Junior Boys' School,
Netherfield road,
Liverpool, England.

Teacher Pennell holds regular 20-minute chess classes at Salisbury. The story appeared in last week's Parade. Chess-playing Readers (and why not Readeresses, too?) who are interested may write Mr. Pennell direct. Postage to England is 5 cents.—Ed.

Hobbies, Continued.

Parade: I am going to try to take the lead in Parade's Hobby Champ quest. My hobbies are collecting stamps, shells, postcards, postmarks, match box tops, milk bottle caps, pressed flowers, leaves, wood samples, china animals, stones, curios, foreign coins, travel leaflets and autographs. My others are Scout work, swimming, horseback riding and letter writing. I am 14 and would like to trade postcards with anyone. BARBARA BRIGGS.
326 Braddock road,
Alexandria, Va.

Reader George Vinokouroff, of Forest Glen, Md., like Readeress Briggs, claims 19 hobbies. Among his distinctive ones are collecting paper money, odd facts and various sorts of labels. Readeress Elizabeth Boyce, of Warrenton, N. C., with 11, includes pea shells and small bottles (she would like to exchange postcards with Paraders) and Readeress Joyce Elaine Reader, of 209 Preston street, Hartford, Conn., with five, specializes in pictures of the Dionne quintuplets. —Ed.

Complimentary.

Parade: I enjoy Parade a lot. I like the short stories better than the serials. I also like the Fun Corner and Now I Know and find the Dog Column useful in the care of my dogs. PEGGY LEBAIR.
23 South Dean avenue,
Trenton, N. J.

Only Parade.

Parade: I read Parade regularly and it is the only paper I read thoroughly. I enjoy the serial story, Grab Bag, Prof. Phiddlefuddle and Now I Know most of all. PEGGY BAIR.
Pennsylvania avenue, Route 5,
Hagerstown, Md.

These Cowboys Again.

Parade: I like Parade because of its information, fun and variety. But I have not yet seen any cowboy songs. LYSBETH EASON.

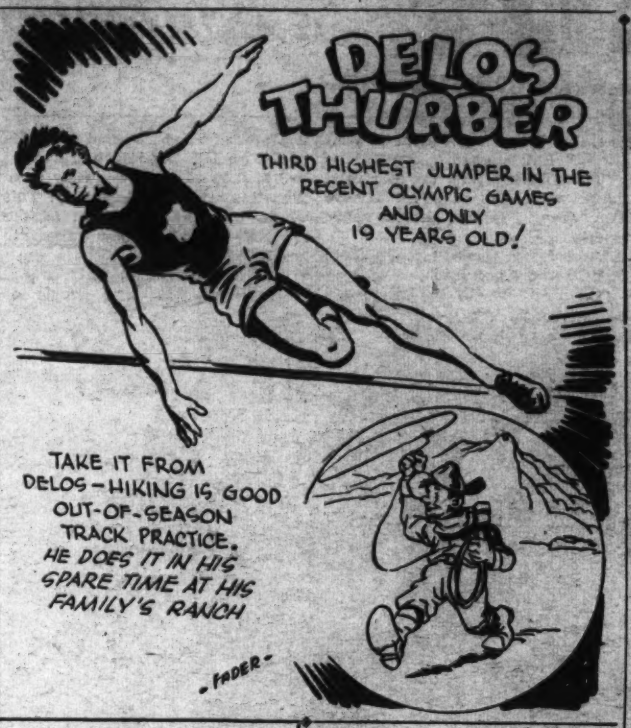
Hitches His Wagon to a Star



Third High In Olympics Aims Higher

Delos Thurber Sets High School and College Records.

It takes a lot to satisfy Delos Thurber.

In his specialty, the high jump, he tied the all-time interscholastic record while in high school, set a new mark for the University of Southern California, where he is a premedical student, and placed third in the recent Olympic games. Now he is in training, to seek more laurels.

"Roll Style" Now.

Delos has just passed his nineteenth birthday. He began jumping eight years ago in junior high, employing the old "scissors" style. "At Glendale (Calif.) High, I learned a "roll" and with it reached 6 feet, 6 inches," he says.

"I became interested in jumping because of the great enthusiasm for it here on the Pacific Coast. I have tried other sports, but jumping always seemed more natural.

Ties Albritton.

"My U. S. C. record, of 6 feet, 7½ inches, was made in a dual meet with Ohio State University. I tied with David Albritton, who finished second in the Olympics.

"I think the Olympics are a goal every young athlete should set for himself," Delos continues, "I am going to try to be in condition for the 1940 games."

Most of Delos' spare time is spent on his family's ranch at the foot of Palomar Mountain. "I hike a great deal there," he says. "Hiking is very good out of season track practice."

Not Too Young

To Beat Golf Veteran in City Tournament.

Jeanette Cooper—On the Green, Putts Like This to Win.

Youngest city golf champion Decatur, Ill., has ever had is Jeannette Cooper, 16.

In the women's amateur tournament Jeannette gained this distinction by defeating the golfer who had won the meet in four of the previous five years. Last year, her first in city meets, Jeannette was eliminated by the same player in the semifinals.

"I wasn't allowed to compete before because I was too young," writes Jeannette. "But I have been playing for seven years, hold two club records and am women's champion of the South Side Country Club, my home course. I practice every day."

Most-Traveled House.

Colleen Moore's fabulous $435,000 doll house is probably the most traveled house in existence. In the course of its exhibition tour it has already covered 50,000 miles. It has visited 27 cities and been viewed by more than 2,225,000 persons.

Especially White Ones.

"The professor asked me where the elephant is found! Imagine!" sniffed Stew Pidd, the office cut-up. "Why everybody knows the elephant is so big it never gets lost!"

Tank Star Tops Junior Racers

Start early and get to the top fast.

That seems to be the motto of Elizabeth Ryan, speedy free-style swimmer of Pomona, N. Y.

This year she won the national junior 440-yard title and a berth on the Olympic Team. And she is only 13!

In Berlin, Elizabeth swam with America's 400-meter relay team, which gained third place. Now back home she tells Parade what most impressed her:

"The Germans' determination to win was far greater than ours. I'll never forget the reception we received on our arrival, either. Another thing is the standard of living in Europe. It's much lower than over here."

Fastest Under 14.

"Elizabeth has been swimming for about six years, but entered competition only after joining the Women's Swimming Association of New York," writes her father, Dr. W. J. Ryan.

"As we live in the country, Elizabeth has little chance for practice. She practices one evening a week in winter at the association. In summer, when the Pomona pools are open, she gets more."

Elizabeth's time of 1 minute, 5 seconds in the 100 yards, also made during the past year, is recognized as the fastest by a girl under 14.

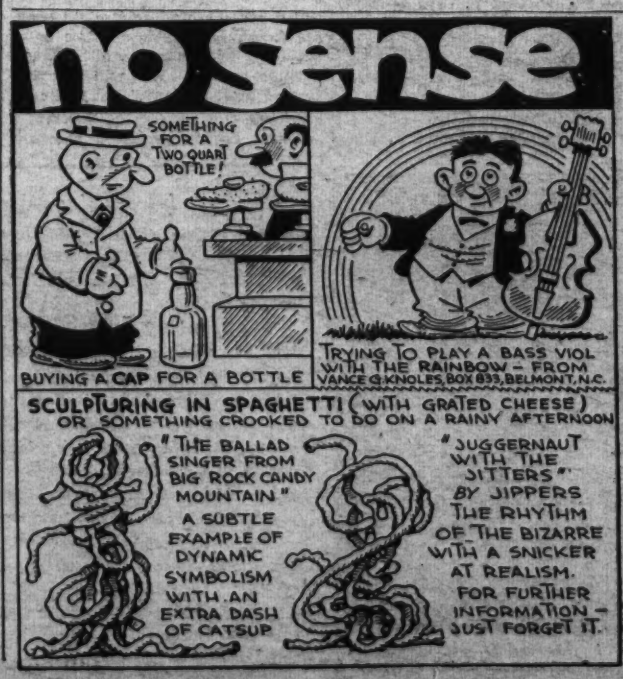
Good Sport.

Medal Winner Gives List of 'Don'ts' to Do.

Are you a good sportsman? Do you argue, talk back, disobey the rules? Alfonse Darienzo puts a "don't" before all those things and that's his code of sportsmanship.

Al should know. He plays softball, stickball, boxes and swims. He practices what he preaches in each, and for that has been awarded a sportsmanship medal by the Children's Aid Society of New York.

Writing from 190 Bleecker street, New York, 12-year-old Al confesses to other interests besides sports. "My best hobby is drawing," he says.



Fun Corner

Was Teacher 'Put Out?'

Many times teacher had cautioned the class to think before speaking. "Count 50 if you're going to say something important, and 100 if it's very important," she said.

One day she stood reading with her back to the fire when she noticed many lips moving rapidly.

"Ninety-eight, 99, 100!" shouted the whole class together. "Your dress's on fire, teacher!"

No Sale.

"I say," the smart lad hailed the druggist, "will you give me something for my head?"

"I wouldn't take it as a gift!" sneered the druggist, walking away.

Superstitious Steve Says—

"To sweep out the door after supper is bad luck — but to step out before supper is worse!"

Insurance.

Tommy and Sally had been warned by the movie usher that unless they kept 3-year-old brother Jackie quiet they'd have to take back their money and leave. About halfway through the picture, with Jackie quiet as a mouse, Tommy leaned to Sally: "Like it?" he asked.

"No," whispered Sally. "S'lousy!"

"Check," said Tommy. "Pinch Jackie."

Two-Man Job.

"Look at 'im, he's thin as a ramrod!" the sergeant spoke disrespectfully of the young recruit. "He don't look husky enough to jerk sodas in the post exchange!"

"Well," consoled the lieutenant, "put him at some light work—like cleaning rifles."

The sergeant wasn't through. "If I do," he asked scornfully, "who's gonna pull him through?"

Doings in Dooville.

"Ha, Ha!" laughs the city feller ter Sam Perkins. "You've got your right shoe on your left foot."

"Dew tell!" orates Sam, right smart put out. "An' me thinkin' I was club-footed fer nigh onter 20 years!"

Important Knowledge.

Preacher—So you're going to Sunday school today, Oscar! You like it, don't you?

Oscar—Yes, sir.

Preacher—And what do you hope to learn today?

Oscar—The date of the wiener roast.

Undone!

"Tee hee," chuckled Ida Knowe, our bright (?) little file clerk. "The boss told me I certainly do rare work!"

We didn't tell Ida that one definition of "rare" is "not well done."

Our Voting Neighbors

A Washington Post photographer rushes over the adjacent States where enfranchised citizens are preparing to cast their ballots in the forthcoming election.

HARPERS FERRY, W. VA.—During an "over the fence" chat on politics, Richard Sherman, truck farmer, said, "I voted for Roosevelt last time and I'll vote for him again. I find a ready market for my crops now."

WHEATON, MD.—Francis Hardy, surveyor, "I feel that there should be more economy in the Government, so I am voting for Landon."

LEESBURG, VA.—H. S. Cooksey (left) bricklayer, "I voted the Democratic ticket last election but I am undecided now." H. S. Fry (right), contractor, "I am voting for Landon. I am afraid of the present Administration policies."

MECHANICSTOWN, W. VA.—Mrs. Emmy Vines, "I am 82 years old and I've always voted the Democratic ticket. Look what Roosevelt has done for the poor."

STERLING, VA.—M. M. Martin (left), farmer, "I've made up my mind for Roosevelt. Things are better than they were four years ago and I can't see any reason to change now."

WAYNESBORO, PA.—Walter H. Miller, storekeeper, "Landon for me. When Roosevelt left New York he left them a hundred million debt. I could not support an Administration that would destroy crops."

HYATTSVILLE, MD.—Dr. Thomas Latimer, physician, "I am voting for Landon, because by example he has demonstrated efficiency in his private work; has carried it on in his public work. He has performed four-square with promises."

DRANESVILLE, VA.—J. W. Heaphy (left), farmer, "Roosevelt is the man we must have." W. O. Harrison (right), merchant-farmer, "Roosevelt for me. I appreciate the good he has done for the small businessmen."

MARTINSBURG, W. VA.—Group of businessmen. From left, Carroll S. Miller, attorney, "I am undecided." John M. Wilson, apple dealer, "Why change Administrations? We are getting better prices for our products." A. M. Barnes, egg distributing agent, "I am going to vote for Landon. I am afraid of the continuation of some of Roosevelt's policies."

Japan Rushes Aviation Training

NEAR TOKYO. Boy pilots in the "Junior Division" of the air force, carrying a glider during training at one of the new aviation schools. Japanese girls as well as boys are being trained to pilot planes.

WOMEN FLIERS of Nippon. At a Flying Scout school, where girls as well as boys are given technical training and preliminary flying instruction. Realization that Japan is only a few hours away by air from possible enemy airports makes training of future pilots an increasingly important phase of the national defense.

ASSEMBLY. Girls are taught how to mount the wings of the gliders after being taught the theory of motorless flight. Most of the women being trained to fly are assigned to Japan's aviation reserves.

GIRL PILOT at one of the new aviation schools prepares to take off in a glider. Girls who prove competent handling gliders are sent to military aviation schools.

STREAMLINE MOTORCYCLIST. Art Senior, a race rider at Sydney, Australia, was able to attain a speed of 123 m. p. h. after building this streamlined effect for his motorcycle and himself.

Soothe the Irritation...
Quick relief from the maddening itch of eczema, psoriasis, and irritation about the rectum or personal parts is obtained by applying Resinol Ointment. It lessens the desire to scratch, eases the irritation and makes you more comfortable. The skin heals sooner, too, with the help of Resinol.
Its oily base is ideal for penetrating the outer layers of the skin and securing deeper action. Bathing the affected parts first with Resinol Soap hastens the effectiveness of Resinol Ointment.
Buy Resinol Ointment and Soap at any drug store. For free sample, write to Resinol, Dept. RM-6, Baltimore, Md.

Cabin Birthplace of Gen. Grant Now a Memorial

TWO-ROOM cabin at Point Pleasant, Ohio, in which Gen. U. S. Grant, eighteenth President of the United States, was born. It is shown on its original site, where it has been restored after an absence of 50 years. For a decade it was a traveling exhibit on a river showboat.

SWEEPING across green hill and fertile plain, a new kind of car is rolling up new records. The LINCOLN-ZEPHYR V-12, Lincoln-built, astonishes even old hands at the wheel with its stimulating performance . . . its satisfying comfort . . . its economy on roads good and bad!

When, before, has a V-type 12-cylinder engine (in itself a thing unusual in the medium-price field) given 14 to 18 miles to the gallon!

And when, before, has there been a car of this design to complement the engine's efficiency! Here is a one-piece framework of steel girders—with steel paneling on top, sides, bottom. It is light, it is strong, it is the only design of its kind. This svelte, streamlined structure, this great 110-horsepower engine, combine to challenge all present ideas of performance!

Drive the LINCOLN-ZEPHYR today, if you would know, again, the real joy of motoring. Something about this car stirs you, lifts you, calls you to far places. Its youthful ideas, youthful ways unsettle you for other transportation. Discover, soon, as roads pass swiftly under . . . as hills iron out and bumps melt down . . . why thousands of owners say the new day of travel is at hand!

Prices are lower this year! The Lincoln Motor Company, builders of Lincoln and Lincoln-Zephyr motor cars.

A PRETTY MESS THIS IS. EVERYONE BLAMING EVERYBODY ELSE, AND ALL OF YOU LOOKING GUILTY.

YOU FELLOWS NEEDN'T DENY YOU HIRED WILLY TO SET FIRE TO APPLE MARY'S STORE BECAUSE SOMEONE HEARD YOU PLANNING THE WHOLE THING.

BUT WILLY MADE A MISTAKE AND BURNED THIS PLACE INSTEAD OF MARY'S. NOW YOU'LL SAVE YOURSELVES SOME TROUBLE BY COMING CLEAN.

OKAY, MIGHT AS WELL. THOSE TWO MEN OFFERED US FIFTY DOLLARS FOR THE JOB, AND WE GOT WILLY TO DO IT, SO WE WOULDNT GET CAUGHT.

WHY DID THEY WANT MARY'S STORE BURNED?

AW, THEY THOUGHT SHE'D BE WILLING TO SELL THE SECRET OF THE "MAGIC APPLES" REAL CHEAP, THEN.

WE TRIED TO MESS THINGS UP FOR HER ONCE BEFORE, BUT SHE DIDN'T PAY MUCH 'TENTION TO IT. SO THIS TIME WE WERE GONNA DO THE JOB RIGHT—

THEN WILLY GETS MIXED UP, AND SETS FIRE TO THE WRONG STORE, SO THESE MEN COME BACK AND FIND THEIR OWN STORE BURNED UP, 'STEAD OF MARY'S.

LAUGH, WILL YOU, YOU LITTLE—

SHUT UP—BEFORE YOU SAY SOMETHING YOU'LL REGRET.

IT'S A-A RIDICULOUS LIE.

MAYBE—BUT THERE ARE STILL A LOT OF THINGS YOU'LL HAVE TO EXPLAIN. I'M TAKING YOU ALL DOWN TO THE STATION.

THIS IS AN OUTRAGE. YOU'LL REGRET IT, TOO.

AW, STOP SQUAWKING. WE'LL TELL 'IM ENOUGH TO PUT YOU AWAY FOR A LONG TIME.

WELL, COME ON, WE HAVEN'T GOT ALL DAY.

I'M NOT GOING A STEP, AND THAT'S FINAL.

ME EITHER.

SA-AY, I'M GETTIN' HUNGRY. WHEN DO WE EAT?

YOU DON'T EAT TILL YOU GET TO THE STATION, AND THESE FELLOWS WON'T GO.

HEY, LEGGO, STOP THAT! WE'LL HAVE THE LAW ON YOU.

THE LAW'S ALREADY WITH HIM, ONE HUNDRED PERCENT. GO TO IT, WILLY.

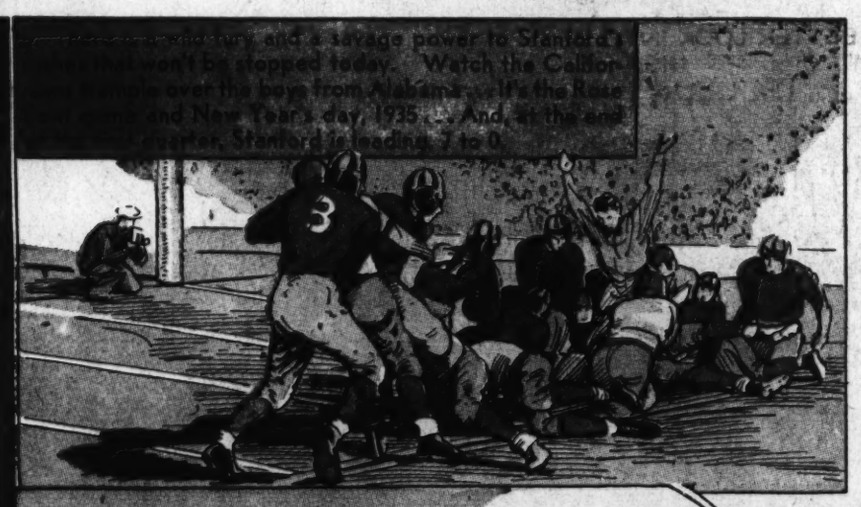
NED BRANT By BOB ZUPPKE

DRAWN BY B. W. DEPEW

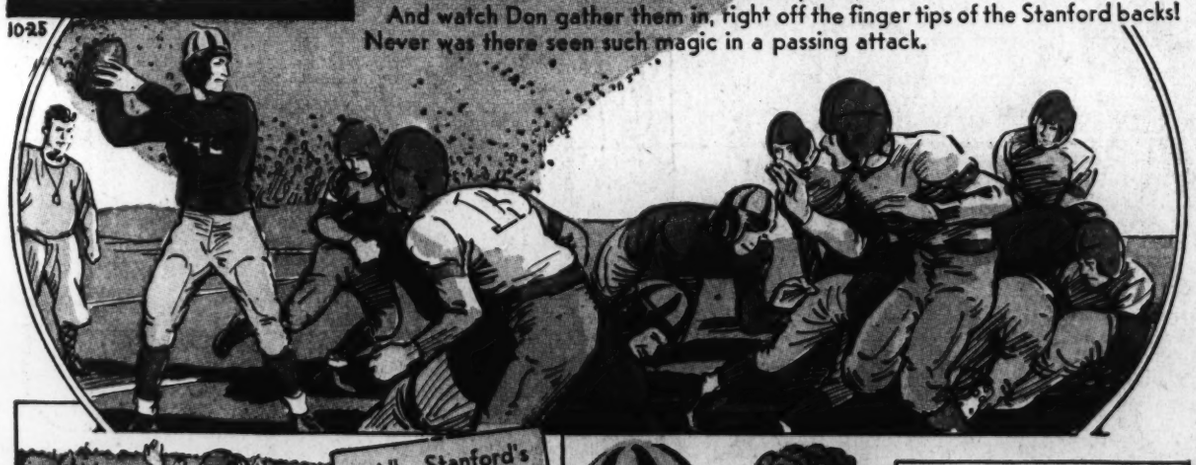
THEY'RE STILL TALKING

About the Rose Bowl's Greatest Passing Exhibition



"If you think that first quarter was something, watch this!—Watch Dixie Howell and Don Hutson!—Watch Dixie rifle those passes . . .

And watch Don gather them in, right off the finger tips of the Stanford backs! Never was there seen such magic in a passing attack.



All Stanford's fury and power cannot compete with such perfection—as Alabama garners 22 points in that fateful second quarter. Combined with the passes are line thrusts, Howell making 67 yards on one.

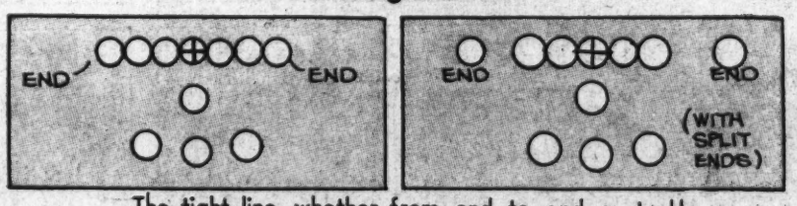
Left is Millard (Dixie) Howell whose bullet-like passes vanquished Stanford. Howell is now a professional baseball player.

And (right) Don Hutson, who is now picking passes out of the air for the Green Bay Packers professional football team.

Football ..... By NED BRANT

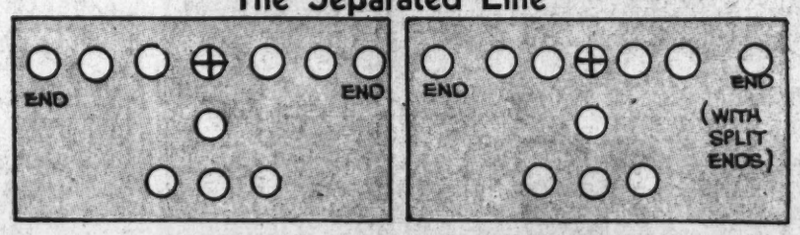
Offensive Formations

The Tight Line



The tight line, whether from end to end or tackle to tackle, means more power forward. The line charges as a unit.

The Separated Line



A separated line increases the territory which each defensive lineman must cover, since it spreads the defensive line from end to end

Since so-called "split" ends force defensive tackles and ends to spread wider, they weaken the defensive line for power plays.
